Gospel Melodies

Revised and Enlarged

Designed for the Use of All Christians in Public and Private Devotions

In offering this, the REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION OF GOSPEL MELODIES, to the public, we confidently believe that the many excellent features of the work will recommend it to all who love good, pure words, and music adapted to their expression.

The typography is large and clear, with words printed between the music staves, so that both words and music may be seen at the same time.

An important feature of the book is the brief, practical treatise on the subject of learning to sing by note, as found in the thirteen pages of rudiments, prepared by a teacher of experience.

The "Supplement" contains a large number of the very best old standard songs, without which any book designed for use in public worship must seem incomplete.

The authors have earnestly endeavored to make this book worthy the patronage of the public.

WHAT THEY SAY ABOUT THE REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION OF GOSPEL MELODIES.

We like the book very much.—DR. J. R. WHITE.

Dear Sir and Bro.—I received "G. M." by this afternoon's mail. It's in good condition, and my sister is greatly pleased with the same—much more than with any other book we ever had.—ED. CABS.

Dear Sir:—Salem church purchased a supply of "Gospel Melodies" from your agent. All are highly pleased with the new books.—MISS BELLE CLISER.

I think your song books are the best I ever used.—E. Y. GAY.

I have examined your new song book, "Gospel Melodies Revised," and can heartily say it is the best book for revivals, Lord's day school worship and family circle, I have ever seen. The large, clear print, with the words between the staves, make it very convenient. The pure words and music adapted to their expression are indeed cheering and inspiring to all lovers of music. I cheerfully recommend to all who want a book next to the Bible, "Gospel Melodies."—D. M. CLISER.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The outcome of the New York State Republican Convention at Saratoga was the nomination of Theodore Roosevelt for Governor by an overwhelming majority. It was purely a triumph of personal popularity. He was the candidate of the machine, not because the machine thought it could manage him, but because it knew it could not successfully oppose his candidacy. It did not propose to confer success upon him, but to share in his success. The same was true of the Independent Convention which, meeting before the Republican Convention, tendered to Col. Roosevelt its nomination. This honor, however, he declined because he has always been a staunch Republican and, expecting the nomination by the party, did not care to put it to the humiliating necessity of adopting a candidate who had already received a nomination. It might have been different if the Republican Convention had been held first. As it is, doubtless Col. Roosevelt will receive a large number of Independent votes, for it is known that whoever gives him the nomination he still possesses many of the characteristics of an Independent. The question as to whether Col. Roosevelt is a resident of New York or of Washington is exciting much debate, and there may be a legal battle to determine his eligibility. The platform adopted by the Republican Convention deals almost exclusively with national issues, and is conspicuously silent in reference to questions of policy and administration within the state.

The New York Democratic Convention, on the contrary, meeting at Syracuse, adopted a platform dealing almost wholly with issues within the state and ignoring questions of national policy, except that it prejudges the question which the war inquiry board is investigating and protests against the treatment of the soldiers in the late war. The most striking of its omissions is its failure to say a word in regard to the currency. A resolution approving the Chicago currency doctrine was instantly squelched, and the attention of the convention was at once shifted back to state issues, one of which was the charge of reckless expenditure of public money by the present Republican state administration. The Democratic gubernatorial nomination on this platform was given to Augustus Van Wyck, brother of the mayor of New York City. Mr. Van Wyck is a prominent Brooklyn politician, and was the candidate of the Tammany section of the party. His nomination is counted as a victory of Croker over Hill. But there is a considerable section of the party which were dissatisfied with the above-mentioned platform. Consequently they seceded, formulated a platform of which the chief plank is a declaration in favor of the free coinage of silver, and named as their candidate for Governor young Henry George, whose father's death last year brought him into sudden prominence as a candidate for Mayor of Greater New York.

On Thursday of last week a general plebiscite was held in the Dominion of Canada to obtain the answer of the people to this question: "Are you in favor of the passing of an act prohibiting the importation, manufacture or sale of spirits, wine, ale, beer and cider and all other alcoholic liquors for use as beverages?" Such an act had not been passed, nor was one pending, and this vote of the people had no immediate legislative power. The purpose was merely to get an official statement of public opinion on the subject of prohibition as a guide for future action by the administration and the Dominion Parliament. The result of the vote was a small majority, about 18,000 out of 800,000, in favor of prohibition. This result is not satisfactory to the temperance people, who had hoped for a much larger majority, and it is generally believed that the administration will not feel justified in proposing and pushing a prohibition measure on the basis of this slight majority. The various provincial plebiscites on this question which have been held during the last four years have resulted in much larger votes in favor of prohibition. The heavy falling off in Ontario is partly accounted for by the fact that women voted in the previous case, but not in this. The strongest temperance sentiment seems to be in the maritime provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Islands, but their combined majority in favor of prohibition was only equal to the adverse majority in the province of Quebec where, under the influence of the Roman Catholic clergy, and owing also to the natural predilections of the French Canadian character, the opposition was strongest. Altogether, the outcome was decidedly indecisive, and the agitation will probably subside with no definite results for the present.

The American Peace Commissioners have arrived at Paris, and the work of turning the temporary prntocol into a permanent treaty of peace has been begun. The French Minister of Foreign Affairs has played the part of host in behalf of his government and nation, and has done it with a degree of tact and courtesy which have won universal commendation. The American and Spanish commissioners were just brought together in a friendly and social way at a noon breakfast, given by the French Minister, and an opportunity was thereby afforded for the representatives of the two countries to become personally acquainted. Having brought the two commissions together in this informal fashion, and having offered to them the hospitalities of the Salon for the sessions of the conference, it is announced that the French Government will "efface itself." So far as one can see, a strictly neutral and impartial attitude is being preserved by the French Government.

The War Inquiry Board is getting down to its work. It has addressed comprehensive lists of questions to Secretary Alger, the adjutant general, the quartermaster general, the surgeon general and the commissary general. Some comment was excited by the fact that General Miles was not at first asked to testify, but this omission has been supplied, and he will furnish his testimony to the board, although he says he would rather give it to Congress, and thinks that congressional investigation would be more satisfactory. There is a general belief that General Miles has a knife up his sleeve for the Secretary of War, and that his evidence may be of a sensational sort. It is certain that there is a difference of opinion as to the proper relations between the commanding general and the executive head of the department, and the limits of the authority of each. The sessions of the War Inquiry Board are secret, and all reports of their transactions, except as officially announced, must therefore be accepted with due allowance.

Rumors have been current for more than a week to the effect that the Emperor of China has met his death, either by assassination or suicide. While there is still no news more definite than "it is reported" and "it is believed," there is a growing tendency to place confidence in the report of the Emperor's death. At any rate, the Dowager-Empress, aunt of the Emperor Hwangti, is now in charge of affairs. The dismissal of Li Hung Chang, which was interpreted as a triumph of British influence, has been more than counterbalanced by the Dowager-Empress' accession to power, if not actually to the throne, and the dismissal of Chang Yen Hoon, who is a partisan of the British, as Li Hung Chang and the Empress are more favorable to Russia. The British demand for the dismissal of Li Hung Chang was honored, but the cause of the demand remains. In the matter of railroad concessions in the northern provinces, the advantage rests entirely with Russia. Taking the concession to a Belgian syndicate, which is really operating for the benefit of Russia, for a road south from Tien Tsin to Hankow, and the proposed French line from the latter point to the French colony at Tonquin, in connection with the Russian railway system in the north, it is very evident that Great Britain's sphere of influence is likely to be seriously interfered with, and her commercial interests jeopardized.

The French Cabinet has definitely and formally decided that a revision of the Dreyfus case must be undertaken. This decision has seemed inevitable ever since the discovery was made that his former conviction was based on forged documents, but it was not reached without a severe struggle and threats of resignation from one or two members of the Cabinet. Here, then, endeth the first part of this long struggle. Dreyfus may be innocent or guilty. The fight up to this point has been to prove that his conviction was illegal, and that therefore a new trial should be granted. The new trial will be granted, but the Minister of Justice has announced that legal proceedings for libel will be taken against any one who ventures to attack the army in the course of the trial. To a civilian it appears that something must be wrong with an army whose honor has to be so carefully protected by threats of legal proceedings.

OUR FORTHCOMING NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

As this is a case of one in three and three in one, we might with propriety use the word "Convention," in the singular number. These three societies have one work—the spreading of the gospel and the building of the kingdom of God on earth. They have practically one constituency—the churches of the Reformation which these societies represent. It would be better, in our judgment, because simpler, if there were but one convention in form, having in charge these three distinct branches of work. This is particularly true of the Home and Foreign Societies, as we have before pointed out. But this, by the way.

A very common question now among the brethren as they meet and greet each other is, What kind of a convention are we going to have at Chattanooga? The answer to this question is very largely yet to be furnished. So far as it is modified by location and the time of holding it, its character is determined, but these are only modifying, not determining factors in the convention. What the Chattanooga convention is to do and be is to be largely determined by the following facts:

1. The number of people having at heart our general interests, who shall determine, even at the cost of personal inconvenience and personal loss, to attend the convention, and give it the benefit of their presence and influence in every possible way. Scores, and perhaps hundreds of people who read this editorial, have not yet determined definitely whether they will go to Chattanooga or not. The kind of a convention we are to hold there, let it be distinctly understood, is going to be determined in a measure by the number of those who shall decide that it is their duty to go, both to impart and receive benefit and encouragement. There is a power in numbers which cannot well be dispensed with. We beg the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, who have it in their power to attend this convention, to do so, and we guarantee beforehand that if they do, and will make good use of the opportunities which it offers for new inspiration, for larger information and for a wider outlook upon the world's needs, they will never regret the decision they made. Of course, the main reasons for going to Chattanooga are those which we have mentioned—the benefit of our missionary work and other interests there represented and the spiritual benefit to those going—but there are patriotic reasons that might well induce American citizens to visit the historic scenes around Chattanooga. It is perhaps the opportunity of a lifetime to visit the place under conditions and surroundings that would make the visit a most profitable and memorable one. Decide now to go to Chattanooga.

2. Another important factor in making the convention a great and profitable one is the character of the reports and addresses that will be made before it by the men selected for that purpose. Nothing should be presented to that great assembly that has not passed through the crucible of the most severe and critical examination, and that has not been steeped and saturated in prayer. The degree of enthusiasm that shall be awakened, the high resolves that will be formed, the liberal plans to be devised, will depend much upon the keynotes sounded by these addresses. There should not be one single slovenly, ill-digested speech, long or short, made before that convention. It is a great responsibility to be laid upon any man to address such a gathering as is assembled in one of our National Conventions. There is reason to believe, from the ability of the men chosen to address the convention, that there will be many notable speeches, which it will be vastly worth while to hear, and which will exert a lasting influence upon those who do hear them. Reports of secretaries should be so clear-cut, incisive and definite in their aim and meaning as to point directly to the ends to be attained. They should lift the standard under which the forces are to rally. They may be relied upon to do their work well.

3. In conventions as well as in legislation, much of the work is done by committees. There is nothing more time-saving and discussion-avoiding than a well-digested report of a committee. Chairmen of committees are held responsible for the character of the committee reports, and they should see that the particular work committed to them is thoroughly considered, and presented before the convention in such form as to receive intelligent consideration. Many a precious hour has been wasted in our conventions over reports of committees which contained unfortunate expressions and doubtful recommendations. Let us have thorough work on the part of the committees, even if it involves, as it often does, missing something that we would like to hear.

4. It takes two elements to make a great convention—the human and the divine. Nothing but the power of God can lift a convention of men and women to the height of moral and spiritual greatness, but this divine power must act through human agencies. The treasure is in earthen vessels, but the earthen vessels must be placed at the Master's disposal. It is possible to have a respectable, orderly convention without much prayer, but if we are to have a great convention, marked by a high degree of spiritual fervor and consecration, there must be much prayer on the part of the churches and the individual members before the assembling of the convention. Let us go to Chattanooga on our knees, figuratively speaking. Let us realize that in this divine enterprise of evangelizing the world we are in copartnership with God, and that it is only as he works in us and through us that our labors are effective. If this conviction is deeply fixed in every heart, and we earnestly invoke the Spirit of God to be present in the convention, and to guide it in its deliberations and actions we shall doubtless have a great convention. It will be one that will send us home, as from some mount of transfiguration, where we have seen the glory of the Lord, and are strengthened thereby for the conflicts and labors of the years to come.

The Chattanooga Convention, then, is to be what under God we decide to make it. If it fail in any measure to accomplish its purpose, the responsibility is on us. If it succeed in its purpose, the praise and thanksgiving are due unto Him whose we are and whom we serve.

OUR NEW DAY.

Forefathers' Day by our Christian Endeavor Societies in behalf of Home Missions is a wise and happy thought. What a splendid "Trinity" of aim, agency and method, and what a prophecy of good!

It is of very great importance that our people, and for that matter that all of our people should be kept well acquainted with the origin and growth of this great religious movement in which we are engaged and that we should comprehend well its spirit and aim. To know well the fathers who projected this Reformation and the faithful band of immediate successors who pushed it to such rapid and marvelous success, to comprehend the nature and magnitude of the work which they planned; to walk with them in their brave struggles with popular error and religious bigotry; to breathe with them afresh the spirit of loving loyalty to Christ and his inspired works; to see with them through the misty mysticism of superstition and creed back to Jerusalem, and to build with them again the broken walls of Zion, is to comprehend better the mighty work God has committed to our hands, and to become equipped and inspired for its more speedy completion.

The study of our church literature, and especially the study of the lives of the prominent pioneers of this Reformation, should meet with the most hearty endorsement and encouragement from every pastor and teacher in every church of the Disciples. Avoiding the extreme of Romish tradition and saintship, we have gone rapidly toward the opposite extreme of an ignorant and ungrateful oblivion of the heroic deeds of the fathers of this restoration movement.

We need to revive our study of the pioneers and their splendid work for primitive Christianity. Forefathers' Day is an opportune time for this study. Observe the day in your C. E. Society.

Forefathers' Day should be a red-letter day in the history of the C. E. Societies among the Disciples of Christ. The spirit of missions, our instinctive devotion to noble ancestors and a patriotic consecration to the highest interests of our own country should combine to make it a great day. Let officers of the C. E. Societies confer with the officers of their local church in arranging for this day, and let all unite to make it a day abundant in blessings.

at once to lay plans, and if the day sted, October 23rd, should be too then observe the day at the earliest ble date after that. Let no C. E. ty fail to observe the day.

IF I WERE A MILLIONAIRE.

eral months ago an enterprising sh journal sent this question to a er of distinguished ministers and ry men in the United Kingdom. eminent men, upon the pleasant hesis of a cool million, were asked they would do with it. Many of answered, and the result was no an interesting symposium as to how men would make money fly if they ; but I did not see what any of them on the subject. The bare announce- of such a theme, however, set me to ing, and I commenced to wonder I would do if I were the happy or ppy possessor of a million. Doubt- I had been born with such an enor- gold spoon in my mouth I would been as effeminate, as proud and as ved as the rest of the idle rich. It e, also, judging from the conduct of preachers who have been the victims financial windfall, I would muster f out of service and live in glorious he rest of my days. As I am made same flesh and blood as the rest of man race, it is not at all improbable reat wealth would spoil me, as it has red many a better man than I am no to either king or country.

I am looking at the question from eal point of view—from the angle of of the categorical imperative. I what I ought to do if I had a million, y the grace of God would do, I verily e, with my present convictions—if I he money. Under any combination cumstances, being loose-handed and earted by nature, and knowing thing of the world's needs, I would a great deal of this money away. To would I give it, and for what se?

would help my friends, but I would nothing to indiscriminate charity. I give but little for the endowment of es or the building of churches. Not se I do not profoundly believe that are no better uses to which money e put, but because other millionaires ndow colleges and build universities they will do nothing else, and men of s will contribute to the erection of hes, while neither class is inclined to me vital things for the world's uplift- at sadly need the attention of men ans. I would look in these neglected mportant directions in the placing of money where it would do the most for the cause of truth and righteous-

If I gave to education it would be e endowment of scholarship. I would premium on intellectual honesty and f truth. Candor and courage, brains conscience, truth for the sake of truth, d stand prime in my scheme of things. apotheosis of sectarian whangdoodle partisan narrowness and selfishness d find no shekels in my treasury to it countenance. I would at least set ample of educating men and emanci- g scholarship from denominational mels and limitations, that investiga- might have no embargo put upon it by ignorance and the fear of a bread famine. Scholars should be free to speak truth and fearless in announcing their conclusions. It is hardly a satisfactory state of things when every ignoramus and bigot in the country is perfectly free to utter himself, and only the men of brains and culture are gaged into silence by sectarian clamor.

I would give money to emancipate a true ministry from the fear of a half converted pewdom. Like Diogenes, but not in the same manner, I would go in search of men. There are plenty of bipeds that wear clothes and live on cooked food, but men are exceptional in the family of the genus homo. We must seek for a man, and when we have found him we have found the pearl of greatest price. Hope of the world's redemption lies in the regenerate personality, as free from human prejudice and the fear of man as it is from sin and the service of the devil. I would seek men of capability and conscience, courage and deep conviction, consecration and common sense. I would lay no restrictions upon them, and fetter them with no creed, and give them no orders, except that they were to go forth into the harvest field of the world and preach the truth of Christ as God gave them to see the truth, without fear and without favor. They would need no other commission, for all men of sense see the truth substantially alike when they are freed from the fear of men who do not see the truth. I would endow such men with an ample support for life, and thus free from dependence on selfish churches and the unmanning fear of the "rainy day" of poverty and old age. It is more than questionable if any institution can be reformed by its paid officials. A selfish, ease-loving motive at the base of it makes all officialism conservative, timid and averse to change. Reformation must come from without, from the initiative of free men. He who contributes most to the independence of a sound spiritual ministry, faithful to the ethics and life of the gospel, will do most to bring in the time of the regeneration.

Before my money gave out—the million at the head of this paper is five million in American money—I would endow a great religious newspaper. I would call it THE CHRISTMAN, and the most Christly man I could find should be its editor. He would be free from sectarian bias and the whole denominational conception of Christianity. The Scribes and Pharisees would not send their contributions to this paper, nor would their names be found on its subscription list. Its policy would not be dictated by any partisan constituency. Its fundamental principles would anchor themselves in the teaching of Jesus. All questions would be discussed in the light of the mind of the Master. It would not be so much a religious paper in the character of the themes discussed, as a paper that handled all questions, social, industrial, political, ethical, philosophical and religious, from the standpoint of the kingdom of God, and as far as possible in the spirit of Christ. The editor would be absolutely free to advocate the truth; neither business interests nor the subscription list should have any more dominion over him. Playing to the galleries would not be one of his pastimes. The shrieking brotherhood of intolerants who shout, "Stop my paper!" if the poor editor dares in the most modest way to call in question an opinion of one of these infallible popes, having been relegated to the shades of innocuous desuetude, would trouble him no more forever. The CHRISTMAN would have no hobby to ride, no fad to air, no axe to grind, no selfish end to serve; its only apology for existence, its only claim for readers, would be the interests of the kingdom of God and its righteousness. Such an enterprise would be a great business success, but nobody would care a fig if the balance came out on the wrong side of the ledger, so the great ends of the paper were being accomplished. If anybody wishes to risk me with a million or two I stand ready to assume the responsibility as indicated in this paper. J. J. H.

THE NEVADA CONVENTION.

The annual meeting of the Missouri Christian Co-operation was held at Nevada, on Monday evening of last week, and closed its sessions on Thursday evening. In numbers it was not a representative Missouri convention. The excessive heat and the distance of Nevada from the bulk of our membership in the state were, we presume, the chief causes of the diminished attendance. Many of the strong churches of the state had no representatives in the convention. We can see no good reason or justification for this neglect. Our leading churches should certainly feel a sufficient interest in the evangelization of the state, and in the general welfare of our cause in the state, to send delegates to these annual meetings, no matter in what part of the state they may convene. Our co-operative work will never assume the dimensions that it should until this obligation is recognized by the congregations in the state.

In spite of the diminished numbers, however, the convention at Nevada was a very good one, and the reports of the work during the past year were very gratifying. We give a few figures from the report of the board:

The state board has had in its employ during the year past 28 men, who have organized 25 churches and 28 Bible-schools, and who report 1,262 additions; 723 of them by baptism. They assisted in raising pastors' salaries to the amount of $9,690,85; building and repairs, $15,601.94; other purposes, $9,627.27; making a total of $34,-831.17. This only represents eleven months' work. Adding the report of the Bible or Sunday-school work to the above, the total number of churches orgrnized is 42; Bible-schools, 81; baptisms, 978; total money raised, $45,626.26. Including with the above the district work, we have the number of churches organized, 62; Bible-schools, 104; baptisms, 1,771; other additions, 1,507; making the total number of additions 3,286; pastor's salaries, $19,485; church building, $32,830.94; other purposes, $13,990. Total amount of money raised in mission work in Missouri, $65,191.26. Under the head of

This is not a bad showing for a year's work in Missouri. It may not be entirely accurate in every detail, but it is approximately correct, no doubt. Church Extension is the weakest item in the list, but that is to be accounted for partly by the fact that the secretary had not received full reports at the time of the convention.* He has already received several hundred dollars since that report was made, but even then it will appear that the churches in Missouri have been remiss in their duty to this important feature of our work.

As to the proceedings of the convention, we have not space to give a detailed account. We were not present at the opening of the convention, and did not hear the opening discourse by Bro. Vernon, of Independence, which we heard spoken of as an eloquent religious and patriotic address on expansion. We were favored with the presence of Bros. B. L. Smith and A. McLean, of the Home and Foreign Societies, who each gave a stirring address on the demands of their respective fields. It was gratifying to notice, however, that neither one was blind to the importance or needs of the field which the other represented, but they recognized their vital connection and essential oneness. We are certainly fortunate in the quaternion of secretaries, urging the claims of our general missionary work at home and abroad.

The lectures of Prof. Willett, of the University of Chicago and Dean of the Disciples' Divinity House, were a most interesting feature of the convention. He gave four lectures on the life and labors of Paul, which were highly appreciated by the large audiences which heard them. Bro. Willett is to sail with his family, early in October, for Europe, where he is to spend several months in study.

The address of Hon. Champ Clark, of Bowling Green, Mo., on Tuesday night of the convention, was worthy of the eloquent Congressman, and of the large audience which greeted him. He dealt with the Bible chiefly as a literary mine, and of its value in molding one's literary style, widening the intellectual horizon, and fitting one for his duties in the present life. He quoted the testimonies of great writers, poets and statesmen as to their indebtedness to the Bible, and in conclusion paid his respects, in his characteristic way, to the passing of Mr. Ingersoll as a lecturer. Mr. Clark received a most hearty welcome from the convention, as well as a most hearty response to his eloquent lecture. We trust it will not be the last time we shall hear his voice lifted in defense of the Bible in our missionary conventions.

*We have since learned that the receipts fo Church Extension from the state of Missouri, from Oct. 1, '97 to Sept. 30, '98, are $1,809.71.

CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.

The secretary of the C. W. B. M. will perhaps make a fuller report of the convention of the ladies. Their work has prospered during the year past, and the report of the secretary, Mrs. Virginia Hedges, was full of encouraging results. Mrs. Hedges was anxious to retire from the work, after four years of arduous and successful service, but her sisters rightly decided that they could not dispense with her yet, but they gave her an organizer to assist her in the work. Mrs. Williams, of Cameron, who is the president, gave a most admirable opening address, and presided throughout with queenly grace and dignity. She was also retained as the president, as was also that faithful and efficient servant of the C. W. B. M. in Missouri, Sister Johnson, of Chillicothe, as treasurer. The addresses before this convention by Mrs. Lowe and Mrs. Boen, of Kansas City, Mrs. Mary Wisdom Grant and Mrs. Bantz, of St. Louis, which we were privileged to hear, were such as to do credit to Christian womanhood, and compared favorably with anything in the convention of their brethren.

The addresses of Miss Ada Boyd, returned missionary, and of Mrs. Helen Moses, on Wednesday night, were listened to with deep interest.

The memorial hour was a joint session between the two conventions, in which beautiful tributes to the dead were read by Mrs. Hedges and Mrs. Bantz for the sisters, and Bro. J. A. Berry for the brethren. These werd followed by a very beautiful and tender memorial address by F. V. Loos, of Liberty.

Mrs. H. M. Meier, of St. Louis, president of the Christian Orphans' Home, was allowed 15 minutes to present the claims of this benevolent work, and she did it most effectively. A resolution was unanimously passed recommending the national convention to give this national benevolence a hearing.

Some of the more important actions of the convention were the appointment of a committee to arrange for an educational conference to consider our educational needs in the state, which is to convene at Mexico in the late autumn or early winter. It was felt that there was no time in the convention for the proper consideration of these important questions. We shall have more to say of this later on.

The time of holding the convention was changed back to the first week in October. The state board was instructed to consider the propriety of having our conventions convene on Thursday evening, and hold over the following Lord's day instead of meeting on Monday evening, as heretofore. This, it is believed, is the only remedy for the lack of time now so sorely felt. We have been in favor of this change for years, and we hope that the state board will give us an opportunity to test it.

Bro. Kokendoffer, in the absence of the president-elect, W. M. Roe, presided over the convention, to the satisfaction of all.

THE NEVADA CHURCH.

We cannot close this report of the convention without expressing our gratification at the unanimity and zeal manifested by the church at Nevada, whose guests we were. Their entertainment was all that could be desired. The editor, together with T. P. Haley, was entertained at the home of the Baptist minister, Bro. A. E. Rogers, and we could desire no better illustration genuine Christian hospitality than we ceived at their hands. Our associati with Bro. Rogers and his good wife w very delightful. All the delegates seen to be equally well pleased with their ent tainment. It was especially gratifying hear from all sides that the union effec between the two congregations has pro a genuine one, and that the church is be knit together in the bonds of mutual lo and under the strong leadership of Bro. C. McKeever is now ready for a steady a vance along all the lines of Christian wo The brethren throughout the state will rejoiced to hear this, and we take gr pleasure in mentioning the fact.

The next convention goes to Jeffer City, Mo., which being in the central p of the state will attract, no doubt, a la convention. J. P. Pinkerton, the pres pastor of the church there, in an enth astic speech of invitation, assured brethren that not only the homes of city were at their disposal, but that State House and even the penitenti would be open to them. We will expe large convention at the Missouri capi and our W. H. McClain, of St. Louis, preside over the convention.

Hour of Prayer.

THE PATH OF THE JUST.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Oct. 12th.)

But the path of the righteous is as the ligh dawn,
That shineth more and more unto the per day.

—Prov. 4:1

We have adopted the marginal read of the Revised Version in the above t substituting "the light of dawn" for " shining light," which is in the body of text. We do this because the passag more intelligible by this rendering, and figure employed is more beautiful and pressive.

There is a time in our religious exp ence when we see truth and duty in a c fused sort of light in which there rem an element of darkness. Like the whose eyes Jesus opened, we "see me trees walking." The conflict between lower and the higher nature often tend obscure the intellect and to prevent from seeing clearly the things we ough do; but if one desires to know the t and to do the truth, and if he obey as as he learns, the path of duty will bec constantly clearer as he advances.

This is the fact which is set forth poetically in the passage above c Just as the early morning twilight, its intermingling of light and sha grows into the rosy dawn, and then fin into the full-orbed day, so this sa writer affirms the path of the just will g brighter, until it is illuminated by the fect day. Who has not watched with in est the first signs of approaching day, w the eastern horizon begins to blush with first tints of the morning light, and n how the mists and shadows of the n receded before the brightening path o coming sun? The spiritual experie which is illustrated by this phenomeno nature, is also an interesting one. P seems to have used the same figure wh speaking of the "voice from the excel glory," which he had heard on the Mo said, "Whereunto ye do well that ye heed as unto a lamp shining in a e, until the day dawn, and the day-star s in your hearts."

both these passages the thought is of increasing light in the path of the that seeks to walk in the light. This very comforting truth. It is a truth, that is corroborated by the experience very man that holds his mind open to light and strives to live in harmony such light. This is in harmony with teaching of Jesus, who said to the Jews believed on Him, "If ye abide in my d, then are ye truly my disciples; and hall know the truth, and the truth shall e you free" (John 8:31, 32). It is also xact harmony with that other saying of s, "If any man willeth to do his will hall know of the teaching, whether it God, or whether I speak from myself."
itude as to Christian doctrine is here ned of those who will to do His will; that f it is the purpose of a man's heart to he will of God, he will soon come to what that will is, and to be assured in such a way that he can walk in a path. The "doctrine" here referred that which relates to our character conduct.

is doctrine or teaching is such as mmend itself to every honest-minded n who wants to do right. This hy it often happens that the path of is clear to Christians in very humble ns in life, and with meagre attains in learning, when it is obscure to who make larger pretensions. "The t of the Lord is with them that fear
." "Blessed are the pure in heart, for shall see God." These passages teach same great lesson, namely, that eness of purpose, earnestness of e, purity of heart, are essential con-ns of spiritual discernment. Many of thical problems that puzzle men would asily solved if these conditions were met.

s, Christian pilgrim, the way grows ter as we homeward travel. We are g a rising, not a setting sun. It is the ing that cometh to the Christian, and he night. "In the eveningtime it shall ght" to him who walketh in the path e just. "Now is our salvation nearer when we first believed." A glorious nce seems to shine down upon our way as we near the heavenly portals, we can almost hear, yea, we can hear, he ear of faith, the whisperings of e love, assuring us that we are nearing and of everlasting light. Press on, ers, sisters, all, and in due time the of the Master will open wide the that ushers us into the land where e shall be no more night," but the thereof shall be the glory of the Lord.

PRAYER.

Thou who art the source of life, and ght, we rejoice that Thou hast called t of darkness into light by the gospel y grace. We thank Thee that Thou lead us like children, when the way is
, and when we stumble Thou dost lift o again with a gentle hand, and lead ward along the heavenly way. We k Thee, Father, that Thou hast so ed it that the way grows brighter with ight of Thy presence as we journey rd and homeward. Help us, we be-Thee, to walk in the light as Thou given us to see the light, that we may e children of light; and when at last arthly journey is ended, and we leave land of shadows, may it be ours to in the light of Thy presence forever,

Editor's Easy Chair.

Great interest centers in the Peace Commission, which sits in Paris. It has a most difficult and delicate problem on its hands. We can imagine the almost painful interest with which the Philippinos await the result. With them it is not a question of expansion or contraction, but it is a question of "to be or not to be" a free and independent people. Are they to be turned over to the tender mercies of Spain, to endure the same oppression and injustice which has hitherto characterized Spain's treatment of them, or will this great American Republic, whose remarkable victory at Manila makes them an arbiter of the destiny of the Philippines, say to Spain, "Hands off! Let this oppressed people go free?" This is the question in which they are most deeply interested, and all the world sympathizes in their desire to be free.

But, unfortunately, the desire for freedom and the capacity for freedom do not alwas go together. It may be that the Philippinos will have to undergo a process of tutelage, under the direction and protection of the American Government, to fit them for the responsibilities of self-government. If so be, what better business can this great nation engage in than teaching the art of self-government to the struggling and aspiring peoples of the earth? We are debtors to the barbarians as well as to the cultured nations of the earth, and this debt can only be discharged by imparting to them all that we have that is good which they are able to receive.

October should be a month of intense activity in religious work as it is in the business world. The absentees, who have generally returned in September, have by this time gotten on the harness, the enervating heat of summer is past, the cooler weather of autumn imparts new energy, and the season is propitious for aggressive Christian work. Let us hope that all the churches will avail themselves of the benefit of these conditions, and press forward in all their religious enterprises. Not until the church puts the same enterprise and energy into its Christian work that men of the world—and church members, too—put into their business operations will the church oocupy the place it ought to hold as a controlling factor in the life of the community, of the nation and of the world. In our business enterprises we do not ask, Is it convenient or agreeable to do this or that? but, Does my business demand it? Would it not be a good idea to apply the same question to the interests of the Master's kingdom?

This brings us to say another and perhaps a final word about our National Convention. Remember, the question is not whether you can conveniently attend, but whether your own highest interest and that of the kingdom of God does not require you to go. No question is settled right that is not settled in the light of our obligations to the kingdom of God. So our Lord teaches when he says: "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

What an age of travel this is! One can almost live on wheels now, and carry on his regular work. The writer has spent four nights during the past week on a sleeping-car, doing his traveling by night and his work by day. This mixing and intermixing of people, not only of the same nation, but of different nations, is bound to produce important results in the direction of the unification of the race. Water courses, mountain ranges, national lines, continental boundaries, leagues of ocean no longer separate the peoples of the earth. Steamships, railroads, telegraphs, oceanic cables have obliterated distance and brought the whole world together. This must ultimately do away with race prejudices, foster a worldwide patriotism, promote unity of interests, dispel darkness and superstition, and hasten that sublime consummation when the kingdoms of this world shall have become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ.

It is not probable that the Jews could have maintained their national unity as long as they did without their great religious feasts, which brought them together, and which promoted unity of sentiment and of feeling among the various tribes. It is hardly probable that any religious body to-day, which is widespread over the country, could maintain practical unity of faith, of teaching and of practice without these national gatherings that promote mutual acquaintanceship, that make common property of the best thoughts of the time and that weave the subtle cords that bind them into a common brotherhood. Our national conventions, therefore, have a mission apart from their chief aim—that of enabling us to keep the unity of Spirit in the bond of peace.

THE CAMPBELLIAN REFORMATION.*

Having an intense aversion to the expression, "The Campbellite Church," I cannot get the consent of my own feelings to use the above somewhat similar sounding term without a word of explanation.

The church is a divine institution, divinely constituted and divinely named. Hence the application to it of human name is dishonoring to the great Head of the church, whose name should be, with all men, above every name. But a reformation is simply a human movement under the leadership of men, and it is both inevitable and right that it should be known in history under the name of him who was the chief promoter.

Standing in the midst of a cluster of hills it is very difficult or likely impossible to pick out the highest, but out upon the prairie a few miles away the tallest hill stands out in bold relief above its companions.

So, fifty years ago, standing in the midst of the pioneers of the religious Reformation of the 19th century, but few could pick out the chief in leadership; but to-day, looking back across the prairie of fifty years, there towers above all his companions the magnificent face of Alexander Campbell.

Therefore, it seems to me a very proper thing to style the great religious reformation of this century, "The Campbellian Reformation," and I believe it will be a much-used term inside the next twenty-five years.

1. What is the Campbellian Reformation?

*An address read before the Minnesota Christian Ministerial Association at Mankato, Minn., Aug. 23, 1898, and by vote of the Association ordered published.

It may seem quite needless to broach such a question, here, but it is a vastly important question and the answer needs to be often attempted, though it will hardly be fully given for several decades yet. The answer I shall attempt involves some history.

The apostolic church was corrupted by its contact with Judaism and Paganism in the third and fourth centuries. There was the curious amalgamation of Judaism, Paganism and Christianity, resulting in the Roman Catholic Church, which abides to this day as mostly Pagan, less Jewish and only nominally Christian. That amalgamation changed vitally both the doctrine and the government of the church as ordered by inspiration. In the New Testament church the doctrine was this: faith in and obedience to Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God, as set forth by inspired men. That simple doctrine was corrupted by adding to it certain speculations from Pagan philosophy and certain concessions from Jewish tradition and theology, which practically nullified the original simple doctrine.

Now the government in the New Testament church, I choose to say, was the same as its doctrine—faith in and obedience to Jesus as the Christ, the Son of God, as set forth by inspired men. The doctrine and the government of the apostolic church were the same thing. The creed of the church was its government. Jesus the Christ was both creed and head. Hence when the apostles went out to carry out the great commission given them, they did not go organizing churches; the commission did not then nor does it now read, "Go into all the world and organize churches." The apostles went preaching the gospel, and when they had planted the divine creed in the hearts of a community, there they had a church. The divine creed in the hearts of men brought them together, kept them together and worked them together for the spread of the truth as it is in Christ.

Nearly the whole of medieval and modern theology is constructed as if the apostles first went forth and organized churches and at some later day went around and gave them their doctrine. It is a mischievous error, because it prevents people from seeing that the creed of the New Testament church is also its government. In that church Jesus was "all and in all." He was "Head over all things." He was all faith and all authority. The New Testament church was simply the aggregation of those who believed on the Christ and were constrained by that faith to obey him in all things. It was an aggregation of individuals called out from other men and called together and worked together by the power of faith in the Christ.

But to the Pagan world such an institution was no institution at all. Paganism did not believe that men were ever loyal and true except for selfish reasons. Hence it considered that any society depending for promotion upon the voluntary devotion of its members was simply leaning upon a broken reed and was bound to fall. To it a faith-controlled organization was a dead organization. The only powers known to it to unite and move men were physical force and selfish interest, and any society not using one or both of those powers was not worthy of recognition. So when Pagan influences flooded the church and corrupted its doctrines in their estimation they found no church government, and hence proceeded to make one after their own model, and the new church government was as different from the old as Peter's sword was from Paul's love—the new compelled from without while the old constrained from within; authority in human hands was the conservator of the new while faith in the Christ was the conservator of the old. So the great apostasy did these two things: added to the matter-of-fact, personal creed of the New Testament a lot of the abstract speculations of Pagan philosophy and Jewish tradition and changed the principle of church government from the inspiration of faith and love to the compulsion of force and fear.

Now when Luther came in the 16th century and hurled himself against that mountain of error called the Roman Catholic Church, he saw, to some extent, the first work of the apostasy, but not the second. He saw much that he considered wrong in the government of the Roman Church, but he did not see that it was fundamentally wrong and diametrically contrary to apostolic teaching and practice. He was so imbued with the spirit of scholasticism that he, too, saw no church in the New Testament and felt that there was no church till there was an institution that could exercise religious authority. He was badly confused on the question of ecclesiastical authority and could not right himself because he would not give up the old Pagan-descended notion that somewhere in the church there had to be a man or a body of men to pronounce judgment on men and doctrines. He raised the cry, "Back to the Word of God"—the very cry that should have been raised; it was the ideal watchword for the occasion. But he was hindered from making the whole distance by the fact that he held on to his old notion of church authority. In all his theological advances he adjusted everything to the old idea of ecclesiastical authority, and hence he could no more learn the complete Christian system than to-day a man could learn astronomy while clinging to the old Ptolemaic error, that the earth is the center of the universe. It worked as follows with Luther: Whenever he cried, "Back to the Word of God," the Romanist retorted, "No; out into religious anarchy!" and the retort made Luther wince every time. With his idea of religious authority, going out from the old Roman institution into liberty to find new truth was a very dangerous business. He went out as 13th-century sailors went out on the Atlantic ocean, fearing to go too far lest they come to the "jumpinging-off place!" He wanted new truth, but disliked to tear away from old authority. And every now and then in his search for new truth, in his going back to the Word, he would stop and say, "We are now there; we are now back to the Word; let us build our temple and call the tribes to worship." And he was led to do so, not so much because he believed he was absolutely right in doctrine as because he believed it his duty to establish religious authority among the reformers. But whenever Luther proposed to stop the search for truth—to end the journey back to the Word and formulate his doctrines and set them up as a religious standard—there was a vigorous protest among his associates. They protes because they could not agree with the gr Luther in many things. So the build of the new temple was postponed fr time to time, hoping to find some way building it in unity and harmony.

At length, however, the Romanists s the situation. They clearly perceived t if Luther could be led to formulate doctrines and to organize an ecclesiast institution around them, the reform would be badly divided. Hence it was t Charles V., at the instance of the Po called the Diet of Augsburg in 1530, demanded by civil authority an author tive statement of doctrine from the refo ers. The statement was written by Lut and Melancthon, who flattered themsel that Providence was affording them needed opportunity to establish religi authority among the reformers. T said, the reformers will not agree, so G has used the Papal Emperor of German demand of us what we should have d willingly.

The Augburg Confession at once bec the authoritative standard, the hur creed of the Reformation, and all would not sign it were declared not t among the reformers. As intended by the Romanists, it divided and gre weakened the reform forces. The Au burg Confession was thus the poiso bread which the Romanists laid out which the reformers ate. From that to this Protestantism has been consta subjected to schismatic spasms, induce credal poisoning. Previous to the Au burg Diet, the reformers studied the B to find out the truth; henceforth, they sacked the Bible to justify their opini At Augsburg, Luther and his follo ceased to be true reformers, and from day on never gave the world a new trut

Three hundred years later God raise a man to take up the thread of ref where Luther dropped it. This man raised the cry, "Back to the Word of G and being a man who was not hamp with the old Pagan-descended notio ecclesiastical authority—a man spurned all human authority in religi he made progress. He said, "If we going back to the Bible, let us strike Pentecost and thence follow the men under the direction of the Holy S first preached the gospel and first churches in order; let us follow t example." That man was Alexa Campbell, and the work, which is sti progress, is the Campbellian Reforma

The difference between Luther Campbell was chiefly these: Luther deeply imbued with the spirit and met of scholasticism. Accordingly, he consi ed the Bible simply a book of data o which to construct a theological sys and his conscience almost the voice o spiration within him. Also he could possibly find any church in the New T ment. He thought he must find the doctrine and true church somew between Pope Leo X. and the last o apostles. He declared it wrong to ig the theology of the fathers and the ch of the fathers. Campbell flung schol cism, the theology of the fathers and church of the fathers, to the winds found his theology sufficiently formu and his church completely organized i New Testament. Said he, "Let us b intervening ages and bring apostolic istianity down to the present." Luther , "Let us go back over the road from ne to Jerusalem, for somewhere along way we will find the authoritative rch and the true doctrine." Campbell , "Let us not waste time on that ous road from Rome to Jerusalem, but us make a bee line for Jerusalem, for e we know we can find the divinely ered church and the divinely delivered pel."

or a quarter of a century their atten- has been directed to politics and a at effort has been made in various ways secure prohibition by constitutional ndments and legislative action.

Moral means to save the individual from drink habit were correspondingly lected, the political schemes have ually failed, the Prohibition party is ded and has not yet secured enough tioners to get on the state ballot, and Anti-Saloon League has found itself ble to cope with the liquor power in the eral Assembly.

Howard Russell, the leader of the Anti- oon League, now says that greater rt must be made to save individuals n forming the drink habit, and the Good nplars have their organizers in the field the purpose of strengthening old or- izations and establishing new ones.

is to be hoped that the failure of tical temperance may result in laying a re solid moral foundation upon which future may build a monument to the cess of the cause of prohibition.

But may not the churches here learn a on? Have they not indulged in the nusiastic dream of taking the world for rist while the means for doing so were lly inadequate?

nere has been a trust in God that has been justified by the workings of Provi- ce in the past. How many millions of nest prayers have been offered in the t, both for the abolition of evil and the version of the world. Good people have ected miracles and have neglected ans. In their efforts to recommend the gion of Christ to the world they have en modified it. They have toned down denunciation of sin, have unduly magni- the love and mercy of God, until many iserable respectable sinner has felt that was doing Jesus a favor by professing religion. The preachers have winked social and economic wrongs that con- ute some of the most gigantic crimes of s or any other age. Money contributed church enterprises has been made to er sins as inky black as the pall which gs over the pit.

The churches have compassed land and to make proselytes and neglected commonest needs of their own mem- rship. Is a member sick? What aid es he get from the church? None. The ristians as individuals may render assist- ance, but not the church. Is he out of employment? What account is the church to find him a place to work? A preacher may wear himself out in the service of the church. Does it defend him in his helpless age from poverty and the poorhouse? No. Do church members exempt one another from killing competition in business, from unjust dealings, from fraud, from the scramble for office and its spoils? No.

The churches are divided. They squander their means in extra machinery and in promoting one of the most enormous crimes against God—the crime of dividing his forces and thus furthering the cause of his foes. Can such a type of Christianity conquer the world? Would it make the world any better than it is if it did conquer it? It is of itself of the world, worldly, and is a failure as a redemptive agent. Let us return to first principles. Let us stop this sin of numbering Israel and work for principles instead of popularity.

The world lies in wickedness just as it did in the days of John and is a devouring, tyrannical, lascivious beast as it was in the vision of the Revelator. It is at enmity with God and truth and right, and is not to be won over by silly attempts to popularize religion. Let Christians band together to take care of their own interests both spiritual and material and make the kingdom of God a real thing of inestimable value to every citizen of it and not a metaphysical abstraction.

"Class interest" is a term which has fallen into disrepute, but if Christians will attend strictly to their class interest they will affect the general world tenfold more than they do. The class interests of Christianity are the perpetual teachings of Christ and the moral and material welfare of his disciples.

These secured and guarded with invincible power, then the church can become the Savior of the world, and not until then.

CAN I LOVE MY ENEMIES?

N. J. AYLESWORTH.

II.

In the last article we saw that Christ demands that we love our enemies—not simply that we shall treat them well, abstaining from all acts of injury, nor even that we shall do them good, but that we shall love them. We saw that the reciprocal lives of social life, however beautiful their manifestations, or complete their development, can never fill out the measure of that love which Christ demands, or attain to the rewards of the Christian life—that the love which characterizes the Christian spirit is of a far higher and nobler quality; that it is found in the character of God, was exemplified in the life of Christ, and was possessed by certain of his followers. Yet this love is now often thought to be impracticable, or beyond the reach of the capabilities of the human heart. So far is this from being true that—

(1) It is entirely possible to love one's enemies.

(2) It is often done.

(3) It is natural to do so. I trust this will appear as our investigation advances.

Let us note, first, that it is often done.

When Gen. Grant received a communication from Gen. Lee offering to surrender, he was much elated in view of the success of the Union arms and at the prospect of the termination of bloodshed; but when he met the Southern General in conference and proceeded to fix the terms of surrender, he was "sad and depressed." He "felt like anything rather than rejoicing at the downfall of a foe who had fought so long and violently and had suffered so much for a cause, though that cause was," as he believed, "one of the worst for which a people ever fought and one for which there was the least excuse." He sat down to write out the conditions of surrender and made better terms than he had formerly offered, without any request that he should do so from Gen. Lee. He spared the Southern army, so far as it was possible, every indignity and every loss. Gen. Lee, at the interview, repeatedly expressed his sense of the generosity of this treatment, and the South never forgot it. When the news of surrender reached the Union lines, the men began firing a salute of one hundred guns in honor of the victory. Gen. Grant stopped it. There could be no exultation over a fallen foe.

What was all this? It was the spirit of brotherhood. Here is pain and sorrow in the hour of triumph over the fallen, there are privileges granted which had not been asked for or expected. The celebration of victory hurts the conqueror, because it hurts the conquered. The hero of this hour feels for this dejected and wasted people. He feels their pain, their disappointment, their disaster. It is brother-love that presides at this scene; and here is struck the first blow of a new conquest—the conquest of the heart. It was well that this Christian-hearted man sat in the White House for the next eight years. A man of similar spirit followod him, and while the narrowness of the politician has often sought to mar the result by fanning anew the flames of animosity, the government has always acted in a fraternal spirit; and within a single generation this people has been loved back to us. The wound is healed, and the nation is one in heart as in form. The people of the North turned from the bier of their dead to extend the hand of forgiveness and fellowship to those who had slain their sons. It was the Christ-spirit which healed this national wound.

A guaranty of all this was to be found in what had gone before. The war was directly and ostensibly for the preservation of the Union; it was really a war of love. Sympathy for the crushed manhood of some of the humblest of our race was behind it all. The "irrepressible conflict" was a storm of irrepressible brother-love. The years of that gathering storm were noble years; they were years of heavenly anger. The white heats of those stormy times were purifying fires. Blessed the nation that shall pass through such a baptism, even though it be sealed with blood. It was all for love—love which spanned the chasm of race, the distinction of color and the vast remove of civilization to find a brother in the lowliest of mankind, to weep over his calamity, to kindle in glorious anger in his behalf, to bleed at his side and at last to place on his dusky brow the diadem of manhood. What wonder that this spirit should turn to his conquered oppressor and say, "My brother!" It would not have been itself if it had not. The people of this country had an agony. They may not have known just what possessed them, but God knew. They did not get through it without loving the enemy. It was one of God's lessons written in red.

We have now another war, a strange war, a war without hatred, an enemy without enmity. We do not hate Spain. Poor, misguided Spain! That is the way we feel. It hurts us to strike her. How long that Christian in the White House tried to avoid it! When Spain struck us in the sinking of the Maine we did not get angry. It was as when a child strikes a mother. We forgot the Maine in another sorrow. We heard only the cry of poor Cuba. It is a war of love, and love will not let us hate Spain. Nay, with the best of our people a sympathy goes out toward her. In the great brother-love which spans the race, and whose pulses we feel, Spain is not left out. We love her too, and feel a sorrow for her. It is another lesson in red. We are in God's high school of love; and as we go down on our knees over our dead, let us learn well the lesson of that love which sweeps into its arms, not only the downtrodden and oppressed, but the enemy.*

There is another kind of enemy—the criminal. How do we feel towards him? Some years ago the writer was escorting a highly cultured Christian lady through the Auburn Penitentiary. We paused at the portal and looked upon the convicts as they filed into the messroom. As she gazed into the one thousand hard, sullen faces she burst into tears. It is the spirit of our country toward its criminals. The judge pronounces the sentence of doom with pain, as if striking a son. To learn of any abuse or cruelty to those criminals in prison kindles our indignation second only to an assault on innocence. We will tolerate no injury and the infliction of no unnecessary pain upon them. If they are to suffer the death penalty, the state governments have sought with earnest solicitude to discover a means of absolutely painless death. Not a pang that can be spared them must be inflicted. Penal science is nowwrestling with an anxious problem—how togive these criminals back to manhood and to the blessings of a worthy citizenship. The spirit of the nation toward its criminals is fraternal—nay, almost maternal. It is love pitying, sympathizing and yearning to help. We love these enemies; but it is, as befits, love weeping, bending in compassion, striking with pain. And all this is done, not from a cold sense of duty, but at the bidding of the heart. Nor is this love weak: it is the controlling force in all our dealings with this class.

How far have the most Christian nations traveled toward the sermon on the mount! The old Assyrian kings flayed alive captives taken in war. The Romans crucified their criminals or threw them to the beasts for their own delectation, or pierced their sides with iron hooks and fastened them to posts on rafts and sent them out to sea. The torture of criminals or captives of war was enjoyed as a pastime. Now, quivering nerves run from us to them. If we strike them, we are hurt; if they suffer, we must weep. We cannot help it. The Christ-spirit has got hold upon us, and is hurting us with all the sorrows of the world. We have climbed high enough in the scale of manhood to find that it is natural to love enemies, and to find ourselves wrestling in the pangs of love for them.

Between the Atlantic and the Pacific there rolls another and a kindlier sea—a deep, sweet sea of the spirit of brotherhood. It has its storms and its anger, and sometimes its waters are like blood, but its tempests purify the heavens. As by fountains in the earth, it is fed from the bowels of Christianity; and as we slip across the line of another century, the tide is still rising. Watchman, what of the night?

Through the travail of the ages the love of enemies has already arrived and has possessed a vast area of human hearts. The larger love is already upon us with its agonies, its anxieties and its joys.

I do not forget that we have not spoken of personal enemies—the hardest task set for the human heart. This must be reserved for succeeding papers.

Current Religious Thought

A recent number of the Central Baptist gives the following good definition of an all-round practical preacher:

The best preacher is one who presents the broad side of a full man to his congregation. If he is intellectual, just that and nothing more, he addresses himself only to the intellectual element of his hearers. If the ethical predominates in his nature, he formulates his sermons in terms of conscience and his preaching is a system of morals. Should he possess in an unusual degree a glowing imagination, then to this he subjects all his other faculties and kindles in his hearers glowing pictures and gorgeous images. If he is endowed with exceptional emotional nature his preaching will abound in the pathetic, and will move his hearers to frequent tears. The best preacher combines in proper proportion all these elements. The keyboard of his heart has its octaves and register full, and his hands sweep from the highest to the lowest key with equal facility. Only thus can he touch cords which awake similar responses in the minds of those who listen. A very curious performance is that of making passable music on one string of a violin, but the best music needs four strings. Somewhere in this region is an explanation of the fact that the preachers who have most profoundly moved general audiences were not men of remarkable intellectual attainment, but rather men who embodied in themselves in fair proportion all the elements of universal manhood. A good preacher is not a freak; he is not peculiar; he is not a man of one idea; he does not play on one string; he preaches all the preaching which God commanded him, and addresses with equal directness all the hearts to whom God sends him.

The following reply to those who think that Christianity is losing its power in the world, made by the Observer, this city, is worthy of consideration:

As we see it, the church is more fruitful now than ever before in its history. Fifty years ago church work was done almost entirely by the ministry. The life of the church ran in a narrow channel, and the stream was dry a great part of every year. The annual revival was about the only season when the church showed any signs of activity or life. Often a whole year rolled round without the addition of a member. In the interval the church was in a state of suspended animation. Nothing was done to win men and women to holiness, and nothing to impress upon the community the life and power of the gospel. In those times the forces of the church were unorganized and unused. Many forms of Christian activity now so rich in blessing to society were then unknown. Indeed, the Christians of those days regarded the church as a thing separate and apart from daily life. Religion had but little to do with business, with society or with civil affairs. It was thought that the sole mission of religion was to save men and women from sin and prepare them for heaven. Feeling was the chief evidence of conversion, and the exercises of religion consisted largely in spiritual visions and rapturous anticipations. But a marked and salutary change has come over the church. The stream of life has widened and deepened, and has swept into its broad and mighty current the whole of man's interest and destiny. The mourner's bench is gone, the revival of those times is fast vanishing, the spiritual manifestations of the fathers are unknown, but the life of the church is deeper, truer, grander than it ever was. New wa of working have taken the place of the wa adapted to those times. In scores of ways t life of the church is now daily exerting its upon society. * * * In the first part of th century the life of the church flowed in o channel, in the last part of the century it flowing in scores of channels. Every depar ment of human life is feeling the influence the gospel. Look at the countless benevole organizations that fill the land. While ma of them are not actually under the direction the church, they are doing the work of t church, and we rejoice in them all. Christia ity is a mighty force in the world. Its wo derful history, its mighty organizations, i worldwide conquests, its numberless worker its boundless wealth and its noble-hearte missionaries in all lands are imperishable wi nesses of its greatness and its glory. Th vitality of the Christian religion is inexhaus ible, its impress is on the thought, the mora ity and the activity of our times. The gre nations that profess its creed are the conque ing nations of the globe, and they carry i banners, its principles and its laws every where. No, Christianity is neither dead n dying. It has a great past, a greater prese and a still greater future. Its aspirations a infinite, its labors boundless, its hopes impe ishable and its promises rich and unfailing.

The Religious World.

Work Still Going On.

In spite of the confusion in the army camps consequent upon their breaking up and movin to other locations, the work of preaching t gospel to the soldiers has gone steadily on, wit the omission of but very few services. Th Christian Commission workers have followe the troops to Huntsville, Lexington and Mon tauk Point, and from all these places hav come reports of sustained interest and man conversions. It is especially gratifying t hear that the men who were converted thre months ago at Tampa are giving a clear test mony for Christ and showing good evidenc of a genuine work of grace in their hearts.

Dr. Dixon writes from Montauk: "I preach ed last night to a tent packed full of soldiers and it was a joy to find among them so man whom I had seen at Tampa. The converts, s far as I can learn, have remained true. Som of them whose names and faces I remembe were killed at Santiago, or died of fever. On fine fellow who attended our meetings a Tampa gave his heart to Christ in the trenche at Santiago, and took his first communio just after the battle, and has been a faithfu soul-winner ever since. As I have gon through the regiments, it has been like visit ing old friends, and last night several other accepted Christ and confessed him. It wi add no little to the joy of living to meet thes men again here and there in the future, an find that they have been faithful to Christ The indications are that this camp will soon b broken up, but other camps will remain an the evangelistic work should be kept up."

One of the workers at Huntsville writes "Our work goes splendidly forward. Soldier are accepting Christ every day. We hold tw daily services, one at 2:30 and the other a 7:15 P. M. I believe it is the biggest movemen yet in the army work. Yesterday afternoo the pastor of the Baptist Church was comin down the street and a soldier stopped him saying, 'I have been reading one of thos books the Christian Commission are distribut ing. I am all wrong; can you help me?' Th pastor went to his church with him; the soldie accepted Christ, and was in the meeting las night rejoicing in the new-found life. We ca use 7,000 of the books at this camp."

When the Commission workers arrived a Lexington they found nearly seven hundre men in the hospitals and began work amon them at once, besides holding their regula tent meetings every day.

Taking into account the great numbers o men reached and the wonderful success that ha attended the preaching of the word amon them, the work with the soldiers for the pas four months seems to me to be most remark able, and to call for hearty thanksgiving t God. The response to the appeal for fund made through the religious press has bee most hearty; the thousands of dollars neede for the expenses of the work have been freel provided and the money continues to come in But better than the money have been the ex pressions of deep interest with which it ha been accompanied, and now this abundan grace bestowed in answer to prayer shal "through the thanksgiving of many, redoun to the glory of God."

Contributions sent to me at East Northfield Mass., will still be used to give the gospel t our soldiers and sailors, and when the work i ended, a full financial statement will be mad public.

The churches of Kansas are in convention week at Wellington and a good convention been anticipated in the splendid program ch has been published. Kansas and Mis-i each held their convention this year in a of the southwestern part of each state. B. Young, of this city, one of the field nts of the Christian Orphans' Home, went Wellington on Monday for the purpose of resenting the interests of the Orphans' ne before the Kansas churches. Bro. ng has devoted himself to the interests of han children for a number of years and ws how to find a place for them in the rts of Christian people.

We take pleasure in presenting on our first page a picture of the man who is to pre-e over the convention of the American ristian Missionary Society at Chattanooga, D. Power, for more than twenty years tor of the Vermont Ave. Christian Church, shington, D. C. When approached by the irman of the nominating committee at ianapolis, who asked him if there were any sons why he could not preside over the next eral convention, his modest reply was, ot that I know of, but there are others more deserving of that honor than I." But the committee did not think so, and the convention ratified its opinion. He will make a model presiding officer.

—When the play at a "standard theatre" gets so immoral that a secular paper has to call it down and severely reprimend its managers for an offense to good morals and public taste as well as for bad business, it is certainly bad; and yet, this is what happened in one of the newest leading theatres in this city last week. The reprimand appeared in a leading Sunday paper. This proves the danger to young people in theatre-going despite the society distinction between what it calls high and low theatres. The imoral miasma may be more dense in the "low" than in the so-called "high" theatres, but it is by no means confined to them, as the case cited shows. The fact is that the financial success of all theatres depends upon this moral poison. Sometimes an overdose is administered and the public offended, but so long as it is not too glaringly flaunted the public applauds it. The fact is that they are all dangerous in their influence upon young people.

—The one shadow that rested on the Missouri Christian Convention was the absence of Bro. Abbott, the corresponding secretary, on account of the serious illness of his wife, who has since passed away. He was tenderly remembered by the convention in prayer, and a message of sympathy sent to him.

—At a recent meeting held by the State Board of Charities and Correction in the state capitol, at Jefferson City, the following resolution was offered by the vice-president, Miss Perry, of St. Louis, and unanimously passed by the board. It reads as follows: "Resolved, That as Prison Sunday has been observed more or less in all of the states, that the State Board of Charities and Correction request all of the ministers in the state of Missouri to preach a sermon annually on the fourth Sunday in October on some phase of prison life." As prison reform has come to be one of the foremost of reform questions the request of the State Board of Charities and Correction is not only reasonable, but just and timely. It is such a deep and far-reaching question that no minister need be at a loss of material for a useful gospel sermon. That radical reforms are needed in our penal institutions is evident from a Christian standpoint, and the creation of public sentiment against medieval methods will hasten their departure; and the observance of Prison Sunday will greatly strengthen public sentiment on this question. "This is sensible and practical Christianity."

—In a personal letter from Bro. M. D. Clubb, chairman of the executive committee on preparation for the convention at Chattanooga, Tenn., he writes: "I have never worked harder or prayed more earnestly for anything than for this convention, and somehow I feel that the good Father has great things in store for us. I believe it will be a great convention, marked by its good cheer, enthusiasm and far-reaching results. The work of preparation is almost completed, and our hearts are raised in silent prayer to God, that his Spirit may guide us in all things, so that when this great convention assembles we may stand before him as one man asking, 'Lord, what wilt thou have us to do.'" If this spirit of the Chattanooga brethren prevails throughout the brotherhood, we shall doubtless have a great convention. He adds: "I like your idea of a prayer-meeting on Lookout Mountain, and will try to arrange for a Lookout prayer-meeting."

—Good entertainment at moderate prices will be provided for all. The two leading hotels—the Read House, and the Southern Hotel—are convenient to the convention hall, and open their doors to delegates at $2.00 per day. Cheaper board can be had for those who desire it. The editor of this paper has taken quarters at the Read House, where he will be glad to meet and greet his friends during the convention, and confer with delegates on matters relating to the Master's work.

—The following notice of the death of Thomas Munnell, clipped from the Plow and Hammer, published at Alma, Ill., and sent us by Bro. J. H. Smart, of Centralia, Ill., is the first news we have received of the decease of this widely-known brother, who has filled so large a place in our missionary annals and whose contributions to our literature placed him at one time among our chief writers. We hope some one who knew him well, and who can give us further particulars of his death, will send us a suitable notice of his life and work:

The sudden death of our good brother, Thomas Munnell, who was to become the instructor in the Bible College, brings sadness to the hearts of his many friends and acquaintances, and all interested in the college. He taught Garfield his first lessons in Hiram College, being one of its first instructors there when it opened. He has taught in Kentucky University and other institutions. He came to Alma College from the college at Canton, Mo. We feel the loss of his services in the college. Bro. Munnell was 75 years of age. He lost his wife some years ago. He was beloved by all who knew him. His daughter was summoned to her father's side, and came to see him laid to rest after a very active, useful life. The Christian Church at Alma mourns its loss, having called him to be its pastor. His remains were laid to rest in the cemetery near Alma.

—An exchange, referring to the forthcoming convention at Chattanooga, says: "The Disciples are an inland people, having the bulk of their membership between the Allegheny and Rocky Mountains." Now, we may be "an inland people," but we have never been charged, so far as we know, with having any aversion to water, fresh or salt. On the contrary, like our brethren of the ancient order, we believe in "much water" for baptismal purposes. True, we do not make as much of water as some people do who use less of it than we do, but we are going to cultivate the coasts and ride the oceans, and become a maritime, as well as an "inland people." Keep out of the way!

—Some one has asked for the address of the Christian Orphans' Home. It is 915 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

—On Saturday morning we received the announcement of the death of Sister Abbott. For days and weeks she was a great sufferer, but she is now beyond the reach of pain. The struggle is over and she has gone to her reward. During her sickness, severe as it was, she was unwilling that Bro. Abbott should omit any of his great duties on her account, but her end was too near for him to be at the Nevada convention. In this loss and deep sorrow Bro. Abbott will be sustained by memories of her, by his own faith and by the prayers of a large brotherhood.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

The Oldest Paper in America
FOUNDED A.D. 1728
BY BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

A high-grade illustrated weekly magazine, equal in tone and character to the best of the monthlies. In addition to the best original matter obtainable, the POST will present each week the best in the newspapers, periodicals and books of the world. It will aim to be to contemporary literature what a Salon exhibit is to art, bringing together the choicest bits of literature from all modern sources and giving them a deserved place together, 'on the line.' We have the literary resources of the world to draw upon. The best writers of the world are practically a retained corps of contributors. It would be impossible for any magazine, no matter how boundless its wealth, to obtain, as original matter, the wealth of literature we have to offer weekly. The handsome illustrations in the POST are original.

To introduce it into your family, it will be mailed every week from now to January 1, 1899, on receipt of —Business in Christianity has a new illustration of perpetual motion. The Church Extension Society is built on the perpetual motion theory and this number of this magazine which, by the way, is an unusually interesting number, has the theory illustrated. It is a puzzling looking diagram, but there is no question about the machine working. The main wheel is so large and revolves so fast that objects in the shap of meeting-houses are thrown off from its periphery and scattered broad cast all over the land. It is a mavelous machine and worthy of careful examination or study in the light of this magazine and by the aid of its perpetual motion diagram. Address G. W. Muckley, Kansas City, Mo., for a copy.

—Prof. E. M. Hackleman and E. B. Scof have bought out W. T. Sellers, of Indiar olis, Ind. Bro. Sellers was the agent of Christian Publishing Co., at Indianapolis, had built up quite a large business. Bretl Hackleman and Scofield will succeed him these interests. Bro. Scofield is the Sunc school Evangelist of that state.

—In our issue of last week there was a mistake made with respect to the railroad rates to Chatatnooga. The roads in the Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association will sell tickets on the certificate plan as far as the gateways of their territory. These gateways in the West are St. Louis and Chicago. In the East they are Buffalo and Pittsburgh. Those who go to Chattanooga should pay full fare as far as the gateways and take a certificate. This certificate is to be signed at the convention in Chattanooga and will enable the holder to return from the gateway to his home at one cent a mile. The Southern and Central Traffic Associations sell round-trip tickets for one fare.

—The Eureka College Pegasus for September, the first number for the present school year, seems to be pitched upon a higher plane and is full of the new spirit by which the college has been inspired with its new life. We wish the Pegasus and the college a happy, prosperous year.

—A card just to hand from H. Goodacre, secretary of the State and National Secretaries' Association, Red Wood Falls, Minn., announces the following change in the time of the meeting of this association at Chattanooga:

For various reasons, chiefly (1) because a number of our members have requested it and (2) because the state convention of our brethren in Tennessee will be in session Oct. 13th, the executive committee have deemed it necessary, since the issue of our excellent program and call for meeting on the 13th, to change the date to the 15th, at 8 A. M., in the Walnut Street Church, Chattanooga, Tenn. We trust this change will not inconvenience you and that you will be on hand.

—See program of the American Christian Missionary Convention in this number. It would be difficult to see how it could be improved upon for timeliness, importance of subjects, presentation of interests to be considered, etc. Read it carefully and study the vast possibilities and powers it contains. It is a veritable storage battery of spiritual energy, to be utilized in running the convention on a high plane and to a glorious end.

—Those who read J. Fraise Richard's article on the proper and orderly preservation of valuable newspaper articles, recently republished in this paper, will appreciate the following card from him on the fruits of his effort:

Please accept thanks for the republication of my article on "Scrapbooks in the Public Library," and the sensible editorial notice which called attention to same. A letter just received from Librarian Young returns thanks for the suggestion, and says it is being considered and adopted. Commissioner W. T. Harris, Bureau of Education, expresses same sentiment. The leaven is at work. The press is a power. A similar letter of mine 18 months ago resulted in the opening of the library from 4 to 10 P. M. J. FRAISE RICHARD.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 24, 1898.

The following report of a district convention at Sedalia, Mo., appeared in one of our city papers:

Christian Churches of Pettis County concluded a conference at Lamonte Friday night. There was a large and enthusiastic attendance from 13 different churches of the county. A reorganization was effected by electing the Rev. F. L. Cooke, of Sedalia, president; W. H. Stotts, of Smithton, vice-president, and Judge J. M. Dalby, of Sedalia, secretary and treasurer. The Christian congregations of Pettis County have over 2,000 members, and own their churches. All of these churches are paid for with the exception of the East Broadway Church, but recently built. Miss Terry, of Lamonte, was elected as superintendent to organize Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday-schools in all the churches in the county, where such organizations do not already exist.

—F. D. Power, of Washington, D. C., has written an introduction to R. B. Neal's new tract, No. 3, on Mormonism. Of this tract the author says that it is the best of the series; and Bro. Power says, "If your authorities are all safe, which I take for granted, I see no escape (for the Mormons) from a Schley-pounding."

PERSONAL MENTION.

Evangelists Boyle and Ridenour are at McPherson, Kan., in a meeting with 24 additions to date.

H. F. Davis, Dr. B. F. Slusher and Bro. Miner were visitors at our preachers' meeting here on last Monday. Bro. Miner has been doing missionary work down in the Indian Territory.

J. W. Carpenter, of Augusta, Ill., has been called to serve the church at Washington, Ill. He will begin work the fourth Sunday in October. J. T. Alsup began work for the fourth district in Illinois, Oct. 2nd, at Dana. The meeting will continue indefinitely. All communications concerning the work should be addressed to S. S. Lappin, district secretary, at Paxton, Ill.

S. G. Clay began the sixth year of his pastorate at Fayette, Mo., on last Sunday. It is said that there was not a dissenting vote or voice to the continuance of his ministry at Fayette.

J. C. Wilson, who was at one time a minister in the Baptist Church, but who came to us from the Baptists, and was for awhile a preacher among us, but who has in recent years been engaged in secular work in this city, on last Sunday placed his membership with the Second Church here. He now states that he desires to return again to the work of the ministry of the gospel.

The Indiana State University invited Allan B. Philputt, of Indianapolis, to preach the opening sermon Tuesday, Sept. 27. This university is located at Bloomington, has devotional exercises with a sermon on Tuesday of each week and has about 1,000 students. It is also Bro. Philputt's Alma Mater. The University Reporter says: "His talk showed careful preparation and was delivered in an easy manner. He is an interesting talker and the students appreciated the chance of hearing him. Such men always please the students and draw them to the chapel exercises."

The church at New Orleans, La., has expressed its appreciation of S. R. Hawkins, who was for three years its pastor, in official resolutions which were unanimously adopted. The resolutions commend Bro. Hawkins as an efficient and earnest preacher of the gospel.

B. A. Abbott, of Baltimore, preached at the dedication of the new $10,000 church house at Wilson, N. C., last Sunday. Numerous copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST were distributed at the meeting.

E. S. Conner, who has just closed his work at Noblesville, Ind., of his own accord, in a letter to us on the subject says: "I will reside here for awhile or until my future work is fully outlined. Yesterday was my closing day. At night the auditorium and lecture room were full of people—between 900 and 1,000. There were eight additions during the day and three at our last prayer-meeting, making a total of 11 at our closing services. The people have been good to us here and we regret to leave them. W. D. Starr will succed me here."

After Jan. 1, 1899, I will be free to hold two or three revival meetings. Have an anxcellent singer to assist. Will come for the voluntary offerings. Any desiring evagelistic work may address me at Middletown, Iowa.—R. C. OGBURN.

H. H. Rama, of Bloomfield, Iowa, says that for some time he has been disabled from preaching by sickness, but has recovered sufficiently to resume work. He would like to correspond with any church wanting a protracted meeting or a regular preacher.

E. O. Sharpe expects to close his work at Le Roy, Ill., by Dec. 1, and will be prepared to take another field in Illinois or do evangelistic work. Bro. S. is well known as an educated, earnest and efficient preacher and pastor, and churches in Illinois needing a preacher or likely to need one soon will no doubt make a note of his proposed change.

M. M. Davis, our "Texas Letter" writer, preached his eighth anniversary sermon as pastor of the Central Christian Church in Dallas, Sept. 25th, to a very large audience. The Courier says that he has preached 125 sermons at home and nine abroad during the past twelve months, and that there have been during that time 110 additions to the church.

The Endeavorer, published by the West Side Christian Church, Chicrgo, Ill., 16 pages, book size, is a creditable paper, edited by Mrs. H. J. Clarke. Bruce Brown is the pastor of the church.

Mabel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Brown, Fostoria, Ohio, was married to Mr. Alex. McMillan, September 28th. Not being present we send our congratulations.

Chas. Traxler, of Akron, Ohio, being in this city last week on business, paid his respects to this office.

B. F. Maniere, of Jacksonville, Miss., is visiting his daughter, Mrs. W. B. Young, of Lindinwood, this city. He will go from here to the convention at Chattanooga.

W. H. Boles, of Alma, Ill., candidate for State Treasurer made a rousing prohibition speech at Irving, Sept. 28.

Evangelists Coombs and Hunsaker are at Fort Worth, Tex., in a meeting with Pastor C. McPherson.

A. O. Garrison, editor of the Pacific Christian, and his family have been spending a few days in this city. As his father has exchanged his interest in the Pacific Christian for the Christian Oracle, he (A. O. Garrison) will in all probability change his editorial work from the Pacific Christian to the Christian Oracle.

Henry A. Morgan writes that he has closed his work at Purcell, I. T., and accepted a call to preach for the church at Bullinger, Texas. During the year closed at Purcell there have been 25 additions to the church. Bro. Morgan wants his CHRISTIAN-ENANGELIST to follow him into Texas on the ground that it is helpful to his work and that he cannot do without it. He says that the church at Purcell will not engage another preacher at present.

J. E. Masters, of Dorchester, Ill., reports a visit to a point west of Hillsboro, Montgomery County, where he says he preached his first sermon, 36 years ago. Also the town of Nokomis, where he says we once had a flourishing church. But since the death of Bro. Vanhoover he says the congregation has gone down and the church house, once a good one, is now in a dilapidated state. It is a brick structure 34x54 and $200 he says would put it in good repair. He thinks the Illinois state board should look after this at once, as the location is a desirable one.

L. R. Thomas, preacher for the church at Pine Creek, Ill., since April 17th, reports 11 additions; seven were baptized by Bro. Gillett. The church has raised $401.45, of which it paid to Eureka College $117.50, and to missions $21.50, besides C. W. B. M. contribution of $9.20.

Chicago Letter.

The gallant First Regiment of the Illinois U. S. Volunteers were received amid cheers and tears when they came home. Chicago turned out en masse to welcome them. Less than eight hundred out of the thirteen hundred who went to Cuba were able to march. Two hundred and sixteen came home sick several of whom have been dying every day since coming home. A long list of names have written after them, "Died before Santiago," "Died at Siboney," "Died at sea," etc. After the large number of sick and wounded soldiers had been conveyed to homes or hospitals in carriages and ambulances, the rest of the regiment, with Col. Turner, who had lost 40 pounds in this brief summer campaign, marched like the true soldiers they are to the armory amid the cheers of thousands upon thousands of enthusiastic Chicagoans. They marched straight to the armory where the iron doors shut them in from the surging crowds. Here, away up in the topmost gallery, a single cornet played "Home, Sweet Home," and "The Old Folks At Home." Tears came into the eyes of many of the brave soldier boys as they seemed, for the first time, to realize that at last they could sing:

"Home again, home again,
From a foreign shore."

Since the return of the regiment, many homes in Chicago have been made sad by the frequent deaths of the soldier boys. Near where we live a cultured widow lady, once in affluent circumstances, has been earning her livelihood and educating two fine looking boys. For nearly two weeks she has been anxiously waiting to hear from young Blake, her son, who was left behind on account of fever. This morning the papers announced his death. It was the first intimation the fond mother had received. Another boy seventeen years when he enlisted last spring could not hold his head up when he was brought home. This morning the papers announced his death. Not a day has passed since the brave volunteer regiment came home which has not chronicled several deaths among their ranks.

During the month of September the Christian Churches in Chicago have taken on new life and have entered seriously and enthusiastically upon the winter campaign "for Christ and the church." The ministers' meeting shave been largely attended. They now meet every Monday at the Palmer House, in parlor O. The subjects for discussion during the next three months will be on various phases of the Person of Christ. It promises to be a very thoughtful and profitable series of papers.

Brethren passing through Chicago and remaining in the city over Monday should not fail to attend these meetings. Last week John L. Brandt, pastor of the church at Valparaiso, where J. H. O. Smith had such a long and successful pastorate, read a paper on "Conscience." Those who passed favorable comments upon the paper spoke of the changed attitude by modern psychologists. Last Monday the writer read a paper on "The Importance of the Bible in a Symetrical Education."

Brother Brandt reported nine additions so far during the month of September to the church at Valparaiso. The pastor and his wife recently gave a reception to the members of the official board and their wives. Bro. Brandt was recently elected president of the district board of Northwestern Indiana. He reports a large attendance at the Normal School including five of our preachers, namely, Melnotte Miller, who preaches at Gate's Corners; W. L. Ross, who preaches all his time at Hammond, and three others. M. E. Bogarte makes an excellent Sunday-school superintendent and has 28 fine teachers under him.

The following are some of the preachers who were present at the ministers' meeting last Monday: George A. Campbell, W. B. Taylor, Charles C. Morrison, who has taken the pastorate of the Monroe Street Church, where his brother Hugh T. has been supplying through the summer; J. H. O. Smith; F. G. Strickland; Bruce Brown; C. W. Dean, a noble, energetic business man who is doing excellent preaching at Harvey, Ill.; J. S. Hughes, our recognized authority on the Apocalypse of St. John the Divine; F. Nelson Glover; H. J. Hill, whose fine physique is as robust as his abiding faith in our divine Master; Errett Gates; W. F. Shearer; A. Larrabee, the father of many missions in Chicago; E. W. Darst; Wm. Oeschger;——Kershner, and the writer. The West Side Church has had 99 additions since the first of February. They are planning for a thanksgiving service when the number reaches one hundred without waiting for a proclamation from the President. Their envelope collections now pay all expenses and enable them to accumulate a building fund. They expect to complete their building next summer. It will doubtless be the best building, when completed, owned by our brotherhood in Chicago. The fine foundations laid by Bro. John W. Allen will enable them to put up a fine superstructure. Bro. Brown has proved himself the right man in the right place. There have been 15 additions to the Union Christian Church in the last two weeks. Over $5,000 has been pledged for next year's work. J. H. O. Smith stands up excellently under what is doubtless the heaviest burden borne by any of our preachers in Chicago. W. S. Good will continue his work at Antioch, where we have a small membership, but with a good church building and no indebtedness. We have 38 members at Curnee, where C. B. Reynolds, a student at the University of Chicago from Virginia, is doing excellent work. The church at Joliet was organized about one year ago by Bro. Williams, a member of the West Side Church. Bro. Geo. T. Smith took hold of this little nucleus of a dozen members and by faithful and efficient preaching at a very meager compensation increased the number until they now have about 40 resident members. Bro. C. G. Brelos, who is pursuing graduate work in the University of Chicago Divinity School, has been preaching for them since the first of June. Brethern of Illinois, Joliet, a city of 40,000 inhabitants, and especially this noble struggling band of Disciples in the midst of that city, should not only have your sympathy, but substantial aid in Christian work.

The work of Hugh T. Morrison, of Des Moines, with the Monroe Street Church deserves special mention. He began his work the first Sunday in June and acted as supply until his brother Chas. C. of Perry, Iowa, assumed the pastorate. During his short ministry the church was encouraged and his preaching is spoken of in the highest terms. Even during the heated months the audiences steadily increased until the last day of his service the morning audience was larger than it had been for a long time. The Sunday-school attendance for that day was 203 and the Endeavor Society is again beginning to flourish. More than passing notice should be given to Evelyn Marston Gordon, one of our missionaries in the employ of the Foreign Society, who is pursuing the study of Sanscrit and other special studies at the University of Chicago. He was born in Bombay, India (where ArchDeacon Farrar was born), 1870. His people were Baptists for four generations and his grandfather was an English Baptist missionary. Even before he had ever heard of the Christian brotherhood, he would invariably call himself a Christian rather than a Baptist. He made the acquaintance of Morton D. Adams in Poona, seven years ago. At that time our mission station needed a supply and Bro. Gordon, though a Baptist then, was employed. His wife is a medical missionary and as a physician could make more than she and her husband are paid together, but "the love of Christ constraineth them." An illustration of the wide range of the University of Chicago library was manifested in the fact that Bro. Gordon found the Ramayan, the great epic poem of India, in the Hindi language which he speaks. It was an addition which he had never seen in India. Bro. Gordon entered the summer school of the University of Chicago expecting to attend one of our colleges during the winter, very probably Hiram, but the literature in the University along the line which would be especially beneficial to him in his work in India was so ample that he is thinking of planning another quarter at the University. His wife, who is now on the Atlantic, will soon join him.

Dr. H. L. Willett and family start for Europe early in October. Dr. Willett's wide circle of friends in and around the University will miss him. Dr. E. S. Ames, wife and son Van Meter are spending a few days in Chicago with Mr. and Mrs. Northup at Emlhurst. Prof. W. D. McClintock says the young man has high aims. The last I heard of him he was with his mother at Marshall Fields', shopping. We congratulate Dr. Ames and his good wife who have many friends in Chicago.

Mrs. O. A. Burgess, after spending two weeks in Chicago, has returned to Indianapolis. The Chicago trip benefited her, and we hope she will gradually gain her wonted strength. The writer and family leave for Virginia in a few days. This letter has been written at the C. W. B. M. headquarters in Indianapolis, where we found all well and busy. Miss Abbey Fields, one of the faithful office workers whose good mother recently went home to God, is again at her post.

C. A. YOUNG.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The residents of the capital city are now in high anticipation of the opening of the Library of Congress in the evenings after October 1. The magnificent resources of the library have not been available to most of our citizens because the building has been closed after office hours. The construction of this home of books was planned with a view of its use at night. It is fireproof. There is a complete electric plant. Each reading table has its lights, while access to the shelves is as easy as during the day. The night opening will necessitate the employment of an extra force of twenty-five persons. For these positions there are already two thousand applications on file. The old problem of placing a thousand pegs in a hundred holes is one with which Librarian John Russell Young is now wrestling. What makes the matter more difficult is the fact that some of the applicants most earnestly recommended by congressmen could be appropriately designated as "sticks" rather than pegs. Doubtless many of those selected will fit in the places assigned them, and for years to come will grow with the library. Among these new men may be found successors to such veterans as A. R. Spofford, the father of the library; David Hutchinson, chief of the reading-room; Louis Solyou, expert in languages, and James C. Strout, for thirty years employed in the copyright division.

Speaking of Mr. Strout reminds me that he has a fad. It has possessed him for twenty years, and has resulted in untold benefit, both intellectual and spiritual, to the youth of our city. This fad is the building up of a model Sunday-school library in the Assembly Presbyterian Church of this city. It is Mr. Strout's custom to take his stand near the door of the church on Sundays. Every member knows why he is there. As they pass, many a coin and sometimes bills are dropped into his hand. When funds received in this way have not sufficed he has given of his own salary. But his contributions of money have been insignificant in comparison to the brain work he has put into this enterprise. The result is a library of ome 5,000 volumes, probably the largest of its ind in the world. No effort has been made o have it big, but the aim has been to attain he highest standard of quality. Here may e found the products of the brightest minds—olumes of poetry, essays on science and natral arts, pages devoted to electricity and a escription of the many ways in which it is sed, volumes of sermons, biographies of nissionaries, statesmen and famous soldiers, istories of all nations and religions, volumes f encyclopædias, stories by America's best ction writers, etc. The relatives of this man f God need not trouble themselves about a nonument for him when he dies. He has built is own monument.

The opening of the library at night does not nean that this splendid institution is mainained chiefly for the benefit of the reading ublic of Washington. The preservation of iterature and historical data for future generations is the chief aim. Of great benefit to he future historian will be the scrapbooks ontaining notes of current events. In a recent nterview Librarian Young said:

"When Mr. Gladstone and Prince Bismarck ied I instructed our London agent to collect verything pertaining to them in the English, rench and German press. As soon as the naterial arrives it will be classified, indexed nd bound, and as such go on the library helves. It should be of value to the historian s covering so large a part of the history of Germany and England.

"The library is having the early history of he Klondike prepared from material sent by Mr. Brainerd, newspaper extracts, manucripts, maps and so on. As a rule it is never miss to send anything to the library. We eject nothing. The trash of to-day may be he classic of the next century.

"The other day I had a broadside containing proclamation of Jefferson Davis from the ress of the Richmond Enquirer mounted. We are ever on the lookout for literature of he Southern Confederacy. We hope to have he best collection of Confederate literature in he world. Whatever concerns America is welcome—and by this I mean Presidential campaign literature, Mormonism, anti-Masonry, Knownothingism, woman's rights, reconstruction, special religious developments, like the Campbellite movement—whatever pertains to the growth of American thought."

A gentleman who has collected eight hundred volumes on the subject of Mormonism has offered to sell them to the library. It is probable that the books will be purchased. If so, the future historian will have a better opportunity to write up Mormonism than what Mr. Young calls the "Campbellite movement." Members of the Bethany Reading Circle of the Ninth Street Church sought in vain at the library last winter for books helpful in the course of study. F. D. Power in the preparation of "Sketches of the Pioneers" has found the library of no practical value. As an illustration of the deficiency in this respect, there are none of the journals and religious publications of our people except one volume of the Christian Baptist, that of 1827; four volumes of the Millennial Harbinger and the Christian Standard for 1895. While lacking the older publications of our people, the library is well supplied with books published since the act of Congress requiring all copyrighted books to be represented in the library.

Edward Everett Hale in a recent number of the Outlook tells of Dr. John Gorham Palfrey, the hospitable and courteous gentleman who with his family made their home such a delightful resort for students at Cambridge sixty years ago. One of these students after a visit there one Sunday evening said, "Palfrey makes you think that you are the best fellow in the world—and, by Jove, he makes you think that he is the next best!" It is a great pleasure to endeavor to produce this impression. When I escort a visiting brother who happens to have written a book through the library I reserve the best for the last. Taking him into the reading room, which is the crowning glory of the whole edifice, I go to a clerk and write a few lines upon a blank application. As the clerk puts this in a leather pouch and the pouch in a pneumatic tube and touches a button, I explain how it has gone to the proper bookstack and the attendant there has been called to receive it. Presently a disc by the side of the button pressed shows white, which tells us that the attendant has received our application. In a few minutes the book-carrying apparatus dumps out a volume. An attendant brings it to us, and lo! it is the book which my friend himself has written, the offspring of his own brain, kept with the lore of the ages, preserved for the enlightenment of future generations. Nothing in the library pleases my friend so much as this.

De Omnibus Rebus.

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

I have just been reading your "Macatawa Musings," and they started me to musing a little on my own hook. I will give you the results for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, as a light reading during the hot weather may be acceptable to your readers who have not had the opportunity of visiting a summer resort during the scorching days through which we have been passing.

I was specially interested in your fishing experiences, but before I finished reading your account I felt really sorry for you. I could see that you were trying to work up a case that would look like you and Bro. Sweeney had done something worthy of being recorded. I thought, furthermore, that one could almost read between the lines a sort of free advertisement for "Cascade Springs," and consequently I felt it my duty to warn your readers against being seduced to the banks of "Thornapple Creek," with any hope that the "speckled beauties" will rise to every fly that is thrown to them. Anyway I protest a gainst catching these tame trout and then calling it sport. It is downright murder, and you and "Zack" Sweeney ought both to be tried and heavily fined for your unsportsmanlike conduct. I know that Bro. "Zack" is a "fish commissioner," and consequently he has a sort of pre-emption right to use his own methods in his own way. But I decidedly object to too much freedom being allowed even to a fish commissioner. It is like shooting quails when they are sitting in coveys. It won't do. I know Bro. "Zack's" failings as well as his good points. I fished with him in Palestine and Syria, and saw him land several old-fashioned Kentucky "suckers," and then pass them off upon the unsuspecting tourists for genuine trout! While doing so he would look out of the corner of his left eye at me and with a peculiar shrug of the shoulder he would seem to say, "People who know nothing about fishing deserve to be imposed upon whenever one feels disposed to do it!"

Now, I had an experience at fishing this summer. I was on the St. Lawrence, in the heart of the Thousand Islands. The fish are all wild there. There are no "trout ponds" where you can catch them by throwing salt on their tails; but the fish are corralled in the great rock piles which are to be found in numerous places along the river bed. There is not much difficulty in getting them to bite provided you understand how to tempt them. It must be remembered that the water is so clear that the fish may be easily seen many feet below the surface. This enables a scientific angler to "pick and choose." He does not need to lose his minnow with a rock bass, perch or some other undesirable "bait stealer." Nor need he fill up his basket with "small catch." All that is necessary is to throw your minnow to the fish you want to take in, and he immediately accommodates you by testing the quality of your line and your skill with the reel. Talk about sport! Bro. Garrison, you have not been in it. You have allowed that "fish commissioner" to fool you, and I have a half suspicion that your "catch" were chiefly suckers. Let me test your nerves a moment. Think of a hundred and fifty black bass—real wild ones—taken within three or four hours, and then think that these were only such as you selected, without disturbing the numerous "small fry" which clamored for your approval! Then think of bass for breakfast, bass for dinner, bass for supper, and a dream about bass all night! Why, Garrison, your fish story is tame—it's a real "back number."

Passing from fish to whales is not a very unnatural transition. Well, I had a whale experience during my last crossing from Liverpool to Boston. Not far from the banks of Newfoundland we came upon a school of whales which extended for several miles. Our ship passed very close to some of these, and one big fellow seemed to take us for a Spanish war vessel, and consequently with true loyalty to his American nationality he determined to investigate what it all meant. Anyway he "laid for us," and we ran our ship within ten feet of his tail, which he had evidently "planted" with the view of sinking us in case our colors were not right. Just at the crisis-moment he seemed to discover that we sailed the British flag, and then perhaps remembering the recent friendly relation between John Bull and Uncle Sam, he decided to give us the right of way without molestation. The passengers gave him a hearty cheer as he moved off in search of the enemy's fleet!

We also had an experience of icebregs, which was not altogether agreeable. We came into the region of about a hundred, and soon a Pleasant Dreams.

It does not lie in the painter's fancy to imagine a prettier picture than that of a young girl, with lips luscious with the promise of love, half parted in the smiles of happy dreamland. The mind of happy maidenhood is a clear and polished mirror, which, when the wits go wandering into the ghostland of dreams, reflects the impressions of waking hours. If those impressions are pleasant and painless and happy, she will smile in her sleep. If the impressions are those of a suffering woman, tortured with the special ailments to which the feminine organism is liable, the picture is spoiled by the lines of suffering and despondency. Maladies of this nature unfit a woman for joyous maidenhood and for capable motherhood. They incapacitate her to bear the burdens of life in any sphere of action. Household, marital and social duties alike are a burden to the woman who is constantly suffering from headaches, backaches, dragging sensations and weakening drains. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription positively, completely, unfailingly cures troubles of this nature. It imparts health, strength, vigor to the distinctly womanly organs. It fits for carefree, healthy maidenhood, happy wifehood and capable motherhood.

"I have a little step-daughter who had St. Vitus's Dance, which your medicine cured," writes Mrs. T. F. Boze, of Ford, Dinwiddie Co., Va. "I spent about twenty dollars for doctor's bills and medicine, and it did not do the child one cent's worth of good. We commenced giving Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and 'Golden Medical Discovery' and used three bottles of each, which cost only six dollars. Now the child is running around every where and is just as healthy as ever."

heavy fog settling upon us we were compelled to stop for about eighteen hours. During this time we found that we were between two vessels, and in front of us, not more than fifty feet away, was an iceberg. I am telling this story for the benefit of those who do not like the warm weather we have been having. Most of us would have preferred almost any kind of heat rather than the cold we experienced during the eighteen hours of our waiting.

Much of life is made up of extremes. We live by contrasts. I have reached the extreme end of my paper, so will close.

Yours for a real fish next summer,

W. T. MOORE.

[We are pained to see from the above that our distinguished brother failed to distinguish between the trout which were in the ponds and the bass that were wild as deer in Thorn Apple Creek. It was the latter we caught, not the former. Besides, an expert fisherman should have known that September is not the month for trout. Our Bible College Dean asks us to "think of a hundred and fifty black bass taken within three or four hours!" We are glad he does not ask us to believe that he did anything of the kind. He does not even claim that he did. He only asks us to think of it. That's easy!—EDITOR.]

The Churches and the State Universities.

BY EUGENE G. UPDIKE, D. D.

There is no more important question just now for the churches to consider than their relation to the state universities. This is especially true in the West, where state universities have had such a remarkable growth and where they assume so conspicuous a place in the matter of higher education. The articles which have appeared in the Advance recently have been timely. This question needs to be discussed in a fair way until some important facts are lodged in the consciousness of the churches. The question is not with us in the North-Middle states as to the respective merits of church and state schools; but as to the responsibility, if any, which the church has for the life of state universities. At present there is reason enough for all the higher institutions of learning conducted by both state and church. It is as much out of place to discuss the question of the right and duty of the state to establish higher institutions of learning as it is to discuss the question of the separation of church and state. State universities are here. They are logically the outgrowth of the common-school system. They are in most cases a great success. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been put into them. Some of them have as fine an equipment as money can buy. Their growth in the West has been about twenty-five times greater, for ten years past, than the growth of church schools. They are free to all classes. They are universities in the real sense, covering the widest possible range, and they are here to stay. They are attended more largely by young people from Christian homes than by any other class. In the University of Wisconsin 57 and one-half per cent. of the students are members of evangelical churches.

It is not a theory, then, that confronts us, but a condition. The state cannot teach religion, and we do not want it to. It can invest its millions for intellectual culture, and the church can supplement its work.

The separation of church and state was not a mistake. Christianity must now do its work by influences. It does not need to have organic connection with an institution to Christianize it. If the churches can do nothing to help in the religious life of our state universities because they are not organically related, then they can do nothing for the state or the municipality. They can do nothing for any interest outside of themselves, and the kingdom of God must be simply commensurate with the church. Christianity is a failure if it cannot go beyond the church. This is the narrowest and falsest interpretation of it.

Prof. Merrell, referring to the address of President Adams, says: "The appeal to the churches is to gather around in some well-defined fashion and toss loaves of the bread of life over the university fences. This will hardly satisfy the sound sense of a Christian people." This is not a fair or true statement of the case. If the loaves the churches have to give are stale—formulated statements of a traditional theology, and not an expression of the life and experience of to-day—they would have to be thrown over the fence if they found their way into a modern university; but if they are true statements of the living gospel of Christ, they will be most gladly received.

He says further, "The appeal is not to endow chairs of Christian evidence in the universities; neither to build chapels and Christian society halls on the university grounds; neither again to preach gospel sermons therein, nor to teach the truths of the Christian Bible." But this is exactly what the appeal is, not, perhaps, to do it in university buildings, but to do it in conjunction with the university, where it may be just as effective.

The appeal of the friends of the University of Wisconsin is for money to build a Christian Association hall on ground owned by the Association and most admirably located. The appeal is for representative men of the church to speak in this hall exactly as they would do in any church school. Each denomination ought every year to furnish a course of lectures by some of its best men on great Christian themes. Each denomination ought to establish a religious centre for its own students, and place in the field a man whose business it should be to teach the Bible to students in the light of the learning and experience of to-day. If such a man were the intellectual equal of the professor in the university, and had great spiritual power, he could do incalcuable good. Studies taken under such a leader, if thoroughly done, could be substituted for other work in the university as its intellectual equivalent.

There is no wall about any of our state institutions to shut out true religious influence. Christianity does not depend on decisions of the Supreme Court for an opportunity to do its work. It can go wherever there is need, or the men that profess it are at fault.

Suppose some man of wealth were to endow a ladies' hall in connection with some great state university, placing in charge of it one or two wise spiritual leaders who could give special attention to the religious culture of young women, is there any reason why the work could not be as thorough as in any girls' school, and why, at the same time, all of the intellectual advantages of the university might not be secured? The same could be accomplished by endowing dormitories for young men. The religious supervision could be as direct and thorough as in any church school.

Mansfield College loses nothing of its distinctive power by being at Oxford; but gains all there is in such an atmosphere, and at the same time has corresponding influence on the ministry. A Christianity that is afraid of becoming secularized by coming in contact with the institutions of the state is a poor copy of the real thing, and would be quickly repudiated by Christ if he were here.

Professsor Merrell quotes some Unitarian as saying that the state universities are fine fields for liberalism, which illustrates the very point. Unitarianism has had the good sense to see the importance of such strategic fields and has been in the habit of putting its missionary money into churches located at university centers, and helping in their support. If Congregationalism is to be felt here, let it do the same. The last canvass in the University of Wisconsin revealed the fact that there were more students who gave their membership and church preference as Congregational than there were Congregational students in both of the colleges of that denomination in the state. Is it good Christian sense to ignore such a fact as this, leaving it wholly to the local church to care for this most important work, while those who ought to be in better business are standing off—talking about secularizing education and doing not one thing in this particular field to Christianize it? Is it according to the methods of Christ to say to those who need help, "Come where we are and accept what we have to give, out of a spoon made in our particular fashion, or go elsewhere and look out for yourselves?"

Twelve state university presidents came together recently for a conference, and they represented fifty thousand students. A large proportion of them were out of Congregational families. What are we going to do about it—quibble about whether the state has a right to care for the higher education, or go where they are and help them all we can?

I undertake to say this is the greatest unoccupied field to-day before the churches. A college is not to be measured by the number of students that go into the ministry. There is quite as much need for Christian lawyers and doctors and men of science as for clergymen. The kingdom of God will come when the whole social organism is spiritualized.

Congregationalism has been the great pioneer in education. It has done and is still doing magnificent work. But it must be broad enough to see that its responsibility is not limited to its own schools. It should be the first to make itself felt at these great state educational centers. More and more its young men and women will go where there is the best equipment, and it must go after them and care for their religious culture wherever they are.

When the presidents and faculties and regents of such institutions are saying, "We

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral Cures Coughs

"My wife was suffering from a dreadful cough. We did not expect that she would long survive, but Mr. R. V. Royal, deputy surveyor, happened to be stopping with us over night, and having a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral with him, induced my wife to try this remedy. The result was so beneficial that she kept on taking it till she was cured."
R. S. HUMPHRIES, Saussy, Ga.

"My little daughter was taken with a distressing cough, which for three years defied all the remedies I tried. At length, on the urgent recommendation of a friend, I began to give her Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. After using one bottle I found to my great surprise that she was improving. Three bottles completely cured her."

want your help,'' we cannot make our religion a thing to command the highest respect if we do not respond. A president of a Southern state university, himself a clergyman, said to me: ''I am forced to believe that there are some church people who do not want state university work Christianized. It seems to put them in a position of inconsistency, if this is accomplished, and they refuse to believe that such a thing can be done, or to help in doing it.'' Let us hope the number is very limited. The day will come when the denomination that is not in the forefront of this work will feel disgraced.—The Advance.

Memorial of A. F. H. Saw.

A. F. H. Saw was born in London, June 2, 1865. He had a Christian training through his mother from childhood. When about thirteen or fourteen years of age she became anxious about his salvation, and although he could never look back and tell the day he he decided for Christ, he knew that about that time he became a Christian. He was an earnest worker in the Band of Hope, and early in his Christian life became a soul-winner. When about fifteen years old he went one night to hear Gen. Booth and sat in the gallery; when the invitation was given to reconsecrate themselves to God, the General looked up and, although not knowing Mr. Saw, said: ''Zacheus, come down!'' It seemed to him like a voice from God, and like one in a dream he came down and gave himself to God for service. Soon he informed his parents and received from them their consent to become a missionary, and shortly after he entered the Baptist Church. All through his Christian life his strong conscientious nature and gentle, loving disposition were the prominent features of his character. He had entered an architect's office and was a most successful student, making it also a point during these years to try and turn those in business to Christ. One day going up to London he noticed a young man reading his Bible, as he was also doing; this led to their becoming acquainted, and it turned out to be the late Mr. Hearnden's brother. He informed Mr. Saw that there was a training class for missionaries to be started in his church and he invited him to join. He did so and in a year or so it resulted in his being appointed, on a month's notice, to China. At the age of 21 he landed in China.

On Sept. 26, 1891, he was married to Miss Ella Funk.

While home on furlough he had an opportunity to study for two years under Dr. Legge, at Oxford, and although he was heard to say that it was one of the greatest self-denials of his life to give up this opportunity, his love for the work and for souls in China led him to give it up feeling, as he often said, that he would rather the Lord found him in China than at Oxford when he returned.

His last public testimony was praise to God for sending him to China and giving him love for these Chinese; real love for them, so that it was a pleasure to work with them. His last saying at the convention was, ''Brethren, it is a grand thing to have divine forgiveness, and a beautiful and noble thing to forgive.'' His avorite Bible portions were the 103rd psalm, the 15th of First Corinthians and the 8th of Romans. He said once, if every portion of Scripture had to be taken from him, he would ask to keep the 8th of Romans.

After his death we found the following prayer written the 11th of May, six days besore his death: ''O, Heavenly Father, thou knowest all about thy servant, and why this sickness has come upon him, thou art full of pity and dost not willingly afflict the children of men, Thou knowest also my many duties at this convention; dear Father, look down upon thy little child. However, dear Lord, 'though thou slay me I will trust thee.' I would not dictate to thee, but claim and receive what I believe thou hast in store for me. I believe! Help thou my unbelief and magnify thy great name and the name of Jesus, for his sake.''

We have met here to-day, my Christian friends, to render a tribute of respect to the memory of a fellow-laborer, a constant and intimate friend, a beloved brother in Christ whom God our Father has taken unto himself; what shall this tribute be? The words we may be able to speak can but feebly express the sorrow that fills our breast that we shall see his face no more in this life, or the joy that lifts us up as our faith lays hold of the promises of a triumphant meeting in the life to come. It is a glorious thought that we sorrow not as those that have no hope.

How black the blackness of that night into which no light of hope comes! How unspeakably good the loving kindness and tender mercy that can dispel the darkness of the blackest hour that the enemy of the race is capable of sending upon human hearts!

As we meet here to-day, in the shadow of this great sorrow, we call upon our souls and all that is within us to bless his holy name for the solace of his Word, the comfort of his love, and the joy of his salvation. This service, then, is a service of love.

We lay him away tenderly and we strew upon his tomb evergreens and roses. We fain would have heard that always sincere and tender response to those who did him a kindness, but the sealed lips have ceased to respond and our joy is the memory of what has hung upon them in the days gone by.

We think of him this day, and what are the memories that come in upon us this day? I have known him for nearly eleven years. Shall I say intimately? Yes, for he was one of us. In business scrupulously honest; in his work most unselfish and thoroughly in earnest; in his private life constantly in communion with God; in his public work so full of love for souls that this was a theme upon which he dwelt continually. Were I to sum up in one short statement what comes to me as an epitome of his character I should express it in these words: ''A man of God, who loved his fellowmen and gave himself for them for Jesus' sake.'' When my time to go from this sphere of labor comes, I crave no more glorious epitaph upon my tomb than that which I could thus sincerely inscribe upon the monument of my brother Saw.

The character of Bro. Saw was one which it is soothing to remember. It comes over the mind like the tranquilizing breath of spring. It asks no embellishment, it would be injured by a strained and labored eulogy. All the elements of a noble character were tempered in him kindly and happily. He passed through the storms, tumults and collisions of human life with a benignity akin to that which marked his Guide and Exemplar. This mild temper spread itself over the whole man. His manners, his understanding, his piety, all received a hue from it just as a soft atmosphere communicates its own tranquil character to every object and scene viewed through it.

With his peculiar mildness he united firmness. His purposes, while maintained without violence, were never surrendered but to conviction. His opinions, though defended with singular candor, he would have sealed with his blood. His piety had struck through and entwined itself with his whole soul. In the freedom of conversation I have seen how intimately God was present with him, but his piety partook of the general temperament of his mind. It was warm, not heated; earnest, but tranquil; a habit, not an impulse; the air which he breathed; not a tempestuous wind, giving an occasional violence to his emotions.

A constant dew seemed to distill on him from heaven, giving freshness to his devout sensibilities, but it was a gentle influence, seen, not in its falling, but in its fruits. He felt strongly that God had crowned his life with peculiar goodness, and yet, when his blessings were withdrawn or withheld, his acquiesence was as deep and sincere as his thankfulness.

His firm and abiding faith in God as his Father and Jesus Christ as his Savior were marked in every detail of even his social life. He could not look upon frivolity or idle words with any degree of allowance. With him everything said and everything done must savor of Christ and the Word of his grace; so characteristic of him that his opinions had become in some measure a standard, so to speak, among his most intimate friends.

No one ever doubted sincerity in any advice he gave or any deed he performed. One thing may be safely said of him in his relations to the natives: he loved them with all the ardency of his consecrated soul. No sacrifice was too great for him to make for them, and when his life went out from among them they lost a friend, a true brother, whose place will be exceedingly difficult to fill.

What shall I say of his peculiar love for children? None of us have forgotten how he always had a word for them when he had charge of the public services. His peculiar love of little children was a faithful index to the simple and genuine love which filled his soul.

I read a number of letters from his parents; I think I can understand where many of his beautiful characteristics had their origin. His home must have been a model home. Simple trust, abounding love, abiding faith—homes with such pillars for their support produce such men as our Brother Saw. The mission of which he was a member feel that they have suffered an almost irreparable loss. God knows best; we shall submit and bless the hand that holds the rod.

I shall never forget his last words to me. Only the day before it was announced that he had that most malignant disease I saw that he was struggling, oh so hard, to throw off the spell that bound him. I asked him how he was getting on; the response was, "I am reaching forth unto those things that are before." I did not think so much at that time as I have since of the strength of those encouraging words of Paul. What was there in the present to one in the embrace of such a terrible disease, if it were not for the things that are before? What could give such an one courage but this hope? There is life and joy and peace in such an hope.

What can I say to those so near whom he has left to mourn his departure? The life he led is more to them than any form of encouragement, couched in words, could possibly be. There is not a single doubt in their minds that he this day joins in the chorus of praise around the great white throne.

He was certainly a grand young man. Would that God would send us many such to this and all mission fields; strong in body, fervent in spirit, loving and faithful in every good work. He was a combination of all the finer qualities that the human race possesses; he was a specimen of a true English gentleman; of a Christian gentleman as we Americans have learned to know them; a gentleman in all circumstances, under all places and trials. He was fond of all that was good, all that was beautiful and true. What overcame and subdued all other fine tendencies of his being was his true Christian spirit. Whereby, when called to his attention, he immediately devoted himself to the service of the Lord in a true and living consecration, which has resulted in ten or more years of the beautiful life among us.

Ogden, Utah.

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Lately I received a letter from a sister in Atchison, Kas., containing money for pledges that she and two others had made to John L. Brandt when he was traveling and soliciting funds to build a meeting house in Ogden, Utah. She stated that the delay in paying the pledges was due in part to negligence and partly because she did not know to whom to send the money until she saw my name as pastor of the church.

Beyond doubt there are hundreds of dollars pledged and unpaid by brethren of financial standing. Times have been hard, in many places crops have been poor, they have not had the address of Ogden brethren and the matter has been neglected. Lately crops and prices have been good, money is easier, they have my address and that of John T. Hurst, treasurer, and it is desired that these pledges be paid immediately. They are for small amounts, were made in Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri and other states.

We have a $1,200 lot on a principal street in the city paid for and about $700 in cash. If balance of pledges were paid, then with the amount that could be raised here, we could build at pleasure.

At present we use the Congregational church in union work free of rent. It is suitable and well located. We move along harmoniously in all lines of work. They were not in condition to secure and keep a pastor and came to us saying: "You furnish the minister, we will furnish the house and we will work together." This was very kind in them and greatly to our advantage. In the past nine years we have not been so well situated. This is a difficult field, but in this we have an open door and success is attending our labors in interest and additions nearly every week. There are no restrictions and we preach and conduct services as if the work was entirely our own. We use our lesson papers and their Sunday-school papers. There is harmony and good will in the C. E., Junior C. E., Aid Societies and elsewhere during the five past months.

This is all good while it continues, but in time we shall need a church home of our own, and now call on brethren who have pledged assistance to kindly pay. Will ministers and church officers urge this where Bro. Brandt secured pledges? The Woman's Board aids this church.

In His name,
J. H. BAUSERMAN.

Louisiana Convention.

The state convention, which was held at Cheneyville Sept. 1-5, was a marked advance in both attendance and enthusiasm over the convention of last year. The few Discipies of Louisiana are getting better organized and more determined on aggressive work than ever before. The perfect cloud of discouragements which has so long enveloped them is shifting, and there is a spirit of hopefulness which means much for the future. Our greatest need at this time is that of preachers—earnest, active men, who would carry with them to the work the spirit of missions.

Cheneyville, where our late convention was held, is near the central part of the state and is in one of the richest sections of the South. Bro. Campbell, on one of his tours in the interest of Bethany, visited Cheneyville and preached a few sermons in the elegant brick church which had not long been completed. At that time the congregation of Disciples numbered two hundred—one hundred whites and one hundred servants—who in worship occupied opposite sides of the building.

During the Civil War the church went down, and for many years there was no regular preaching. For the past year J. B. Cole has had charge of the work and has done much to revive it and give it permanency. He is much beloved by his membership and the entire community. The writer has recently located at Shreveport, one of the points where the work was established this year. At present our membership is small and poor, and we are forced to begin in a small way. Shreveport is the second city of Louisiana, and a thriving place. Many immigrants are coming in and the city boundaries had to be enlarged recently. Being located on high hills and very healthful, many Northern people prefer it as a home to the low country in the southern part of the state. It is certainly a fine location for the energetic business man who has some money to invest. The commercial future of Shreveport and its location is such as to make it very important to get the cause firmly established here at an early date, and the earnestness and zeal of our little membership is prophetic of success.

Railroad Rates.

The Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River has granted a rate of one and one-third fare, round trip, to the gateways of the Central Association, on the Certificate plan, to the Chattanooga Convention, Oct. 13-21, 1898.

Those coming from the Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River will pay full fare to the gateway of the Central Traffic Association, and from there will get round-trip tickets to Chattanooga and return, at the rate of one fare for the round trip. When you pay full fare take a certificate for the same, and after having it signed at Chattanooga you will be returned from the gateway at which it was purchased to your home for one-third fare.

Please notice that those coming from the Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River purchase tickets twice, one at the home station for which they will take a certificate, and the second at the point where they reach the bounds of the Central Traffic Association, where they will buy round-trip tickets at the one-fare rate.

Our convention at Chattanooga promises to be the most interesting in all our history. Preparations have been making for months that it shall be the strongest Convention we have ever held. The brethren at Chattanooga have had it on their hearts the entire year, and have made the most ample preparations for the successful entertainment of this Convention.

In behalf of the Boards we desire to extend the invitation for a general gathering of the loyal Disciples of our Lord and Savior. Let us say in our hearts, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of our Lord."

Come to the Convention at Chattanooga, October 13th to 21st, 1898.

History of Hiram College.

PART III.—THE NEW HIRAM.

From 1867 to 1886 Hiram struggled along contending with that difficulty of most small Ohio colleges—the lack of money. The want of proper buildidgs was a serious drawback in this period, but buildings alone do not make schools and Hiram's teachers made the little college a power at home and abroad. Pres. B. A. Hinsdale's well-known ability and scholarship carried the name of Hiram far and wide during the twelve years of his administration. It is common to speak of the college after 1886 as the new Hiram, although the adjective really denotes no change in the aims and spirit of the school. It denotes, rather, the impetus given to the institution by friends who about this time came forward with much-needed financial help. This help was made apparent first in the new college building already mentioned.

President Zollars began a vigorous administration in the fall of 1888. Possessed of the administrative and executive faculty so desirable in the college president of the present day, he began at once to enlist the churches of the Disciples in wider sympathy with Hiram. The result of his efforts were soon seen both in the college and its environment. Although Hiram had always aimed to afford some ministerial education, yet Pres. Zollars gave to this work a special emphasis without destroying, however, the other long-standing features of the school.

In 1888-'9 the college presented four standard courses of study, viz., classical, philosophical, ministerial and scientific. To these were added a legal course and a medical course in 1893. In 1891 a short literary course of four years and a ministerial course of the same length were added to the curriculum, and these were soon followed by a short legal and a short medical course. These four-year courses have been of great service to the college in enlisting students who commencing with them have been led to undertake and complete some one of the longer courses. Several special courses were added also from time to time after 1886 for the benefit of teachers of ministerial students whose time and means were limited, and for those who desired further work after graduation.

The attendance of the college gradually increased, the enrollment by term growing from 443 in 1887-'8 to 1,015 in 1897-'8.

The strengthening of the college courses and increased attendance of Hiram called for greater teaching force, and Prof. E. B. Wakefield was called to the chair of law and political science in 1890; Miss Cora M. Clark to the chair of modern languages in 1891; A. W. Skidmore to the chair of English in 1893; Dr. H. M. Page to the chair of medicine in 1894; Hugh McDiarmid to the chair of New Testament introduction and Christian doctrine in 1896; E. E. Snoddy was made assistant professor of Greek in 1896-'7 and has since been elevated to the rank of full professor, and E. J. Smith was made assistant professor of mathematics in 1896-'7. Other teachers were also added in nearly all the departments. Prof. Campbell became the head of the business department, but resigned after an administration of two or three years and was succeeded by Prof. S. W. Pearcy, who left us last summer to take a school in Michigan, C. G. Phillips being now in charge of the department. In 1888 Miss Addie Zollars (now Mrs. Page) took charge of the music department, and after a few years she gave up the work and was succeeded by Prof. Harshman, and he by Mrs. Lulu F. Pearcy. In 1897 the Hiram Musical Conservatory was established and Prof. Eugene Feuchtinger, formerly of Bethany College, placed at its head.

The rapid development of Hiram called also for other and better facilities for taking care of the students. In 1889 another large and commodious hall, since known as Miller Hall, was built. In the same year the boarding hall which had been opened in 1879 was remodeled and a large addition built to its front. This hall was christened Bowler Hall, owing to the munificent assistance of Mr. Wm. Bowler, of Cleveland. This gentleman, together with his friend, Mr. Abram Teachout, of the same city, has been highly instrumental in aiding all the recent improvements in Hiram. In 1893 a music hall was added to Hiram's other buildings and 1896 saw the completion and occupation of the beautiful structure known as the Y. M. C. A. Building. This edifice with its excellent equipment is justly the pride of Hiram. The village soon began to show the influence of the rapid development of the college. The means for reaching it from the railroad stations at Hiram Station and Garrettsville were greatly improved. In 1890 the former place, generally known as Jeddo, was improved by the addition of a side track and a new station house, thus transforming it from a little country crossing to a station of some dignity. An excellent pike road was built to this station in 1892 and the following year another was built to Garrettsville. Pres. Zollars succeeded in having a regular hack line established to both places, and excellent hacks now run regularly, meeting every one of the eight passenger trains that stop at Hiram or Garrettsville.

Private residences were built very rapidly in the village in this decade. Almost all of these were of modern style and has added greatly to the appearance of the village and to its greater facilities for accommodating students. The crowning glory of the village improvements, however, is the excellent system of waterworks, completed in 1897, and now in full operation. By this system Hiram village is supplied with pure, clear spring water in great abundance for every purpose. An electric light plant was established in 1892 and the streets lighted by electricity. These improvements followed for the most part upon the incorporation of the village. P.

How to Make the Bethany C. E. Reading Circle Go.

What pastor has not been grieved by lack of loyalty among church members? Going along with this absence of loyalty and causing it, is lack of information and conviction. Supply a knowledge of the gospel, of mission fields, missionaries and missionary enterprise, of the history and distinctive teaching of our people and the most formidable mountain facing the pastor is "removed and cast into the sea." Many pastors who recognize the value of a course of study like the Bethany course, yet organize no reading circles. Why not? Faith, a plan and energy are required. Have you faith to undertake the proper edification of the church, and begin the removal of this "mountain," now that the summer vacation is over?

Have you a plan so that your people may set about doing what most of them will at once admit should be undertaken? Are you willing to supply this energy to push to success your plan?

"The Bethany Course would meet an urgent need in our congregation. But how can we get our people to undertake and make successful a reading circle?" say many pastors.

1. BEGIN RIGHT.—As antecedents to organization I shall name first some "don'ts and then some "do's."

Don't "go it blind," or "feel your way," or "be governed by circumstances." Set clearly before you what will be done. Don't urge a work without giving a plan of doing it. Depend not upon the plan, but upon persons, particularly the "first person, singular."

After the proposal and endorsement of the plan don't wait for volunteers to take the initiative. Have some one pledged to take it or move at once yourself.

Make a preparatory canvass. Don't depend upon public announcement only to make things go. Make a canvass (a) to show the people the relation of the Bethany course of study to the healthy growth and effectiveness of the congregation; (b) to make apparent the advantage of a good course of study, wisely supervised, over haphazard forays into literature in chance direction; (c) to take into counsel those most ready to help and give a chance to volvnteer without pressure; (d) to secure a list of persons pledged to support the enterprise.

Awaken interest by a brief series of sermons on related topics embraced in the handbooks. Make frequent, definite, detailed announcement of the work proposed, and of meeting for organization. Exhibit the interest of others by announcement by proxy.

Previous to organization, through a period of three weeks, bear on this line in your church paper, in the Sunday-school, in the Endeavor meeting, in public, in private, in session, etc. Be patient. Interest is usually a slow growth, rarely a sudden creation.

2. ORGANIZING.—Be careful in launching. Do not allow the management to be delivered into incompetent hands. Have no figureheads. The existence of each officer and every committee should be made known by their work. Assign much work. Supervise all work assigned. Follow up all workers until the last one has reported on the last item of work assigned him. Be shy of plans that do not individualize responsibility. The lecture-teacher does all the work, but he kills the class.

Have frequent meetings. Once a week will secure a better attendance than once a month. Have a fixed night. Do not move your night up or down the week to avoid other things. Begin and close on time. See to it that the nature of the work and the obligations of membership are well understood at the beginning.

3. HOW KEEP GOING.—Frequently, and in a variety of ways, bring the work of the course to the attention of the congregation. Once in three months the circle members may present the quarter's accumulation of knowledge and enthusiasm at the evening service. Omit the preaching. Have five or ten-minute addresses and special music. Exhaust all available ingenuity to put variety into the meetings. One evening a catechism, another a contest, another brief talks on assigned topics, another a lecture by outside talent, etc. Make frequent reference to the supplementary reading matter. Sustain interest in the work of the circle by a perennial effort to add names to the membership roll M. J. GRABLE.

Notes and News.

The dedication of the rebuilt house of worship of the Christian Church at Thornton, Ind., occurred on last Sunday. The sermons of the day were preached by L. Brown, of Frankfort, Ind.

A church wanting a good pulpit man and pastor should address Bro. J. P. Davis, 605 South Fourteenth St., Terre Haute, Ind.

A young minister of Eureka, Ill. desires to correspond with churches within a radius of 100 to 150 miles of Eureka, Ill., that are in need of a preacher. Will preach all or part of his time. Address box 379, Eureka, Ill.

Hon. Hale Johnson is announced to speak at Christian Tabernacle, Decatur, Ill., next Sunday night, Oct. 9. The pastor of this church, Geo. F. Hall, claims that they have the largest Sunday evening audiences outside of Chicago and the largest choir in America except the Mormon Temple, Salt Lake City, and the Baptist Temple, Philadelphia.

On a postal card from W. H. Kendall, Storm, Lake, Ia., he says: "Closed my three years' pastorate here. Church grew from 40 to 160 during this time, also mission point of 40 established at Alta. Church has built and paid for its church home. Expenses for coming year are provided for and Elder Clark Batemen, of Cromwell, Ia., called to the pastorate, beginning Oct. 1. I go to Irvington, Ind., to take post-graduate work at Butler. Am ready to supply churches in that region."

Ashland, Oregon.

I am located here as pastor of the little church here, lately reorganized by Bro. J. B. Leister, state evangelist. We shall proceed to build a house of worship soon. This is a fine opening for a church. Ashland is 1,900 feet above the tide and is beautifully located for scenery and blessed with fine climate and water. Land is very cheap here, no better place can be found for a home. J. F. Tout.

Kansas City, Missouri.

I have been in West Side Christian Church, Kansas City, seven weeks. During this time ten have been added to the church. Our C. E. holds the banner for best per cent. of attendance at Local Union meeting. All lines of work are growing. B. M. Easter, Pastor.

To Whom it May Concern.

Any one knowing of a good place, a town of some size to warrant the establishment of a mission, please address as below; also, any one desiring to help the cause of city missions can send it to the address below. Any one desiring mission meetings in Eastern Ohio can write me. Rev. J. W. Myers,

State Superintendent City Missions.

Homeworth, Ohio, Box 36.

Illinois Endeavorers.

The twelfth annual state convention of the Illinois Christian Endervor Union will be held at Peoria, October 6-9, 1898. Ministers and Endeavorers among the Disciples of Christ should take note of this and plan to be present. We should have a larger representation than ever before. The convention city is in a region where our people are strong. The program is a good one and the Disciples are well represented by some of our strongest men. The logic of our plea for union should lead us to co-operate heartily in these conventions. Leslie W. Morgan, Illinois Supt. C. E., Disciples of Christ.

Atlanta, Ill.

Dedication.

Sept. 11th I dedicated a new church at Spring Creek, Ind. The church is an elegant brick building. About two hundred dollars more than was needed was raised in about thirty minutes. This makes eight churches that I have dedicated within a radius of one hundred miles. My next meeting will be at Fort North, Tex. Bro. A. O. Hunsaker is my singer, and I have never had a better worker. We can be secured for meetings after Dec. 1st. J. V. Coombs.

District Convention.

The eighth district convention, at its recent meeting, Sept. 4-6, elected I. A. J. Parker, of Vienna, for its president, and J. H. Stark, of DuQuoin, corresponding secretary for the ensuing year. The convention glowed with the fervor of evangelism and closed its sessions in a white heat of enthusiasm. The executive board took immediate steps to push the work of evangelism in the district. Elder Parker was requested to travel through the territory, hold meetings and arrange for pastors to pastorless congregations, and in every way to strengthen the weak churches. He is to cooperate with the corresponding secretary and evangelist of the S. I. C. M. C. in all things helpful to the work.

Preliminary arrangements were made for holding a preachers' institute next year during the hot season. It will be held at Metropolis City. Bro. J. F. McCartney, of that city, generally volunteering to provide places of entertainment.

The next convention of the eighth district is to be held at Benton.

W. Bedall.

Indiana Convention.

Fifth district Indiana Christian missionary society convened at Markle, Sept. 18th, and continued over Lord's day. The convention was a grand success from beginning to end. Much interest was manifest, and an earnest determination to push the work of the district was the single thought of every one.

A very interesting program had been arranged, and though one or two of our speakers disappointed us, their places were very acceptably filled by those who were present.

Bro. Rice, of Ft. Wayne, our district president, a man never behind time and one who is always up to date in every good work, was ou hand and opened the first service of the convertion.

Among the preaching brethren present were Bros. E. Wilfley, of Wabash; C. E. Wells, of Huntington; P. J. Rice, of Ft. Wayne; Bro. Stanley, of Marion; Prof. Adams, of Ft. Wayne; E. D. Long, of Huntington; Bro. Aspey, Bro. Goodykoontz and Bro. Harris. Also, Bro. Legge was with us and made the Sunday evening address.

The special work of the district for the year is the establishment of a church at Bluffton.

The district evangeltst, assisted by J. H. Dodd as singer, conducted a two weeks' meeting at Bluffton which resulted in opening up the work for our people. Terms were agreed upon by which we became the possessors of the Universalist Church property, one of the best located properties in the city.

The good people of Markle did their part in a very admirable way. The church at Markle is wide awake and up to date in every good work. This church under the management of Bro. Goodykoontz has had a wonderful growth during the present year, and with the unanimity that is very apparent between pastor and people, the outlook for the future is very bright.

The missionary and progessive spirit among the people of the fifth district is growing and in the coming years we expect to accomplish much for the Master.

Zach. A. Harris, Sec.

Springfield (Tenn.) Convention.

The county meeting of the Disciples of Christ in Robertson county, Tenn., met with the Springfield Christian church, Sept. 24, 25. This was the first meeting of the kind ever held in Robertson county. The meeting was well attended and proved in every way a successful and delightful gathering. A most interesting program was rendered. Bros. Ellis and Reynolds, from Nashville, and Bro. Myhr, the state evangelist, was with us and contributed largely to our program. The field reports were most excellent. Within the last 18 months two congregations have been organized and our membership increased 140 per cent. A most promising feature of our work in this county is its growth among the young people. The outlook is bright for the future.

Wisconsin Convention.

The state convention of the Church of Christ and Foreign and American Missionary Society was largely attended the past week. The representatives from abroad were numerous, among whom were J. H. Berkey, from Monroe, one of the best orators in the state. President McNeil, from Milwaukee, who presided with gentle dignity throughout the meeting, winning numerous friends by his conservative, Christian manner. C. C. Smith, of Cincinnati, enthused the audience with his vivid description of the Jamaica Islands, and his sermon, "America for Christ," and the sermon by Prof. Galpin, of Waupun, was appreciated by all. The description of Foreign Mission Work by E. W. Gordon, a native of India, whose commanding appearance and more especially his address won him friends. Dr. Butchart, who has labored for seven years with heathen China, also Miss Ada Boyd, seventeen years a missionary in India; Mrs. Helen E. Moses, of Indianapolis, Ind., president Christian Woman's Board of Missions; Mrs. E. W. Lucker and Mrs. Hanson, of Milwaukee; Miss Ida Lown, of Waupun; State Superintendent D. G. Wagner, West Lima; S. J. Phillips, of Sugar Grove; Miss Meta Monroe, of Monroe and Mrs. E. M. Pease, of Richland Center; president of C. W. B. M. and E. Barstow, of Werley, were among the earnest and capable workers present. There were others whose names we have not learned.

The delegates were unanimous in their praise of Pardeeville's hospitality, and we feel it is well they were here. Ida A. Tripp.

Who Will Support an Orphan Child?

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions have made arrangements for the opening of an orphanage at Deoghur, India. Dr. Olivia A. Baldwin, who did such efficient service in India for five years as a medical missionary, will go back to that country this fall to take charge of this new orphange. Seventy-six girls who were probably saved from death by starvation by the British Government in one of its orphanages that is now closed have been given to our missionaries. They have been taken care of for some time by the missionaries of the Foreign Society at Damoh, but will now be removed to Deoghur.

As the C. W. B. M. is unable to make an appropriation from its general fund for the maintenance of these children, it is hoped that arrangements can be made at once for their support by individuals or societies in this country. It will cost but thirty dollars per year to provide for the necessities of each of these children. A child will be assigned to parties to support for one year, a term of years, or until it becomes self-supporting, as it may be desired. If those thus "adopting" a child find themselves unable to continue its support they are privileged to give up the work by giving three months' notice to the executive committee of the C. W. B. M.

There are persons in almost every one of our churches whom God has made stewards over much of his bounty, who could each support one of these children, and who would be richly blessed in so doing. In thousands of our churches the sisters are not organized for missionary work, and are doing little or nothing toward sending the gospel to those who have not heard it; they should gladly avail themselves of this opportunity to do an effective work for missions. Ladies' Aid Societies, King's Daughters' Circles, Sunday-schools, Sunday-school classes and other organizations should assist this work. Those who cannot raise all that is needed to support a child can provide one-half or one-third the amount necessary.

These children are already an expense to our missionaries. As Oct. 1st begins a new missionary year, we greatly desire to assign the children and have them supported from that date. If you are willing to help in this work please write me at once. MATTIE POUNDS.

Springfield (Ill.) News.

We observe one Sunday in each month as "Decision Day," at which time the claims of the gospel upon non-Christians are especially emphasized. Eleven were added to the church at regular services during September. We observed the 65th anniversary (1832-1898) of the Springfield church Sunday, Oct. 2nd. At the morning services, besides other interesting features, the five elders of the church each made five-minute speeches. In the evening the pastor delivered a lecture on Alexander Campbell.

Remember that a special car from Springfield, Illinois, will start Wednesday night, Oct. 12th, 7 P. M., for Chattanooga, arriving there Thursday night, 7 P. M., by the way of Cincinnati and the Queen and Crescent Route. The fare will be $15.45, round trip, from Springfield, Illinois. All persons who expect to go will please write to J. E. Lynn pastor, at Springfield. J. E. LYNN.

STARVING

in the Midst of Plenty.

That's what people with poor digestion are doing every day. They have no appetite, or if they do have an appetite and eat what they require, it does them no good, because the stomach does not digest it, and the fermenting mass of food becomes a source of disease, of headache, sleeplessness, languor and the thousand and one symptoms of disordered digestion. Mr. Judson A. Stanion, the great Church and Sunday-school worker, and president Christian Endeavor Union, St. Louis, Mo., says:

"I have had to be extremely careful what I ate. Many things were indigestible, and after a hearty dinner I could scarcely keep awake. I never have been sick in bed, but have had a great deal of inconvenience from indigestion. Since I learned of the merits of Stuart's Tablets I keep them in my desk or carry them in my pocket, and find that I can eat anything at all without discomfort. They were recommended to me by a friend who is enthusiastic in their praise. I cannot afford to be drowsy after lunch, and find these tablets just the thing to assist digestion and keep all my faculties wide-awake." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets promptly relieve and cure all forms of indigestion. They have done it in thousands of cases and will do it in yours. The reason is simple. They digest the food whether the stomach works or not, and that's the whole secret. At all druggists, 50 cents a box. For book on stomach diseases giving valuable advice, address F. A. The Chattanooga Convention.

No Southern Disciple who can get the money to go on and spare the time can afford to miss this great National Convention of Disciples of Christ in Chattanooga, Oct. 13-21. We shall meet men and women whose names have been household words with us all our life. It will be the greatest possible inspiration and encouragement to meet with them. They are our brothers and sisters in our Father's cause. Let Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee and other Southern states roll in delegates by the hundred. It will be a long time before we have another such opportunity in the South.

O. P. SPIEGEL.

Birmingham, Ala.

"I Cannot Afford to Go."

"I would be glad to attend the Chattanooga Convention, but really I cannot afford the expense." I wonder how many of our brethren and sisters all over the land are thinking that. "I have often felt that I could not afford to attend these great annual conventions," said the lamented O. A. Burgess, near the close of the great Richmond Convention, twenty-two years ago, "yet each year has witnessed my presence; and now, as I look back over my life, I cannot recall a single financial investment that has brought me such gratifying returns. It pays to attend." I now recall this saying of this wise man as a suggestion to hundreds who are hesitating to attend the great convention at Chattanooga because they feel they cannot afford the expense. Those who are in the habit of attending will very heartily concur in the opinion that it is a good investment. Many of their noblest inspirations, many of their largest visions, many of their dearest friendships and holiest fellowships, many of their most precious treasures, held sacred by memory, are intimately associated with these great annual gatherings. They feel they are broader and better, that they are stronger and more efficient, that they are more happy and more hopeful, and that the fruitage of their life will be richer and more abundant, because they have gone each year to these great national gatherings of their brethren. You may feel you cannot afford the expense of going; I am certain you cannot afford to remain away.

Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 17.

A Great Year.

When the books of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society closed, Sept. 30th, 1898, the receipts during the year for Foreign Missions amounted to $130,925.70, a gain over the year before of $24,703.60. The receipts "from collections only" amounted to $97,363.10. We came near reaching the "$100,000 by collections only." The number of contributing churches is 2,907, a net gain of 321. The number of contributing Sunday-schools is 3,180, a net gain of 370. The churches as churches gave $45,650.20, a gain of $6,081.92. The Sunday-schools gave $34,334.97, a gain of $4,307.73. There was a loss in the receipts from the Endeavor Societies and from individual offerings amounting to $4,056.05.

Eleven new missionaries have been sent out during the year. This has been the greatest year in the history of the Society. Praise the Lord!

Convention Benefits.

An incalcuable benefit of our missionary conventions or ministerial associations is their stimulus for one's mind and heart. Any preacher who regularly attends them is prepared to give special testimony of this blessing. No studious habits at home, nor even the inspiration of a large field of labor, nor yet the hearty appreciation of one's ministry in a congregation, can give all that every preacher needs for learning and growth. Our national conventions are just now having a development of interest that is marvelous. Not for doctrinal decisions nor for ecclesiastical administrations, but directly and always for the progress of the gospel in the world, they enlist and elicit necessarily an enthusiasm at once full of light and power; they bring one into the very heart of fellowship in Christ; they inspire in one a new consideration for service. The brethren at Chattanooga are to be congratlated on their enticing preparations to receive our national gathering this year. Such faith and diligence will not fail of its reward.

All Aboard for Chattanooga!

We are as busy as bees getting in shape to meet you and give you a cordial welcome. when you step off the train look for a party of Christians, with badges pinned on them, on which is the word reception. They are your servants, use them. The depot is but a short distance from the Auditorium. Be sure to put yourself in the hands of the reception committee, so that you can secure boarding rates at the uniform price of $1 per day, in the best homes, and $1.50 to $2.00 per day in the best hotels. There are plenty of cheap boarding houses in the city, but we will send no one there, except it be the preference of the delegates, as we desire to give you the best this Chattanooga affords. If the $1 a day rate does not suit you, we can get you good rooms at 25 cents up, and board for $5.00 per week, but we cannot place on that our guarantee except in few instances. Let us know in time what you want and we can meet most any request. We want no one to be cut off on account of expense. Come one! Come all! We have heard from at least 500 people who are coming, and yet it is three weeks till the convention. The S. E. P. A. will sell tickets at one fare for the round trip, from Oct. 12-17 inclusive. They will be good to Oct. 24. Please inquire of your own Passenger Associations, the date of sale of tickets, at one-fare rate. Our Tennessee Christian Missionary Convention will be the guest of Highland Park Christian Church Oct. 10-13. Let those who have written me about entertainment not grow impatient waiting for a reply. I am waiting on the entertainment committee to report to me, and as it is an assured fact that we can get all the houses we want, on short notice, they have seen fit to wait till near the time, so there will be no disappointments. Some people who are not acquainted with our city, are inquiring about the health. If they will look at the reports given by the statisticians they will find that it stands in point of health sixth in the United States. We have the finest drainage, and sewerage system in the South, and no epidemic has ever struck Chattanooga since she has been a city. The convention comes in the most beautiful and healthful part of the year. You can't afford to stay away. We already have sufficient evidence that this will be the beginning of a new epoch in our conventions and missionary work, but we ought to have no less than ten thousand of our church people here. Don't allow anything to get between you and the convention, Oct. 13-21, 1898. We shall, as much as power in us lies, make everything convenient, comfortable, and to suit your purse.

Yours faithfully,

W. M. TAYLOR, Gen. Sec.

ECZEMA FROM BIRTH

Our little daughter had Eczema from birth. The parts afflicted would become terribly inflamed, and water would ooze out like great beads of perspiration, finally this would dry up and the skin would crack and peel off. She suffered terribly. Had to put soft mittens on her hands to keep her from scratching. Two of our leading physicians did not help her. After bathing her with CUTICURA SOAP, I applied CUTICURA (ointment) freely, and gave her CUTICURA RESOLVENT regularly. She improved at once and is now never troubled. The statements I have made are absolutely true and not exaggerated in any way.

Success of the Annuity Plan.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society has received the following sums during the past year on the Annuity plan:

Lazarus Ehman, Alexis, Ohio	$ 1,000
A Friend	2,000
Grace A. Taber, Buffalo, N. Y.	200
Clara B. Russell, De Smet, S. D.	100
Almira J. Russell, Ada, Ohio	500
A Friend	15,000
Mrs. T. E. Taylor, Stockport, Ia	100
Mrs. Eugenia E. Thompson, West Plains, Mo	1,000
Mrs. Elizabeth Chapman, Carthage, N. Y.	500
Andrew and Mary A. Barnhart, Dowajiac, Mich.	500
Mrs. Martha C. Hale, Rochester, N. Y	1,000
J. Coop, Southport, England	9,690
J. F. Davis, Portsmouth, Ohio	1,000
Total	$32,590

The whole amount received since the fund was started last year is $39,390. This money is used only for buildings on the mission fields. Interest is paid annuitants according to their ages, during their natural lives, and at death the Foreign Society is relieved from further obligation. Some of the annuitants very generously donate their annuities when they are due, and have given liberally for the regular work besides. The society, however, pays the annuity promptly when it is due; this is much more economical than to pay the high rents for buildings in heathen lands.

The Last Word.

INVITATION.—The churches of Chattanooga, the Mayor and City Council, the Chamber of Commerce and the Young Men's Business League extend a cordial invitation to the Disciples of Christ everywhere to attend the General Christian Missionary Conventions to be held in this city October 13 to 21.

RAILROAD RATES.—The Central and Southeastern Associations have granted the rate of one fare for the round trip. This covers the territory from the Potomac to the Mississippi Rivers and from the lakes to the gulf. The Trunk Line Association and the Western Association have granted a rate of one and one-third fare to the gateways of the Central Association on the certificate plan. When those living in these associations purchase tickets at home let them take a certificate for the same, and after having it signed at Chattanooga they will be returned from the gateway home for one-third fare. Please notice that those coming from the Trunk Line and Western Associations purchase tickets twice, one at their home station for which they take a certificate, and the second at the point where they reach the bounds of the Central Association, where they will buy the round-trip ticket at the one-fare rate. Date of sale of tickets in the Southwestern Association is from the 12th to 17th inclusive, good to the 24th. Inquire of your agent the date of sale in other associations. The rovnd trip from all points in Texas is $21.80.

Extension will be granted those coming from west of the Mississippi River.

ENTERTAINMENT.—Following the instructions of the last convention, a rate of one dollar per day in private homes will be given. This includes three meals and lodging. Special rates have been secured at the best hotels in the city of from $1.50 to $2.00 per day. Everything will be done for the comfort and enjoyment of the delegates.

ATTRACTIONS.—The convention, Missionary Ridge, National Cemetery, Lookout Mountain, Chickamauga National Military Park, Orchard Knob, etc. No more delightful trip could be arranged than to Chattanooga in October.

FINAL WORD.—Already indications point to a great convention. If we mistake not it will be characterized by good cheer and boundless enthusiasm from beginning to end. We urge upon our brethren everywhere to make it a subject of prayer and conversation. Talk the convention up. Secure as large an attendance as possible from your church. Send names of all who are coming, that we may know how many to provide for. "Come thou with us and we will do thee good."

FREE RHEUMATISM CURE

A Liberal Way to Prove That Gloria Tonic Cures Rheumatism—Thousands of Sufferers Have Been Permanently Cured—A Free Trial Package Mailed to All Who Apply.

It is safe to say that nearly everybody who has rheumatic pains has doctored till they are discouraged. They are disgusted with remedies that cost money, and won't try another unless it is proven to be a specific for the disease, and not a mere drug to sell. This is why John A. Smith, who discovered a remarkable cure for rheumatism, sends free to all a trial of his remedy so that the sufferer may know positively that Gloria Tonic cures the disease.

There are many people who are afraid to try even this free sample package, fearing that it may contain something harmful. But all such are assured that Gloria Tonic is entirely safe and cannot harm even a baby.

Write for a free sample to-day. If you have a friend who suffers ask him to write also to Mr. Smith, so that every person afflicted with rheumatism may be released from the terrible pains of this ruthless disease.

Address Mr. John A. Smith, 640 Summerfield Church Building, Milwaukee, Wis., and he will send a free trial package of Gloria Tonic by return mail, prepaid, or a full-sized box may be obtained from your druggist for $1.00.

My Two Selves.

IRA BILLMAN.

A mortal mixed with dual clay,
And each attempered for a different way;
Two ill-assorted travelers I,
Yet one cannot the other's presence fly.

Thus, on the narrow path of life,
These twain in discord move, and endless strife;
Not hand in hand, but back to back,
As one proceeds, the other cramps the track.

What one approves the other scorns,
O'er things that one exults the other mourns,
And soon as one its work has planned,
The other hastens, envious, to withstand.

Thus, while pursuing simple truth,
I'm swayed by party prejudice, forsooth!
And while one self all good inspires,
The other self is full of base desires.

One self I love, as love I God,
And o'er each best bend my approving nod.
The other I with passion hate,
And its demands all question and debate.

Oh! if my better self were free,
Then would it rise to all eternity—
My higher self, the self I love—
All stormy seas, bleak mountain heights above.

But ah! 'tis here my mortal grief
Beyond all earthly balsam or relief;
That by its false companion crossed,
Its just applause my higher self has lost.

The White Queen Club.

BY IDA KENNISTON.

One evening I went over to Uncle Rob's, and found the whole family sitting around the fireplace, with no apparent occupation but that of eating peanuts.

"You are just in time, Winnie," exclaimed Molly, jumping up to take my hat and wrap. "We were just about to have a meeting of the White Queen Club."

"The White Queen Club!" I said. "What in the world is that?"

"The Impossible Club," suggested Aunt Emma, with a smile.

"The Paradox Club," said Uncle Rob.

"The True Liars' Club," added Tom; but Aunt Emma shook her head at him in gentle reproach.

"You have quite aroused my curiosity," I said, sitting down in the easy-chair that Tom brought forward for me, and accepting a share of the peanuts. "What is the object of this club with many names, and what must one do to belong?"

"Every one who joins must tell a story," explained Molly; "a story that is realy true, or at least possible, but told in such a way as to make it seem impossible. Then, when every one has told a story, we begin again, and each gives the explanation of his story, if the others have not already guessed it."

"I don't see how one can tell a true story so as to make it seem untrue," I said; "but I am all ready to be a listener, at least."

"Well, who would like to begin?" asked Uncle Rob.

"Oh, let me!" exclaimed little Bob, eagerly. "I know a lovely story—truly I do, papa."

"All right," said his father, good-naturedly; "we are all ready to hear it."

"Well, once upon a time," began Bobby, soberly, sitting up straight, with a very solemn face, "one day last winter, I was in Boston, and I saw—I saw—I saw a 'lectric car run right over a man!"

There was a half-suppressed "Oh!" from some of his hearers, that seemed to gratify Bobby immensely. He went on with a solemn air: "The car, the great heavy 'lectric car, ran right over both his legs, just about here;" and Bobby indicated a place on his own chubby person about three inches above the knee. "Well, when the car rolled off, the man just got up and walked away as if it had n't hurt him at all!"

"Why, Bobby Everett!" exclaimed his mother.

"Well, I'll tell you how 't was," said Bobby, in an ingenious tone, as if he were about to make all clear. "You see, the man was reading a newspaper, and was so int'rested in what he was reading that he never knew the car went over him.

"Why, Bobby Everett!" it was now my turn to exclaim. "I thought the stories were to be true."

"That's really true, Winnie," said my uncle with a grave face, but with a little twinkle in his eye; "that's really true, because I was the man."

"Oh, were you, papa?" exclaimed Bob, with a delighted giggle at this unexpected confirmation of his astonishing tale. "I didn't know that."

"Well, next!" said Uncle Rob.

"My story is very short, and I'm afraid you'll all guess it at once," said Molly. "Once upon a time there was a man who lived in the country, and one Fourth of July he decided to fire off an old cannon that he owned. It was a very small cannon, but he knew it could be depended on to make a big noise. He loaded it with a generous charge of powder, and scattered some powder about the little hole on top.

"Just as he had it all ready to light, he discovered that he had no match in his pocket. He didn't want to go into the house to get one, so as he was quite nearsighted he took off his spectacles and fired the cannon with them."

"Why, how could he?" asked Bobby.

"That's the point," answered Molly; "but he realy did. Only—he couldn't have done it if it had been a cloudy day."

"Oh, I see!" I exclaimed. "I've guessed one 'impossible' story, at least."

"That reminds me of another cannon story, said Tom—"one that I read last week. I'll tell that for my yarn.

"Once upon a time—we all like the old-fashioned beginning, Cousin Winnie—once upon a time there was a wonderful cannon. It was one that had been used in the Civil War, and many a huge cannon-ball had rushed forth from its mouth on a mission of destruction. But the war was ended, and the old cannon was no longer used save, perhaps, on some national holiday, when it thundered forth to celebrate the glories of the nation it had helped to save. Ahem! Well, one day people were surprised to see that, instead of balls being fired from its mouth, if they were brought near the old gun, they leaped to meet it, they hung upon it, and it took a strong man to pull them away. One day a soldier walked in front of the old cannon, and stood motionless about a foot from its mouth. The ground around him was strewn with cannon-balls and iron spikes. Presently the spikes began to leap up and attach themselves to the soldier. Then the heavy iron balls lifted themselves from the ground and hung upon him. So many were the spikes that the soldier bristled with them like a huge porcupine with iron quills. The weight of the spikes and balls was much greater than the man could have carried, yet he seemed to feel no inconvenience. Presently he began to walk away, and the balls fell from him, and the spikes dropped to the ground."

Tom began to eat peanuts once more, as if his story were finished.

"The cannon might have been magnetized," suggested Molly; "but I don't see how they could magnetize such an immense thing as a cannon, and I don't understand why the balls should have hung on the man."

"We'll keep explanations until our stories are all told," said Uncle Rob. "I'll tell mine now.

"Once upon a time," began uncle, "some men were building a railway in the Western part of our country. Oh, by the way, Winnie, you know our stories are not always literally true. For instance, if I wanted to tell of some of the wonders of electricity, I might speak of that strange force as a giant or as a magician; or, if I wished to tell the story of a colony of bees, I might call them brownies, and then you would have to guess the real name of the giant or the brownies.

"Well, as I said, these men were building a great railroad. For a part of the way they were working as large a force as might be, anxious to get a certain number of miles done by a certain time. The surveyors were going before the working party, marking out the lines; only two or three miles behind them was a force of laborers preparing the road-bed, laying the cross-ties and the heavy iron rails, and spiking them securely together.

"As fast as the railroad was completed, an engine and special train came over the newly laid track, bringing rails and other supplies to the workers.

"One day, Sir What-you-call-him, of the surveyors' party, came to Prince Thing-um-bob, who was superintending the work, and said: 'Your Highness, the work cannot go on.'

" 'Why not?' demanded Prince Thing-um-bob, in a terrible tone.

" 'Our magic box is bewitched,' answered Sir What-you-call-him, 'and will no longer serve us. Without the aid of our magic box we cannot make our lines straight and true.'

" 'Have you been to the Wise Man?' asked Prince Thing-um-bob.

" 'We have, your Royal Highness.'

" 'What does he say?' demanded the Prince.

" 'He says, your Royal Highness, that we must search until we find a little brown witch, so small that she might be hidden in a walnut-shell. The little brown witch knows how to spin a thread that is finer than silk and stronger than steel. If she will spin us some of her magic thread for the magic box, then all will be well, and the building of the road may be resumed.'

" 'Tell all hands, from the highest to the lowest, to quit work, and search for the little brown witch,' commanded Prince Thing-um-bob.

" So all the men left their work, and began to hunt the little witch who was so small she could hide in a walnut-shell, and who knew how to spin a thread that was finer than silk and stronger than steel.

"They hunted and hunted, but at first without success. In about an hour, however, one of the men gave a shout of triumph as he spied the little brown witch. He carried her straight to Prince Thing-um-bob.

" 'Command her to spin,' was the Prince's next order.

"But the witch wouldn't spin. The coaxed her; they offered her dainties; they threatened her. But the little witch was obstinate; she wouldn't spin, and she didn't spin.

"Not all the score of men that stood around anxiously could force the witch to spin her magic thread.

"The men stood helpless. Unless the witch would help them, work on the great iron road could not go on."

"Uncle Rob," I intrrupted, "how much is true, and how much is a fairy tale?"

"It is all true," said Uucle Rob, seriously. "The incident, barring names, really happened when one of our great Pacific railroads was being built.

"Well, after some hours the little witch consented to spin for them. The men watched her eagerly, and when she had spun enough of the wonderful magic thread, they gathered it up, and carefully placed it in their magic box. Then all went well. The magic box aided them as before. The men went zealously to work, and, thanks to the little brown witch, the work of building the great railroad went on once more.

"Next!"

"My story must be short," said Aunt Emma. "One day last summer I was at the summit of Mount Washington. I heard some men talking of the view to be seen from there. They tried to count the number of mountain peaks that were visible, and, failing in that, began to estimate the greatest distance one could see from the summit. Some placed the greatest distance that could be seen with the naked eye at thirty miles, some at fifty, and some said sixty miles. At last a gray-haired gentleman, who up to this time had taken no part in the discussion, asked one of the party how far away he supposed the Rocky Mountains to be. 'Oh, two or three thousand miles,' replied the gentleman addressed, carelessly. 'You don't suppose you can see them, do you?'

" 'perhaps not,' answered the old gentleman, reflectively; 'but I have been here when the air was so clear that I saw mountains even farther away than the Rockies.' "

"Oh, what a story!" exclaimed Bobby—somewhat impolitely, it must be confessed.

"It was really true, Bobby," said his mother, with a smile.

"Well, all our stories are told now," said Uncle Rob, "so I move we begin again, and each explain his yarn—that is, unless Winnie has a story for us."

"Oh, no," I said. "Please excuse me for to-night; and I shall be very glad to hear any reasonable explanation of the extraordinary yarns I have heard. I assure you, my credulity has been taxed to the utmost."

"All right," said my uncle, in high good humor. "Now, Master Bobby, tell us about the poor man that was run over by a car, and didn't know it."

"Well," said Bobby, promptly, "you see he was in a steam-car, and the steam-car went under a bridge, and a 'lectric car went over the bridge at the same time, and of course it rolled right over the man, only he didn't notice it."

"Oh, of course!" I said. "Why din't I think of that?"

"Well done, Bobbins," said his big brother Tom. "I confess your story puzzled me."

"Now, Molly, said uncle, when we had all metaphorically patted our youngest story-teller on the back, "now, Molly, tell us about the man who fired off the cannon with his spactacles."

"Well," said Molly, "he just held them in the sun, like a burning-glass, and focused one of the lenses on the powder until it exploded and discharged the cannon."

"Why, how?" asked Bobby.

"Don't you remember, Bobby," explained his sister, "when we were at grandpa's last summer, we used to take his reading-glass and hold it in the sunshine, and see what a little round bright spot it would make?—and when we held it so the bright spot would come on your hand, it would burn?"

"Oh, yes," said Bobby. "But what makes it burn? Why is the sun any hotter when it shines through spactacles than when it shines throug window-glass.

"I'll tell you about that to-morrow, Bobby-boy, said his father, kindly. "I don't believe we will have time to-night.

"Now, Tom, I confess that your cannon story puzzled me. Was it only a possible story, or was it really a fact?"

"It was really a fact, sir," replied Tom. "Molly partly guessed it when she said the cannon might have been a magnet. Captain King of the United States army took the old gun (it was sixteen feet long) and wound ten miles of copper wire around it. Then he connected the ends of the wire with an electric battery. He found this made the cannon the most powerful any one had ever seen."

"But what made the balls and spikes cling to the man?" asked Molly.

"Because he was between them and the cannon," answered Tom. "The electric current was not turned on until he was in position, and then the force made itself felt through him. You know, when we were playing with Bobby's small magnet, we tried hoidlng it above a sheet of writing-paper, and we found that pens and needles would jump up from the table and cling to the under side of the paper. The magnetic force was able to act through the paper, just as in the other case it exerted its power through the body of the man."

"How simple it is," I exclaimed, "when we once understand it!"

"Ah, but do we understand it?" asked my uncle, quickly. "You say it is magnetism that explains it; but how much do we know of what magnetism is? You ask what is the power that attracts iron to iron, and and we say magnetism; but all we have done is to give a name to an unknown force. Why can't we mrgnetize gold so that it will attract gold—or silver to attract silver?"

We were silent a moment, thinking over these remarks; and then Aunt Emma, with a glance at the clock, said:

"We haven't time for outside discussions to-night; it is past Bobby's bedtime now; so let us finish the stories as soon as we can."

"Has any one guessed my story?" asked uncle.

"The little brown witch may have been a spider," said Molly, "but I don't see how a cobweb can help build a railroad."

"It really does," said Uncle Rob. "In the telescopes of astronomers, and in the instruments that surveyors use, the spider's thread plays an important part. It is necessary to have two cross-hairs, as they are called, to mark the horizontal and perpendicular lines in the field of vision, and to give a means of getting the right angle. It is necessary that these lines be very smooth. The instrument magnifies so much that a piece of cotton thread would look like a cable. Even a hair or a shred of silk would make a broad, black line, too wide and with too jagged edges to permit of delicate measuring. It was found that the only thing that would give satisfaction was a spider's thread, which is really much finer than the thread of the silkworm."

"But you said it was stro nger than steel," said Tom.

"So it is, in proportion to its size," said his father. "It takes from four thousand to seven thousand spider threads, put side by side, to measure an inch. Threads sufficient to equal in size a bar of steel an inch in diameter would sustain a much greater weight than would the bar of steel."

"A good motto for your club would be 'Live and learn,' " I said. "I am sure these facts are as new to me as they are to Tom and Molly."

"Now, mamma," said Molly, "tell us about the mountains you can see from the summit of Mount Washington."

"You have seen them often," said Aunt Emma, "and so has Bobby."

"Why, mamma, where?" said Bobby.

"If I tell the others how far away the mountains are," said his mother, "it may help them to guess. They are just about two hundred and forty thousand miles away."

"Two hundred and forty thousand!" said Tom, slowly. "Oh, I know. The mountains in the moon!"

There was a hearty laugh at this simple explanation of an "impossible" story.

"I shall probably see those mountains on my way home to night," I said; "and that reminds me that it is time for me to be going.

"I have enjoyed your club meeting ever so much, Molly, and I hope you will let me come again."

"It is a favorite game with us," said Uncle Rob. "We shall be glad to have you join us any time; but you must come to our next meeting prepared with an 'impossible' story of your own."

"One more question," I said, as I was putting on my hat. "Why did Molly call it the 'White Queen Club'?"

"You have read 'Alice in Wonderland' and 'Through a Looking-Glass,' haven't you?" asked Molly.

"Of course!" I said. "Why don't you ask me if I ever heard of Mother Goose?"

"Well," replied Molly, with a smile, "you remember the White Queen practiced until she was able to believe as many as six impossible things before breakfast!"

On to Chattanooga.

J. H. STARK.

(Tune: "Marching Through Georgia.")

More than three decades ago the boys in "blue and grey"
Met upon the battlefield in deadly, grim array;
Now they meet upon the ground to sing and pray;
Down in fair old Chattanooga.

Chorus: All hail! all hail! This glorious gathering!
All hail! all hail! We'll make the welkin ring
To the praise of Christ our Lord, our princely Priest and King, Whose cause is marching to vic'try!

This mighty host comes from the North and South and East and West—
These soldiers of the Lord, they come to plan for what is best,
For the Kingdom of the Master, and His righteous Word's their test,
As they meet in Chattanooga.

Chorus: All hail! etc.

The "Gulf" that stood 'twixt North and South for many weary years,
Thanks to our God, has now been filled, and banished are our tears;
So shout aloud our songs, our greetings, and our cheers,
As we meet in Chattanooga.

Chorus: All hail! etc.

With "helmet of salvation" bright, with faith our only shield,
The Word of God our only arms, we'll this with courage wield.
"Christ is our Immanuel, and all the world our field,"
We will sing at Chattanooga.
Chorus: All hail! etc.

Then come, my brethren, one and all, let's pledge anew our vow,
"To Jesus Christ our King be true, to Him alone we bow; He'll save us at the close of life, He saves us oven now,"
We will sing at Chattanooga.

Chorus: All hail, etc.

An Effective Sermon.

A young man, in company with several other gentlemen, called upon a young lady. Her father was present to assist in entertaining the guests, and offered wine, but the young lady asked:

"Did you call upon me or upon papa?"

Gallantry, if nothing else, compelled them to answer: "We called on you."

"Then you will please not drink wine. I have lemonade for my visitors."

The father urged his guests to drink, and they were undecided. The young lady added:

"Remember, if you called on me, then you drink lemonade; but if upon papa, why, in that case I have nothing to say."

The wine glasses were set down with their contents untasted. After leaving the house one of the party exclaimed:

"That was the most effectual temperance lecture I ever heard."

The young man from whom these facts were obtained broke off at once from the use of strong drink, and holds a grateful remembrance of the lady who gracefully and resolutely gave him to understand that her guests should not drink wine.—Ex.

Autumn.

Now gently falls the fading light,
The Autumn's sunset veil,
While dusky grows the wavering flight
Of whippoorwill and quail.
The grain is bound, the nuts are brown
On every wooded hill;
The light is softened on the down,
And silvered on the rill.

The partridge drums; the plover's call
Salutes the sportsman's ear,
And just above the waterfall
The fisher sets his weir.
The reddened leaves, with withered wings,
Sweep lightly to the sod,
And Autumn walks the land, and sings,
With rustling sandals shod.

Home.

Here is a greeting for those at home—the home which many of us possess, some of us have missed, but for which each of us longs. The wretch who makes the doorstep his bed does not desire it more than many a luxurious wanderer in foreign lands, whose very prosperity, it may be, has divorced him from the place he once called by that dear name. The child who strays from the familiar door weeps till he finds it again; the man who leaves it feels himself a suppliant to Fate till he can once more speak the words "my home;" and to the woman it is a concomitant of life. Deprived of it, she misses her best happiness and her finest dignity. Even her beauty suffers, for it is true (is it not?) that part of a woman's loveliness lies in her environment, and that in her chosen and fit surroundings she has a charm which is lacking when she is otherwhere. Home is, moreover, her field of achievement, her jousting ground, the place where she properly tests her strength and her abilities, as men test themselves in business or in battle. However brilliantly she may succeed elsewhere and in other things, if she does not succeed at home she is, in a sense, a failure, nor will her heart let her deny this fact, however passionately she may protest against it.—From the new department, "Woman and the Home," in Self Culture for September.

Phussandphret.

Have you heard of the land called Phussandphret,
Where the people live upon woes and regret?
Its climate is bad, I have heard folks say;
There's seldom, if ever, a pleasant day—
'Tis either too gloomy from clouded skies,
Or so bright the sunshine dazzles one's eyes;
'Tis either so cold one is all of a chill,
Or else 'tis so warm it makes one ill;
The season is either too damp or too dry,
And mildew or drouth is always nigh.
For nothing that ever happened yet
Was just as it should be in Phussandphret.

And the children—it realy makes me sad
To think they never look happy and glad.
It is, "Oh, dear me!" until school is done,
And 'tis then, "There never is time for fun!"
Their teachers are cross, they all declare,
And examinations are never fair.
Each little duty they are apt to shirk,
Because they're tired, or 'tis too hard work.
Every one is as grave as an owl;
And has pouting lips or a gloomy scowl;
The voices whine and the eyes are wet,
In this doleful country of Phussandphret.

Now, if you ever find that your feet are set
On the downhill road into Phussandphret,
Turn and travel the other way,
Or you never will know a happy day.
Follow some cheerful face—'twill guide
To the land of Look-at-the-Pleasant-Side.
Then something bright you will see,
No matter how dark the day may be;
You'll smile at your tasks and laugh in your dreams,
And learn that no ill is as bad as it seems.
So lose no time, but haste to get
As far as you can from Phussandphret.

A Bird's Trust.

ALFRED BRUNK.

One day at Williamstown, while I was resting, I heard a sound as of a bird in distress. Turning my eyes in the direction of the sound I saw a sparrow sitting in the open window. In a few moments it flew upon the bed where I was. I took it in my hand and again placed it in the window. It was evidently frightened, for it soon flew back to me. While it is true that the sparrow, and especially the house sparrow, frequents dwellings, yet this bird was evidently from some cause considerably frightened.

O, sparrow, thou with quivering breast,
Dost seek the human's frail abode,
Contented there, thou fain wouldst rest,
Tho' fierce thy foeman's anger glowed!

Upon the ground thou shalt not fall
Without our Heavenly Father's care.
E'en trembling bird, whose strength is small,
His condescension still shall share.

O, mighty man, with glowing sheen,
Look up by faith and see thy God!
With visage soft and sober mien,
Learn now thy worth; with peace be shod.

Your very hairs are numbered all,
Your every pulse-beat, too, he hears;
His hand upholds, ye cannot fall;
Then drive away your craven fears.

Your spirit is a jewel rare;
Your sin-scarred body shall arise;
Yourself his image there shall share,
And sing his praises in the skies.

Knowledge vs. Education.

And finally, what can this ideal woman in an ideal home do for humanity? She can lessen vice by her voice and presence in the home; neglected households lay the surest foundations for crime. If the thought, time and work which women now devote to the bread-winning effort were expended upon the home—aiming for artistic decoration, scientific cooking, and, in general, better modes of living—the households of the land would be lifted to a plane that would insure the conservation of what a nation holds dear. They can seek paths of usefulness in their leisure time; for example, in charitable lines: there are wrongs to right, a suffering world to help, humanity to uplift, opportunities to even some of the irregularities of life. The world is theirs to make it what they will; and when lifted out of their present unnatural position, and placed in their proper setting, the benefit to them will be mental, moral and physical; further, the effect upon mankind in general will be vast. Thus our "new" or future women will find for themselves and others perpetual peace and happiness, making for all time "an age on ages telling, in which living is sublime."—From "A Conservative View of the Woman Question," by I. E. Turner, in Self-Culture, for September.

A Circuit of the Globe
BY A. M'LEAN.

The pictures of all the foreign missionaries of the Christian Church, their homes and places of worship are among the illustrations. The author gives an account of what he saw, whom he saw, the many countries visited, the habits, customs, and peculiarities of the nations through which he passed. The book is written in a most fascinating manner, enabling the reader to feel as though he had made the trip with the writer. The author set out from Cincinnati, Ohio, crossing the American continent to San Francisco, then across the Pacific Ocean to Japan, stopping at Honolulu, then to China, India, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, European countries to London, across the Atlantic to America and then home. The book gives the social, political and religious phases of the many nations visited by the author.

THE MINISTRY OF MONEY.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The reign of Joash was the first which followed the usurpation of Athaliah. The evil influences of the house of Ahab in Israel had appeared in the disastrous events which followed the good reign of Jehoshaphat. We have already seen in the lessons of the last quarter the earlier effects of the introduction of idolatrous worship, which came to its fullest expression in the days of Ahab, through the influence of his queen Jezebel, daughter of Athbaal, an ex-priest who had seized the throne of Zidon. She not only secured the prevalence of idolatry in the Northern Kingdom, but her spirit was carried into the South in the person of her daughter, Athaliah, who was married to Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat.

How much further the evil effects of this family line would have gone it is impossible to say, had not the reforming zeal of Jehu cut it short in the Northern Kingdom and Athaliah herself came to her death through the courage Jehoiada, high priest at Jerusalem. The evil course of one vicious person may be perpetuated through many generations of a family and become a moral pestilence to the whole community. It was fortunate for both kingdoms that vigorous measures were taken to exterminate this cruel and evil stock. Ahaziah, the successor of Jehoram, came to his death at the hand of Jehu who murdered him in company with Jehoram of Israel at Jezreel. Instantly when the news of this tragedy reached Jerusalem, Athaliah seized the kingdom for herself and put to death, as she supposed, all of the children who might be heirs to the murdered king; but one was saved by the care of the high priest and his wife, and was brought up with a view of one day overthrowing the cruel woman who was a foreigner in every characteristic of her nature. When the moment of opportunity arrived he summoned the court officials and temple guards and, preparing against surprise by guarding the temple gates, he brought forth the boy-king and proclaimed him in place of the usurping Athaliah. The queen hearing the tumult came from the palace only to meet death at the hands of the troops, and Joash was crowned as the rightful monarch. He led the people in the work of reform, overthrowing the temple of Baal and putting to death Mattan, the priest of the false worship. Thus much of the evil of Athaliah's reign was counteracted.

In all these affairs the courage and wisdom of Jehoiada stand out in bold relief. No man who was not full of purpose and resources would have dared to incur the danger necessary in seating Joash on the throne. But the interests of an uninterrupted dynasty of the house of David demanded just such courageous action. If the high priest had failed at this point the Messianic hope of the Son of David would have perished, and the kingship would have passed into the hands of a foreign and usurping line of sovereigns.

Some years later the king saw that there was need of repairing the temple. That building, erected by Solomon more than a century before, had fallen somewhat into decay and had been stripped of much of its beauty by the sacrilegious vandalism of the idolatrous princes. During the reign of Joash the influence of Jehoiada again asserted itself, and under his instruction the king saw the need of rising to meet the emergency. Money was needed for the enterprise and the revenues that came regularly into the hands of the priests and Levites were not sufficient to serve the purpose. So a crusade of the kingdom was determined upon in the interest of the work of repair; but the responsibility for this work had been placed upon the Levites, who were not particularly interested in it, since they thought they needed all the money for themselves. Their delusion was just that under which many a preacher labors to-day, who imagines that if he raises offerings for missionary purposes in his congregation he will cut the supply for his own support. These men could not understand how it was possible to ask for more money than was being paid by the people into the Lord's treasury and not find that the additional funds would decrease the regular offerings for the temple. When after a time the king was made aware of this delinquency he called Jehoiada to account for the matter and pointed out the laxity of the Levites in performing his will.

It was at least possible for them to raise the poll tax, which was the rightful debt of every man, and even this was not being secured under the present circumstances. The revenues of the house of God had been sadly broken into by the unscrupulous conduct by the court of Athaliah. Not alone was she a wicked woman; but her sons followed her footsteps, and the presents that the people had brought—gifts of gold and silver for the use or adornment of the temple, had been carried away to enrich the shrines of Baal.

The king chose a new method of reaching the desired end and had a chest placed at the gate of the temple where it would attract the attention of all the people who passed into the sacred enclosure. The offerings of these gifts for the repair of the temple was not made compulsory, but simply depended upon making known the need and obligation. The people were left to offer free gifts, and they proved as always on such occasions that when an opportunity is given they will respond. Nothing is more interesting than the effect of right leadership and proper teaching in a congregation. Those churches where the ministry of money is taught and where insistence is laid upon this as well as other graces of the Spirit are not only the happiest, but the most useful churches. The people are glad to give when they know for what purpose they give, and their interest is aroused in the good cause that is to be assisted. Nothing emphasizes the right kind of leadership more than the largeness of offerings that come from certain churches.

The result of the king's policy in giving the people an opportunity to share in the work and of sending out a proclamation to that end brought the happiest results. The people were delighted to assist and the amount of money was ample. For all the work needed in repairing the temple artisans were secured and soon the house was restored to its former strength and beauty.

Christian Endeavor.

By Burris A. Jenkins.

TOPIC FOR OCT. 16.

OUR SOCIETY WORK AND HOW TO BETTER IT.

This subject comes at a good time, when the Endeavor movement is as it were sitting down to meditate over its past and its prospects. Our Endeavor movement is something older than it has ever been before—more mature. Something of its froth and effervescence has gone, like the twenty and two thousand who turned back from Gideon, but much of steadiness and calm and strength has been gained. It is a good time to take stock, to think back and look forward.

As we think of our great Society and of our individual Societies, of what they have done and to what that is new they can turn their hands, the mottoes of past years and the good causes which have been emphasized come trooping up before us—Good Citizenship, Deepening of the Spiritual Life, the Quiet Hour and all the others—and each one of these should have its new emphasis in this meeting of retrospect and prospect. But there is one other cause which seems especially ripe for Christian Endeavor to champion, and as we look about for new worlds to conquer, here is a world awaiting us—it is the cause of popular education.

As yet education is an unsolved problem among the Disciples of Christ. Our colleges are not what they ought to be, and they never will be until the rank and file of our people are educated to demand higher things. Can not the Christian Endeavor Society, which is the hope of the church of to-morrow, take firm hold of this educational problem of ours and solve it? Among the many ways, therefore, of bettering our Societies' work, this is the one way which there is room in this article to suggest.

Every Christian Endeavor Society in the brotherhood should be educational. It should establish such classes for our young people as will give them a larger outlook on the world of culture. Any form of literary effort should be encouraged, and especially should some more adequate ideas of the history and aims of our movement, of the work accomplished and yet needed in the mission fields of the world and of careful and scientific Bible study, be provided in every Society. Such provision, indeed, is already at hand in the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses which are being rapidly established in many of our Societies. For these courses handbooks are provided by such writers as J. W. McGarvey, H. L. Willett, W. J. Lhamon, F. D. Power, under the general direction of J. Z. Tyler, and other reading in addition to the handbooks is suggested for the courses. These books are sold at cost price, and the whole object of the Reading Courses is to foster educational development, which is so sadly needed. Send at once if your Society has no Reading Course, to J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, O., for information regarding the details of the Bethany Courses.

A new day is dawning in the educational history of the Disciples. The first step has been taken, viz., the feeling of the need. The most hopeless condition one can be in is not to be conscious of one's actual need. The diabolical condition of not wanting things is characteristic of the savage. But when one begins to feel his lack, there is hope of supplying the deficiency. Such is now the condition among our people. We begin to see how much in the educutional realm is yet to be accomplished by us. We begin to see how inadequate are our present resources. This vague longing and unrest has caused the birth of one agency after another, like the Bethany Reading Circle, the educational board, the congress which is being arranged for next spring, and other efforts yet unborn will be caused by this same dissatisfaction with any educational forces we now possess. Meanwhile, the duty of the Endeavor Society is clear, viz., to turn its full strength toward making its peculiar educational force—the Bethany Reading Courses—a thoroughgoing success.

It was the peculiar glory of our brotherhood in the elder day that it was a movement of the greatest intelligence. Our leaders were scholars, and they sought to introduce sane, scholarly, cultivated conceptions of religion. One does not like to feel that we have in anywise degenerated, but certain it is that unless we hold hard by the high standard of our fathers, and present to the world an intellectual, refined and cultivated bearing in a day of increasing intelligence, refinement and culture, we shall lose our influence and fail of the high calling wherewith we are called. Where are the Endeavorers who will stand for education? Where the Gideon's band for this new-old work? Let us do our best for education, and education will better our Society's work.

BRIGHT'S DISEASE

A Patient of 74 Years Rescued from Imminent Death by

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

A Case Stated by Dr. E. C. Laird

Member of the North Carolina Medical Society, Member American Medical Association, and formerly Resident Physician at the Springs:

"Mr. ——, aged 74, arrived at BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS in an exceedingly prostrate condition, exhibiting unmistakable symptoms of Bright's Disease, viz.: puffiness of the face, eyes suffused, impaired vision, breathing labored and distressed, heart involved, inability to take a recumbent position for any length of time, feet and legs so swollen that he could not wear his shoes, and Uræmic poison to such an extent that he was generally asleep when sitting in his chair. Examination of the Urine the day after his arrival, both chemical and microscopical, showed the presence of albumen, tube-casts, and epithelium, confirming the diagnosis of Bright's Disease. This situation, especially in view of his advanced years, seemed to preclude the possibility of benefit from any remedy. He was put, however, upon the water of Spring No. 2, which to my equal surprise and gratification, proved promptly and highly beneficial, and to such an extent that he rested comfortably in bed, which he had not been able to do for several months previous. His improvement, excepting an intermission at one time of a few days, was continuous and steady during a stay of twelve weeks at the Springs, and so rapid that when he left, not only had all symptoms of his trouble entirely disappeared, but he had gained largely in flesh, and possessed a healthful vigor by no means common to men of his years."

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is for sale by Grocers and Druggists generally. Pamphlets on application.

Sulphume, and its preparations, as soap, pills, ointment, etc., are as popular for the ills of human flesh as was camphor and blue glass in their brief respective reigns. But Sulphume will be a "stayer," for sulphur is a most valuable curative agent, particularly in affections of the skin and blood. This new specific is the liquified form of sulphur, just as syrup is that of sugar. Its conversion is known only to the Sulphume Co., Chicago.

BROWN.

Millard Austin Brown was born in Rosetta, Ill., Oct. 14, 1878, and died in the hospital at Camp Presidio, Cal., Sept. 17, 1898. He was a son of Dr. M. F. and Mrs. Lou R. Brown. The name of Mrs. Brown will be recognized by many, as prominent in our state and national C. W. B. M. work. The deceased confessed faith in Christ and became a member of the Christian Church, in the winter of 1895. Last June he enlisted in Company I 51st Iowa Volunteers. Thus another young life has been sacrificed for humanity. The funeral was conducted with military escort and honors, in Lenox, Sept. 25. Christian faith is enabling the bereaved ones to bear their grief.

W. D. Ryan.

Lenox, Iowa, Sept. 26, 1898.

DUDLEY.

Born in Kentucky, March 5, 1806, Livisa Ann Ashmore. Most of her life was spent in Illinois and Iowa, where, at Nora Springs, in the latter state, she died Sept. 16, 1898, aged 92 years, six months and 11 days. In 1830 she was married to Wm. G. Dudley, who died in 1870. She survived all but three of their ten children. Left to remember and love her, 38 grandchildren and over 60 great-grandchildren, a total of one hundred living descendants. She was indeed a Disciple of Christ. Funeral from church, by writer, Sept. 18.

ENGLE.

Isaac Engle, a father in Israel, died at his home in Stark County, O., July 29, 1898, in his 75th year. On April 16th, 1846, he was married to Fietta Schiner. To them were born nine children, six of whom and Sister Engle remain. At 17 was immersed by Israel Belton, a Baptist preacher, Bro. Belding assisting in the meeting. In 1860 he united with the Christian Church of which his wife was already a member. He was a very earnest man, honest and kind, loved and respected by all. We miss him in all our services. He knew no Savior but Jesus and recognized no authority but his Word. "He came to his grave in full age like as a shock of corn cometh in his season."

HOBBS.

William Franklin Hobbs was born in Shelby County, Ky., March 21st, 1826, and died near Kensington, Kan., Sept. 10, 1898, aged seventy-two years, six months and eleven days. He removed to Platte County, Mo., in 1850, where he married Miss Sarah Williams. Eight children were born to them, three sons and five daughters. One daughter preceded him to the spirit-land. In 1850 Bro. Hobbs gave his heart to God and united with the Christian Church, of which he remained a faithful and consistent member till God called him up higher. I never met a man that had more faith in God's Word than Bro. Hobbs, nor a brighter hope of immortality. I saw him a short time before his death, and he told me he was ready and waiting for God to call him. He had no fear of crossing the dark river of death. He was ready. He left a wife and seven children to mourn his departure. Bro. Hobbs came to Kansas in 1872 and settled on a farm, where he remained till his death. He was an elder in the church over 25 years. The funeral services were conducted by Bro. Drummond, of Smith Center.

McKINNEY.

Jas. Wesley McKinney, born Nov. 30, 1841, was called from earthly toil to heavenly rest Sept. 18, 1898, aged fifty-six years, nine months and nineteen days. Bro. McKinney has lived a devoted Christian since early life. He was married to Amanda Grimes, April 30, 1867, and leaves her and his two sons, Hugh and Archie, to mourn the departure of a most faithful husband and father. The Church of Christ has lost a true member and the community a useful citizen in his death.

Paris, Mo., Sept. 20, 1898.

LAWRENCE.

Alice Lawrence was born Feb. 9, 1865, in Adams County, Ill. She united with the Christian Church Feb. 3, 1878. Since which time she has been an active and efficient member, helping in every good work and encouraging others to do the same. She had been sick more than 15 months, during all that time manifesting a remarkable degree of Christian patience and fortitude. She passed away Sept. 4, 1898, aged thirty-three years, six months and twenty-three days. Her work was finished, and she has gone home to wear a crown that will never fade.

POWELL.

On my return from a wearisome summer journey I found a letter announcing to me the tender words from a sister's heart the death of one of the best friends I ever had, Bro. E. L. Powell. He died suddenly at his home in Boone County, Mo., on the 8th of May, 1898, stricken by paralysis. He was born in Kentucky in 1840, and was married to Miss Virginia Daniels, of Harrodsburg, Ky., in 1865. She was a graduate of Daughters' College, a schoolmate of Mrs. Carr, and a noble Christian. Her old time friends, the boys and girls of long ago, scattered over the earth, would love to comfort her and her four sons in the sad bereavement. I would love to speak the praises of Bro. E. L. Powell, had I fitting words. While he lived, as I had opportunity I told the people of his worth. Now that he is gone from the earthly life and I was denied the pleasure of association with him during the last few years and the sad privilege of even placing a flower on his grave, I hope that what I write will serve the living and be a comfort to dear Sister Powell and her four sons. I knew Bro. E. L. Powell well, and believe that "none knew him but to love him," and I am quite sure that I heard "none name him but to praise." It was truthfully said: "He lived a pure, Christian, humble, unobtrusive life." Indeed, he was one of the few men who seemed to be in the world but not of it—not contaminated by it, as most men are.

I recall diistnctly his form, his feature, his very walk when as a fellow-student at Harrodsburg, Ky., I knew him. Of medium height, quick, bright eye, lips delicately chiseled, of ample forehead, his appearance was that of a good-hearted, refined gentleman. Modesty characterized his behavior at the university and through life. He shrank from publicity, and seemed not to know his power, but the professors knew, and the boys who called on him for help to read their Latin and Greek and solve their problems knew his ability as a student, and when the time came to divide the honors of the class there was no division; all the honors were given to E. L. Powell. I supposed he never mentioned this, so free was he from vanity, and I hope to be excused for mentioning it. When he came to Missouri he engaged to teach the country school. I thought he was out of place, that he ought to be in a professor's chair in some college or university, but he had no inclination to place himself there and nobody did this for him, though many a less worthy and less capable person has occupied that position. We often talked together of his diffidence, at which I wondered, and tried to push him forward out of it. He was induced to superintend the Sunday-school and to preach occasionally. Naturally his brethren looked to him and he became an elder of the congregation. His ability as a teacher, his good judgment, and even his modesty, together with his own good works and his orderly family, made him almost the model elder.

Mrs. Carr and I have just talked over the genuine pleasure we had in his household, everything so tidy, so well ordered, and his children so obedient and helpful, revealing the mother's tender care and the father's guidance and companionship. His children never outgrew the Sunday-school as long as I knew them. He and Sister Powell took them there regularly and taught them in class with others. With parents and children this seemed to be a sacred obligation and a real pleasure. His words were well chosen. He had few words in prayer and his preaching never revealed the scholar that he was. His reverence and his modesty showed the deep earnestness of the man. I am sure that he could have but little sympathy with the flouncing up of boys, and even of girls, to pronounce a prayer in public, or to say a sentence turn about and thus fill up the program. When Bro. Powell spoke, the people were impressed that it meant a great deal, even more than his best chosen words could tell. As a business man the world would call E. L. Powell a failure, for he did not lay up treasures here, he laid them up in heaven. His name was never pronounced that I know of in high places, as the world thinks of highness, but I believe it was written in heaven. In honor he preferred his brethren, and I believe he would have done so at the sacrifice of himself. Indeed, he did sacrifice himself, and lived an unselfish life, as nearly as mortals could be expected to do and live at all in this greedy world.

As I think of my departed brother our Savior's words come into my mind: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." I recall not one unpleasant thought or feeling during my intimate association with Bro. Powell, nor do I remember that I ever heard him speak a word that was unbecoming a Christian or do an unworthy deed. I think of his life as a most wonderful success. Jesus said: "If a man serve me, him will my Father honor." Our Father was honored, and called to himself my beloved friend and brother in Christ, and while I mourn his loss and deeply sympathize with his family in their sorrow, I pray that the good angels may hover around that humble home and that they may all be brought at last to the happy union in the home eternal—

"Where we shall find the joy of loving as we never loved before—Loving on, unchilled, unhindered—loving once, forevermore."

SNYDER.

Sister Rebecca Snyder, wife of Dennis Snyder, maiden name Ryder, died in Stark County, Ohio, Aug. 23, 1898, in her 33rd year. She was married, Aug. 26, 1883. She was converted under the preaching of Rev. Frank Findley in 1895. Bro. Snyder was also converted at the same meeting. She leaves a large family of small children dependent on Bro. Snyder for their daily bread. Funeral services conducted by the writer at the Indian Run Church. May the Lord bless the husband and motherless children.

SPONHAUR.

Joseph Spohaur died at his home near Sparta, Stark County, O., Sept. 4, 1898, in his 70th year. He was married to Anna Russell, April 20, 1871. He leaves three children—one son and two daughters—all members of the church at Sparta. He was a member of the Church of God, but attended with his family while health permitted. He was a schoolteacher by profession, a man of moral and intellectual worth. Suffered much, and passed peacefully away. The funeral services were held in the Christian church at Sparta.

NOTICE.

Many of these solos are published in sheet form. The price of each song is as much as the price of "Silver and Gold." By securing this book the singer has for 25 cents a collection of 25 solos, the cost of which, in sheet music, would be $2.50. No singer should be without this song book. The songs marked in heavy type may be used as duets, quartets or solo and chorus.

Publishers' Notes.

"ACROSS THE GULF."

Mrs. N. M. Vandervoort is the clever authoress of a new book entitled, "Across the Gulf." It is along the alignment of "Quo Vadis," and is infinitely better because understood. The writing is in a pleasing vein and free from the innumerable and senseless Latin terms that mar "Quo Vadis." Mrs. Vandervoort is from Hepworth, and bids fair to become famous in the world of letters. Her "Across the Gulf" is laid in the time of the Nazarene on earth, and is historical as well as brilliant and intensely interesting. A fascination runs through the ever-curious and attractive details of the narrative. The authoress with a simplicity and rhythm of diction that charms either the scholar or the common reader throws the curtain back on the life of Rome and its people as history paints it, hence the work is not only attractive but instructive also.—Sunday Eye, Bloomington, Ill.

A study of the lives of the great women mentioned in the Bible is always profitable and interesting. Queen Esther stands high among the great Bible characters. M. M. Davis has recently written a book which he has entitled "Queen Esther." It is a book which brings out the grand and noble traits of this wonderful woman in an impressive manner. Many points in the life of this woman is brought to the mind of the reader that are overlooked by the ordinary student of the Bible. This new book is beautifully bound in cloth, containing 132 pages, and the price is 75 cents.

A SPLENDID BOOK.

"Plain Talks to Young Men on Vital Issues," by Peter Ainslie, is a charming little book, and one which every young man and young lady should secure and carefully read. In clear and forcible language the author denounces in successive short chapters the evils attending Gambling, The Theater, Dancing, Swearing, Lying. The last chapter is entitled, "Christian Services," and is well worth the price of the book, which is 60 cents.—The Youth's Instructor, Chicago.

KING SAUL.

This is not a "new novel," but a volume giving the life of this king as found in the Bible without altering or inventing one fact. The author is J. Breckenridge Ellis, who is author of "In the Days of Jehu." He has given us a very readable book, and one that will increase interest in Bible study and serve as a commentary on the Old Testament. The book has given a clear interpretation of the passage relating to the Witch of Endor. 281 pages. Cloth, price $1.00.—Christian Index, Des Moines, Iowa.

Island of Marken.

The quaint fisher-folk of Marken, two of whom are pictured on another page, are loyal subjects of the recently crowned Queen of the Netherlands. They are a simple, sober, industrious people, ever struggling to save their flat, marshy island from the encroachment of the sea.

This island was once a frontier or mark of the mainland, but was separated from it by an outburst of nature in the 13th century. The people yet retain the style of dress worn at that time. The loose, sombre garb of the men, showiag no linen, is lightened only by the silver clasps and buckles which are usually family heirlooms. Unlike their countrywomen of the main land, who hide their tresses under close-fitting caps, the women of the Isle allow their blonde curls to hang about the face. To Marken wives, who, though robust, are gaunt and lean of visage, with high color and dark hollows under their big blue eyes, this arrangement of hair gives an air somewhat savage.

Because of the absence of the men on the ocean, the daily duties of the women fisher-folk cover the whole range of outdoor work and indoor work. Thus the Singer Sewing Machine has proved a great blessing in their busy lives and has become deservedly popular.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Chippewa Indians, of White Earth Reservation in Minnesota, are in a belligerent frame of mind and have been making a great deal of trouble for the custodians of the peace in that district. The trouble began when a United States deputy marshal undertook to serve a warrant on a prominent member of the tribe in connection with a case of illegal liquor selling. The Indians organized a rescuing party, overpowered the officer and released the prisoner. A body of troops, about eighty in number, was at once dispatched from Fort Snelling to the scene of the disorder, under the command of General Bacon and Major Wilkinson, to secure the prisoner and also arrest the rescuers. An advance squad of the soldiers fell into an ambuscade, in which Major Wilkinson and six privates were killed and twelve wounded. The subsequent fighting was indicisive and there is no substantial evidence that the troops gained any marked advantage. It is believed that the Indians have shown signs of desiring to cease hostilities and of willingness to surrender the offenders whom the deputy marshal was attempting to arrest. In the meantime, two hundred and fifty more troops have been sent to reinforce those already at the reservation. It is hoped, though by no means confidently, that the most serious part of the trouble is over, but the Governor of Minnesota is taking active precautions to be ready for any emergency. A French editor in this connection has called attention to the wonderful similarity between the treatment of the Indians by the United States Government and the oppression of the Cubans and Philippinos by Spain. Unhappily, our treatment of the tribes has not been uniformly above criticism, but it will not require any extraordinary degree of insight to discern more of contrast than of similarity between the cases mentioned.

The testimony of General Wheeler before the Army Investigation Commission has moved a good many people to reconsider the verdict which they had already passed upon the war department. The sessions of the commission were thrown open to representatives of the press, so that we are not, in this case, dependent upon conjectural reports of the testimony. The gist of General Wheeler's testimony is that, so far as he had opportunity for observation, the bureaus of the war department which have been subjected to criticism performed their functions with reasonable and commendable zeal and intelligence, and that there was no more suffering among the troops than the conditions rendered unavoidable. Camp Wikoff he considers, in most respects, a model camp, and the camp before Santiago was by no means such an abode of horrors as it has been depicted. The only shortage in supplies at Santiago which is admitted was in the supply of medicines, but even this was not serious, and the only deficiency in the service was in transportation, on account of which the tents and siege guns which were on the transports could not be brought up where they could be used. General Wheeler is of the opinion there was never a campaign in which the soldiers were more bountifully supplied with the necessities and even luxuries of life. He had not seen or even heard of such a thing as a sick or wounded man dying from lack of care. These statements do not purport to cover the whole ground, but to indicate the conditions which fell under the eye of this one commander. There may have been a worse state of affairs elsewhere, but there is no man in whose word the men of both parties would more readily place their confidence than in General Wheeler's, and the evidence which he has given will inevitably tend to lesson the confidence of people in their premature adverse judgments of the War Department.

A sensation was created last week by the issue of a warrant for the arrest of Senator Quay, of Pennsylvania, on the charge of conspiracy to appropriate state funds for private speculations. Implicated with the senator and included in the warrant are his son, Richard R. Quay, ex-State Treasurer Benjamin J. Haywood and Charles R. McKee. Last March John S. Hopkins, cashier of the People's Bank in Philadelphia, committed suicide, and when the condition of the bank was examined subsequently its credit was found to be seriously impaired. At this time the bank had on deposit $505,000 of state funds. The bank went into the hands of a receiver, and the president, Mr. McManes, agreed to be personally responsible to all creditors. The state received from him the full amount of its deposit. The charge against the parties above named is that they conspired with the cashier of the bank to deposit the funds of the state in the bank and then to draw them out privately to use in stock speculations. The issue of this warrant is a fitting sequel to Mr. Wanamaker's remarkable series of campaign speeches in denunciation of the corruption of Pennsylvania state politics and of Senator Quay in particular. Mr. Quay's friends complain that "assassination of character" has always been the method adopted by his enemies. They will have to find a new name for this "attack," for nothing is more unlike assassination than a definite charge, a warrant for arrest and a trial in open court. It has been suggested that, since the amount of the state's deposit has been made good there is no ground for a charge. It will go hard if a stronger line of defense than this cannot be found. Return of stolen goods after detection does not save the thief from prosecution and punishment.

The war is over for the present and the resumption of hostilities cannot seem to be more than a very remote possibility, but it is not to be understood that there is no longer a need for the maintenance of troops in addition to the regulars. For the present it is not solely a question of what necessities, in the way of a standing army, may be forced upon us by the adoption of an imperial policy, but a question of maintaining order temporarily in those places from which the Spanish forces are being removed. As soon as active hostilities ceased there began to be a strong desire on the part of a large proportion of the volunteers to get out of the service. Soldiers for whom military life had lost its charms and friends of enlisted men began to exert pressure to secure the discharge of individuals, and congressmen and others who are supposed to have influence with the administration have been flooded with petitions of this sort. It has been announced that no more troops will be mustered out now in view of the need of forces in Cuba and Porto Rico. Three regiments have been ordered to Porto Rico, and some of the commissioners appointed to arrange for the evacuation of that island are sanguine enough to believe that the last of the Spanish troops will have sailed before October 20. Sites are now being selected for winter camps in the Southern States. There is little hope that the evacuation of Cuba by the Spanish forces can be accomplished before Christmas and, if the present dilatory tactics are continued, it may be much later.

The work of peace commissions always is and of necessity must be carried on in secret and, accordingly, it is probable that for the time our information concerning the important business which is being transacted in Paris will be limited and hypothetical. There seems to be ground, however, for a surmise that all is not going smoothly in the progress of negotiations. The Spanish commissioners have found it necessary to consult with the government at Madrid upon some point, probably either the question of the possession of the Philippines or the assumption of the Cuban debt. The American commissioners have very definite instructions and know exactly what they have to demand. The Spanish, on the other hand, are probably commissioned to get as much as they can and give as little as possible. In executing this commission, they will inevitably have to go through with a wearisome amount of dallying, delaying and consulting before they can be sure that they have gotten the best possible terms. They will begin, of course, by asking for more than they expect to get. Doubtless they have so begun and this will be only the first of a long series of hitches in the negotiations.

Henry George, who was nominated for Governor of New York on a free silver platform by a seceding Democratic state convention, has refused the nomination. In his letter of declination he says he is not a believer in the free silver doctrine, but believes as his father did, in paper money and credit. Like him, too, he supported the Chicago platform in spite of its advocacy of the free coinage of silver, not on account of it, and because he thinks it on the side of the poor against the rich. He could not, therefore, conscientiously accept a nomination on a platform of which free silver is the essential and distinguishing feature. Besides, he is at work on his father's biography and does not care to enter politics at present.

FULFILLMENT VS. DESTRUCTION.

The statement of Jesus that He came to fulfill the law, and not to destroy it, is one of deep significance. It contains the philosophy of His life work as a reformer of the life of mankind. Many reformers, so called, are simply destructionists. They can tear down, but have no talent for building up. They are iconoclasts, who destroy shrines and images, but who rear no altar at which men can worship.

Jesus of Nazareth was not a reformer of this class. He had too deep an insight into human nature and into the needs of the world to pursue a purely negative and destructive policy. Here was the law given through Moses. It was a divine law. It was perfect for the purpose for which it was given. It was adapted to the needs of the people for whom it was enacted. Jesus Christ was born under the law. It represented the highest religious thought and life of men at that time. It was not adequate to meet all the wants of man, and was never designed to be. Its function was that of a pedagogue, to lead the world to the great Teacher when He should come.

Now that the promised Teacher, the Messiah, has come, what attitude will He assume toward the law? Will He attack it and destroy it, or will He recognize its divine origin and seek to fill it with a larger meaning than the Jewish people had ever given to it, and ultimately to supersede it by a new and higher form of religion, which should take up into itself all that was useful and permanent in the Mosaic law and become a universal religion, casting off all local and national limitations? The latter course was the one He chose, and its wisdom is confirmed by the experience of all the subsequent ages. This divine method is one that must be followed in all successful efforts to improve the religious condition of the world, and to give it a purer and higher type of Christianity.

We cannot break with the past. On the stalk of the religious life and thought of the present must be grafted the newer and broader and deeper conception of God and of religion which are to dominate the future. There is a true sense, therefore, in which historical continuity should be recognized. We do not invent a new gospel; we do not establish a new church; we do not originate new truth; we cannot sacrifice the past, with all its struggles and bitter experiences, in seeking to realize the ideal. On the contrary, we take the old gospel and seek to give it a larger and better interpretation; we accept the old church, established by Jesus, and seek to free it from the accumulated errors in doctrine and practice, and make it conform more closely to Christ's ideal; we accept the truths revealed through "holy men of old," and especially those declared by Christ, and seek to apply them to the new conditions and problems of the times in which we live. This is the true spirit of reformation. It seeks to destroy the old only in so far as it is false and prevents the acceptance of the truth.

It is in this spirit that our own reformatory work must be carried forward. We should do ourselves great injustice not to recognize our debt of gratitude to the moral and intellectual struggles of the past. It would be evidence of the narrowest kind of sectarianism to shut our eyes to the noble achievements which have been wrought by those who have gone before us in their efforts to promote the progress of truth and righteousness, or of the men and women of to-day who, though they see not with us, are, nevertheless, according to their measure of light and faith, working heroically for the world's redemption. We have not come as a religious body to destroy the work of the past, or the ideals of the past, which other reformers have wrought out, but to carry this work forward toward completion, and to fulfill it.

There are those among us who, recognizing the existence of evils which we have not yet overcome, and crudeness of ideas which are incident to all religious movements, grow discouraged and turn away from the divinely appointed task of giving to the world a truer and worthier embodiment of Christian life and fellowship. They do not understand that if the germinal and fundamental principles of our movement are correct, our continuous effort must be to fulfill these ideas and principles in an ever-progressive work of reformation and restoration. "Not that we have already attained, or are already made perfect, but we press on, if so be that we may apprehend that for which also we were apprehended by Christ Jesus."

LEXINGTON (KY.) AND VICINITY.

The recognized capital of the world-famous Blue Grass Region is a sort of mecca for the Disciples of Christ. It was in Lexington, in 1832, that the "Christians" and "Reformers" came together in a permanent union for worship and work. The disciples who had been taught by B. W. Stone were called "Christians." Those who had been instructed by Alexander Campbell were, in those days and in Kentucky, called "Reformers." This union was the result of a protracted correspondence and of personal conferences, in which it was found that Stone and Campbell and their friends were seeking the same end, for the same reason, and by substantially the same methods. The end was the union of believers, the reason was that the world might be led to faith in the Christ, the method was by a return to the religion of the New Testament. From the time of this happy union the Christian Church in Lexington has been strong—numerically, morally, socially, financially strong. The great men in our history have preached in Lexington—the greatest and the least have been heard in this place. It was here that Alexander Campbell and N. L. Rice, in 1843, engaged in a public oral discussion for eighteen days. Henry Clay acted as moderator. This debate decided our standing in Kentucky.

It was in Lexington that B. W. Stone and his friends, in the Presbyterian Church, were tried for heresy. When they saw that their condemnation was determined upon, they retired to a private garden, the property of a friend, and there prayed, committing themselves and their cause to God. They withdrew from that Presbytery and organized what they called the Springfield Presbytery. After a year this Presbytery dissolved. Mr. Stone and his friends committed themselves unreservedly to the Bible as possessing authority in all matters pertaining to the Christian religion and determined, by God's grace, to be, and to be known, simply and only as Christians. The first church established on this principle was organized in June, 1804—born twenty-eight years before the union spoken of above.

It is probable that more men have been trained for the ministry in Lexington than in any other place. This is the home of the College of the Bible. It owns a building well adapted to its work, and is practically free from debt. It has an endowment of seventy thousand dollars. J. W. McGarvey is president. Associated with him are B. C. Deweese, I. B. Grubbs and J. C. Keith. There are more than one hundred young men in attendance this year.

There are five congregations of the Christian Church in Lexington.

The Central Church was formerly known as the Main Street Christian Church. The old place of worship, in a dilapidated condition, still stands. Now that the soldiers are here the upper part of the building is used as a guard house. A painted wooden sign indicates that the lower part is used for Salvation Army meetings. This is the building in which the Campbell and Rice debate was held. The new Central Church is the finest house of worship in Lexington, and one of the most capacious and elegant church edifices owned by the brotherhood. I. J. Spencer preaches in this church. His congregations uniformly fill the splendid audience room, Sunday after Sunday, to the extent of its seating capacity.

The Broadway Church is on the corner of Broadway and Second Street. Mark Collis, a native of London, brought up in Australia and educated in Kentucky University, is the pastor. He is the man for the place. It would not be an extravagance of speech to say that he is an ideal pastor. The house is modern. One thousand persons can be comfortably seated within its walls. The singing in this church is an attractive feature in its worship. The organ is not used. There is no musical instrument of any kind. There is a large and well-trained chorus. Mr. Aldrich is the musical director. If he cannot find an arrangement of music to suit a given occasion he makes it! The church is united and aggressive. It is the purpose of the congregation to establish another church in the near future.

The Chestnut Street Church is a child of the Broadway Church. John S. Shouse is the minister in this congregation. The building in which the church assembles is inferior to the houses of worship just mentioned and the congregation is smaller. It is, however, a good church.

The South Side Mission, as it is called, is a child of the Central Church. Ward Russell is the preacher. A brick chapel has been built. It answers well for the work of the congregation at present.

The Constitution Street Christian Church is composed of brethren in the Lord of African descent. They are good people. The congregation is a true Church of Christ. Some time ago a man was in the service of these disciples of Jesus as a preacher of the Word who was supposed to be wholly engaged in looking after the spiritual interests of the people. The discovery was made that he was a wicked man. Without needless ceremony he was compelled to leave—such was and is the moral sense of the people.

The five congregations live in harmony. There is no strife. There are no divisions among the Disciples of Christ in Lexington. Some of them use instruments of music in their worship; some do not. In all such matters there is liberty. There are no Disciples in Lexington of the "anti" variety. The brethren are in practical sympathy with our organized work at home and in foreign lands.

R. Lin Cave, for many years the efficient pastor of the Vine Street Church, in Nashville, is president of Kentucky University. He is doing a good work. The University is in a healthy condition. The attendance is encouraging. The class rooms of this University are open to women. The attendance of young ladies this year is larger than usual. The courses of study are open to young women as to young men. Enlargements of the work in this institution are in contemplation. At a recent meeting of the board of curators it is understood that certain decisions were reached which will affect for good the future of the University. The College of Arts has an endowment fund of a little more than two hundred thousand dollars.

Hamilton College has been fortunate in securing B. C. Hagerman as president. The universal opinion seems to be that he is the right man in the right place. Hamilton College was formerly known as Hocker Female College, from the name of its founder. More than one hundred young ladies are in attendance. The building is full. This institution is distinctively Christian. The education given there is a Christian education.

The Midway Orphan School is only 14 miles from Lexington. A ride in a carriage to Midway on an autumn day, over the broad and smooth turnpike road is a most enjoyable experience. There are more than a hundred young women in attendance at this school. No one is received under 14 years of age. It is not an orphans' home—it is a school for orphans. But for this institution the young women in attendance would not obtain an education. If a girl can pay for an education in, for instance, Hamilton College, she is not wanted in the Midway Orphan School. There is no better illustration of applied Christianity than is to be seen in the work of this institution. About $15,000 per annum is expended in the education of poor orphan girls. The property is worth probably $50,000. There are 36 acres of ground with buildings. There is a well-invested endowment fund of about $180,000. The income from this fund does not pay expenses. Contributions from churches, Sunday-schools, Societies of Christian Endeavor and individuals assist in paying the necessary expenses. The young women in this school are so trained that they are sought after as teachers in the public schools. Money is needed. The work could be indefinitely enlarged if the board of trustees had the means. Additional buildings are needed. The faculty should be increased. The attendance would then be larger. The business of this institution is so well conducted that all bills are paid at the close of each year. There are no debts. There will soon be added a business department in which bookkeeping, stenography and the use of the typewriter will be taught.

Lexington is the natural center of a remarkable region. The beauty of the landscape and fertility of the soil cannot easily be exaggerated. It is indeed a wonderful country. But Lexington is the center of such a group of Christian Churches as can not be found anywhere else on the face of the earth.

Thirty-four miles distant is the town of Cynthiana, where lives J. J. Haley, who ministers to a large congregation in holy things. Paris, the capital of Bourbon, is only nineteen miles distant, where is a strong church, in which J. S. Sweeney has held the pastorate for twenty-eight years. His father, G. E. Sweeney, lives with him at the advanced age of ninety-two years. H. D. Clark is the preacher in Mt. Sterling, distant thirty-four miles. The Christian Church in Mt. Sterling is the church of the town. Its pastor is recognized as the best preacher in the place. It is but nineteen miles to Winchester, where lived and labored, for years, the lamented W. S. Keene. This congregation is, at present, without a pastor. J. S. Kendrick is our preacher in Danville, distant from Lexington thirty-five miles. This town is Presbyterian headqurters in Kentucky. There is a strong Christian Church in the place. Danvile is a prohibition town; Lexington is not. Fayette, of which Lexington is the capital, is a prohibition county. When one sees the aweful ruin wrought by strong drink in Kentucky it is difficult to understand why the people of the state do not raise up en masse and drive the infernal business from the commonwealth. Some things seen in a recent visit to Kentucky cannot, in this place, be told. The manufacture and use of whiskey in Kentucky is a fearful blot on the otherwise fair fame of the old commonwealth. This hellish business is at the bottom of almost all that is bad in the state. But to resume:

Frankfort, the capital of the state, is distant less than thirty miles from Lexington. Here George Darsie has preached for twenty-two years. The church was comparatively weak when he became its pastor; it is now one of the strong congregations in the state. Harrodsburg, once famous as the seat of Daughters' College, under the presidency of John Augustus Williams, is distant thirty-four miles. The church in Harrodsburg is without a pastor. Victor W. Dorris preaches in Georgetown, twelve miles from Lexington. Nicholasville is distant same number of miles. R. G. Frank preaches in Nicholasville. Shelbyville is forty miles away. The pastor of the Christian Church in Shelbyville is Hugh McLelland. Forty-one miles distant is the town of Richmond, where W. R. Lloyd is pastor. W. B. Taylor serves the congregation in Versailles, about thirteen miles from Lexington, Walter M. White is our bishop in the town of Midway, fourteen miles from this center—Lexington. In all the places here named the Christian Church is strong and possesses great influence.

It is not, therefore, an extravagant speech to say that Lexington is the center of such a group of Christian churches as cannot be found anywhere else on the face of the earth. The congregations in the towns only are mentioned—and not all of them. Nothing is here said about the strong country churches in this region. There is not space in this article to write their names.

Hour of Prayer.

THE GOSPEL INVITATION.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Oct. 19th.)

A certain man made a great supper; and he bade many: and he sent forth his servant at supper time to say to them that were bidden, Come; for all things are now ready.—Luke 14: 16, 17.

In this way did Jesus make known to his disciples, and to all the people who heard him, the fact that his mission in the world was for the benefit of all, and all were invited to share in its benefits. Under the figure of "a great supper" he would emphasize the richness and fullness of the provisions made in the gospel to meet the needs of our human nature.

When one contemplates the sublime disclosures of God's character as a Father, the strength and tenderness of His love, the revelation concerning His will and man's duty and destiny, contained in the gospel—all of which are so essential to man's well being, he can understand that it is indeed a great feast of spiritual things to which we are invited. On the other hand, when we consider man's spiritual condition, "without God and without hope in the world," ignorant of God and of his will, alienated from Him by wicked works, and living largely in the lusts of the flesh, dead to all the higher and holier things, and yet with an everlasting hunger in his heart for something better than this world can offer we can understand man's need of just such a feast as is offered to us in the gospel of the Son of God. We are prepared, too, to appreciate the graciousness of the invitation to come and partake.

It was at a feast to which Jesus had been invited that he spake this parable. He saw how readily men responded to an invitation to a feast to satisfy the hunger of the body, and he could but contrast this with the extreme reluctance which the people manifested in accepting the invitation of Heaven to a spiritual feast. There is no accounting for this strange contrast without taking into consideration man's depraved and perverted moral nature and his blindness to those things which relate to his highest interests. It is a fact, however, which every religious teacher has observed, that one of the chief and most difficult tasks he has is to bring men to the consciousness of their spiritual needs and moral bankruptcy. Without the sense of hunger men do not care to eat. Without the consciousness of their moral and spiritual poverty men do not avail themselves of the riches of grace in Christ Jesus.

In this parable men are represented as making all sorts of absurd excuses for not attending the supper, when it is apparent that the real reason they do not go is that they do not want to go. We see the exact counterpart of this in all religious work. Men are prone to make excuses for not being Christians, none of which are satisfying to their own conscience. Once the soul hungers and thirsts after righteousness there is no obstacle on earth that can keep it from accepting Christ and his salvation. Why, then, do men decieve themselves in trying to deceive others with their flimsy excuses for not becoming disciples of the Lord Jesus? Nor does this excuse-making end with conversion. Even Christians are prone to make excuses for not becoming better Christians, and for not assuming burdens and responsibilities in the work of the kingdom. Many have formally accepted the invitation, and have tasted gingerly of the viands prepared, but have never yet availed ourselves of the richest and most precious things prepared for us in the gospel. Are we justified in denying ourselves the supreme joy and the higher Christian power which would come to us from a fuller participation of the spiritual blessings of the gospel?

As Jesus extended this invitation to all the hungering and starving sons and daughters of man, so he has laid upon each one of his disciples the duty of carrying the invitation to all the needy of earth. This is the meaning of our missionary organizations. They have for their object the preaching of the gospel at home and abroad. These messengers of Jesus Christ, who go out into the pagan world, and into the destitute portions of our own great country, repeat the invitation of the Master, saying: "A great spiritual feast has been prepared to meet the needs of the human soul; come, for all things are now ready." And so the word has gone out into all the world that Christ has come to minister to the world's hunger.

It is worth while for each one of us here to-night to ask ourselves what part we have in this blessed ministry; what are we doing to extend the invitation of Jesus to all the tribes and peoples of earth? We have a responsibility that cannot be evaded, and for neglecting which we can have no justifying excuse. "Let him that heareth say, Come."

PRAYER.

Our gracious Heavenly Father, accept our thanks for the rich provision Thou hast made in the gospel for all our manifold wants. We thank Thee especially for Christ, whom Thou didst send into the world, not to condemn the world, but to bind up its wounds, to feed its hunger, to open its prison-doors, to comfort its sorrow and to lead it to a higher and better life. We praise Thee that through Him Thou hast extended the gracious invitation to all who hunger to come and partake of the spiritual food which Thou hast prepared in Him. Incline our hearts more and more to feed on Christ, and to bear His blessed invitation to all who are perishing of hunger. And may it be ours, at last, when our earthly conflicts are ended, to sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, and with the prophets and apostles, and the heroes of the faith of all ages, at the great marriage supper of the Lamb; to enjoy the fullness of Thy blessing forever more. In His Name. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

"Times change and we change with them." This is well. It is the condition of progress. We were reading a few days ago a splendid and deserved tribute to one of our great leaders who, years ago, laid down his Cross for the Crown. We knew the brother, whose labors and whose heroic devotion to the larger truth which he saw are recognized and properly valued in the article referred to, quite intimately for twenty years. We were of one mind and one heart as touching the great principles of the Reformation which we plead. But he was misrepresented, charged with unsoundness, and often bitterly criticised in his day and time, but he was true to the right as God gave him to see the right, and died in faith, not having received the approbation of all his brethren. As the most prominent leader of the type of thought which he represented, it was his lot to receive most of the blows that were delivered by the opposition. But the hands that stoned him then are ready to assist in building him a monument now. So has it ever been:

"Truth forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne;
Yet that scaffold sways the future,
For behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,

Not long ago we sat upon a platform at a great national convention by the side of an ancient veteran who, in the strength and power of his younger manhood, stemmed the current of popular disfavor, was ostracised, persecuted, threatened with death, and his life often imperiled because of devotion to what he believed to be right and truth. His name was mentioned with honor in the convention for his long and loyal service, and the great audience gave him an ovation, as he stood before them, venerable in years and bearing the battle-scars of his long and faithful service. Reaching him a hand as he sat down, we said: "It comes late, sometimes, but it always comes!" His heart was too full for response, as his memory ran back across the years, and he contrasted the then with the now. How much nobler is it to live such a life than to float along the smooth surface of popular favor, antagonizing no wrong, making issue with no falsehood, giving battle to no evil!

It was so in the time of our Lord. Men were then building the tombs of the prophets and quoting their utterances as final authority, while they were the sons of those who had stoned the prophets for seeing farther into the heart of things, and having a truer and worthier conception of God and of worship than they had. The prophets were always giving trouble to kings, and to idolators, and to the advocates of popular wrongs, by denouncing the wickedness of their times, the heartless formality of the worship, and by pointing to a more spiritual religion. But many of them paid the penalty of their devotion to right with their lives. While the men of Christ's day were building tombs for them and honoring them with words, they were giving the very same treatment to Christ that their fathers had given to the prophets. Oh, dull eyes that cannot see and recognize the heroism of men who stand for the larger and the better truth while they are yet among us!

"Strange we never prize the music Till the sweet-voiced bird has flown."

Strange we cannot understand the men who blaze out the way for the world's progress until they have gone, and then come and lay our belated garlands on their graves. It is saddening to think how many of those who are crying, "Hosanna to Jesus!" to-day, had they lived in the time of his earthly ministry would have joined in the crowd who cried, "Crucify him! Crucify him!"

We are thinking of an unmarked grave in Missouri, that holds the dust of as true a moral hero as ever walked to martyr-fires to lay down his life for the cause he loved. He used to write us in the stress and storm of criticism which some of his utterances provoked, saying: "My appeal is to the future. I am willing to bear the calumny of the present, in the hope of that vindication which I am sure will come when I am gone." Noble man of God! Loyal servant of Jesus Christ! He needs no monument, on his own account, to mark his quiet resting-place. For the eye of God watches over his ashes, and the children of the fathers will build his tomb, and will write upon it an epitaph that will honor his memory and honor the name of Jesus Christ. And so it is that the world moves forward, and the tombs of its martyrs are the milestones that mark its progress.

Questions and Answers.

Editor CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I wish you would give your position on the design of baptism, as I think you are misrepresented here by a brother who says "you and the preaching fraternity of the church teach that the baptism of a believer in the name of Christ is not for, but because of, remission of past sins. T. A. Foster.

Sparta, Mo.

The "brother" referred to does not, of course, read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, but he doubtles does read some paper whose editor feels it his duty to define the position of the editor of this paper and of the "preaching fraternity." The scriptural passage, "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins" (Acts 2:38, Revised Version), cannot possibly be rendered "because of the remission of your sins." This passage, as well as many others of similar import, shows that remission of sins is an object toward which repentance and baptism look. In what sense baptism looks toward remission of sins is an open question, about which honest men differ; but that it is mentioned in this passage and other passages as a condition precedent to the remission of sins in some sense is what every Christian scholar is bound to admit. We do not give the passage a meaning that brings it into antagonism with the doctrine of justification by faith. We believe that faith is the principle of justification, and that both repentance and baptism spring out of faith. We look upon baptism as a gracions adaptation or human need, to aid us in coming to the knowledge of remission of sins, and not as a hard exaction or price to be paid for pardon. When does faith justify? When it leads the believing soul to surrender itself to Jesus Christ, as Savior and Lord. But in what act shall this surrender be indicated or manifested? Paptism was instituted, according to our view, to meet that question, and to serve as the mark of a surrendered life. No other view, it seems to us, can account for the importance that is attached to this ordinance in the New Testament Scriptures. It was, during the apostolic ministery, "the seal and sign of pardon" because it was the "seal and sign" of self-surrender to Jesus Christ, the only Savior of sinners. Some other act, doubtless, might have been selected by divine authority to serve this purpose, but it is impossible to think of one more impressive or more appropriate than the simple and solemn act of being "buried with Christ in baptism," and and raised again therefrom "in the likeness of His resurrection." Baptism, then, is for or unto the remission of sins, because it has been ordained by divine authority as the overt act in which the believing soul openly surrenders to Jesus Christ and formally swears allegiance to Him, and because remission of sins is predicated on his surrender to the Lordship of Jesus.

A brother (M. T. Cooper, Ipava, Ill.,) takes exception to our answer in a previous issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the inquiry concerning the course of the evangelist and pastor who refused to accommodate themselves to the "weakness," as we call it, of the candidate who insisted on being baptized in a stream of water rather than in a baptistery. His objection is that the "weakness" referred to belonged to the evangelist and pastor, and not to the man who wished to be baptized as was his Master, in the open stream. He expresses a similar preference and says, "We believe our faith is just as strong in God and in His requirements as the editor's, and a great deal stronger than that of this pastor or evangelist."

We did not say that this brother's faith in God or Christ was "weak." We did not use the term "faith" in this sense, but rather in the sense in which Paul uses the term when he says: "But him that is weak in faith receive ye, yet not to doubtful disputations. One man hath faith to eat all things; but he that is weak eateth herbs." Faith here is used in the sense of moral discernment as to the things that grow out of or have to do with faith. In this sense we would have to insist, notwithstanding the courteous protest of our correspondent, that the man who seemed to think that his baptism in a pool of water would not be valid, indicated a "weakness" in spiritual discernment, which is sure to give way in time to a better understanding of the gospel. It is that "weakness" which makes a mere incidental feature of an ordinance of the nature of an essential. There is no remedy for this confusion of things that differ but spiritual growth.

How do yon account for the success of the Mormons in gaining proselytes to a system that is so monstrous as to shock the sensibilities of refined people? Occident.

1. By the zeal which they display in proselyting, which is as marvelous as the absurdity of their claims.

2. By their system of sending out evangelists who go at their own charges, living off the people. They have 1,500 such men in the field.

3. By their appeals to the lower motives and lusts of men.

4. By the strange fact, which Barnum observed, that the people loved to be humbugged.

Current Religious Thought

In an interesting article on "The Newer Education and the Ministry," by William Jewett Tucker, D. D., president Dartmouth College, Hanover, N. J., in the Biblical World for September, there is a distinction of methods made that is very suggestive and helpful. We give the last two paragraphs of President Tucker's article:

And when we turn to our social problems, we find ourselves under no less a necessity for painstaking and thorough study. The difference between the old philanthropy and the new, or between the lower and the higher, has been well put in the statement: "The lower philanthropy tries to put right what social conditions have put wrong. The higher philanthropy tries to put right the social conditions themselves." The difference is immense. It is the difference between the charity which expresses itself altogether in relief and rescue, and the charity which expresses itself in restraint and precaution, in the effort to recover the rights of the individual, and in the greater effort to effect at some vital points the readjustment, if not the reconstruction, of society.

To whatever department of theological training we turn, it is found to be impossible to ignore or disallow the method of the newer education. The subject-matter of the old education must hold a chief place in the preparation for the ministry, but the subject-matter of the new has an increasing value, and its method is imperative in the reconstruction of theological science. And for the practical work of the pulpit we have the right to expect of the education which takes a man up on his way to the ministry that it will accomplish these three things: First, that it will develop and furnish the man as well as specialize toward preaching; second, that it will give him contact with the mind of his time; third, that it will give him access to the truth, and not simply the technical means of access, but the strenuous spirit of search.

In an address before the Baptist Ministers' Conference, New York City, recently, by Robert Stuart McArthur, D. D., an abstract of which was published in the Religious Review of Reviews for September, are some terse and timely sayings. In speaking of "Realism" as one of the characteristics of the the present times, Dr. McArthur said:

Another characteristic of the time is what is here called realism. This word is not used in its philosophical sense, nor in some of its theological senses; but simply as equivalent to reality, to truth or truthness. We are seeking for truth, no matter from what quarter it comes nor by what messenger it is brought. We have little concern for the new theology or the old theology as such; what we want is the true theology. Baptists have no creeds, in the technical sense, to come between them and the truth. They are not fettered to the cemeteries of dead theologians. Every generation must do its own thinking. We are better able to make creeds than those who make the so-called ecumenical creeds of the church. Creeds made by men in one generation can be remade or entirely unmade by men in another generation. It is far more difficult, often, to interpret the creeds than it is to explain the Scriptures on which the creeds are supposed to be based.

We must love truth more than we do our prejudices, our traditions, our theological systems. Creeds have often been unsightly scaffolds which have largely destroyed the symmetry of God's temple of truth; the falling of the scaffolds reveals the beauty of the temple in its heavenly perfection and radiant glory. Truth is the daughter of God, the heir of eternity, and the queen of heaven. The true spirit of realism, as here defined, strikes a vigorous blow at the claims of churchianity. The doctrine of so-called apostolic succession is groundless historically, and worthless doctrinally. In the very nature of the case the apostles could not have successors, in the sense in which the term is often used. Realism hates all pretension; it wants facts. Why should a creed be called the "Apostles' Creed," when the last apostle was in heaven about four hundred years before it was made, even in its substance; and the last apostle was in heaven for nearly or quite seven hundred years before it took the form it now has? It may be said that this title simply implies that this creed is a truthful compound of apostolic doctrine. But it was given with the idea that its clauses were actually contributed by the apostles. So Rufinus the compiler and traditionalist of the fourth century teaches; but no historical student to-day attaches importance to his testimony. Why should a creed be called "Athanasian," when the great Athanasius never heard of it, and was in heaven hundreds of years before it was really known. These are examples of what Dr. Swainson, a good authority on creeds, calls "pious frauds." Such titles are akin to the "False Decretals," and the "Donation of Constantine." Such shams in religion tend to make infidels.

We want truth, not pretention, not tradition, not asumption. Truth against the world. Let no one fear the criticism of the time so long as it is seeking and finding truth. But let us be quite sure that it is truth which it gives us, and not some old error with a new face. If we are sure that it is truth, we want it, and it will make us free indeed.

The Christian Commonwealth, London, contains a statement formulated by Dr. Rade on what German working men think of Christianity. Dr. Rade had made an investigation of the religious state of working men in Germany for the National Evangelical Social Congress, recently held in Berlin, and this is the substance of his report. It presents much for reflection and study, especially as these views are by no means uncommon to working men in this country. The information is in the form of replies to certain questions. Dr. Rade says:

1. Concerning the Church and the clergy. The radical, social, democratic working man considers the church a hindrance to true culture and progress, and a means in the hands of priest and pastor for the benefit of the privileged classes. Clergymen are either stupid or hypocrites. The more moderate class of working men, some even with Christian convictions, are quite suspicious of the State Churches, and think that their method of government is adapted to the needs of the ruling classes, and only in exceptional cases are these working men willing to have confidence in the clergy. These ideas prevail even among the evangelical working men's unions, organizations especially established for the purpose of counteracting anti-Christian tendencies among the laboring classes. 2. Concerning Church rites. The social democratic element regard these as perfectly useless, maintained only through the force of social customs and the influence of women. These rites are only dead ceremonies. The more conservative class of working men demand that in the administration of these rites no distinction be made between the rich and the poor. Compulsory baptism of infants is strongly condemned, and confirmation is both ridiculed and approved. Church funerals are also condemned even by this class of men. 3. Concerning Christ. Of all the answers received, only one ventured to deny His existence, and to claim that He was an ideal creation. It is strongly maintained that the Christ of history is not the Christ of the Church. What Christ sought and His doctrines as since perverted are as different as day and night. Most of the working men regard Christ as a very prominent man who took a firm stand for the emanicipation of the oppressed, and if He were living to-day would belong to their party. Some of the men, however, in their replies, still retain a religious devotion to the Lord and acknowledge His entirely unique character, and do not deny the possibility of the miracles ascribed to Him. 5. Concerning God and creation. God is regarded by many as an impossibility. Nature is God. The fact of creation seemed to perplex many of the respondents. They say that the world was not created, but it came into existence. The word "evolution" solves the problem for them. They are advocates of Darwin's theory. The Biblical account of creation is unscientific and an offense to conscience and a hindrance to a higher type of faith. Even the Christian class of working men do not stand on a much higher level. They do not accept the Biblical account as it stands, but understand it symbolically.

Our Budget.

—On to Chattanooga!

—Take a health certificate with you.

—This certificate is not for publication, but as evidence of good faith.

—Nothing worse will be caught at Chattanooga than an attack of missionary zeal.

—Blessed are they who are not scared at rumors, but who put their trust in God and go forward in the path of duty.

—The lesson of falling leaves is before us again.

—The General Convention, at Chattanooga, begins on Thursday of this week.

—Approaching winter brings renewed opportunities for applied Christianity.

—The lengthening evenings raise the question of intellectual food for the winter.

—Are you doing all that you can do for the welfare of the church of which you are a member?

—Do you not think that you could induce your neighbor to subscribe for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST?

—A forward movement all along the line means more than simply a line of protracted meetings.

—The most descriptive, realistic, appropriate prayer that some people who join the church could pray would be, "Now I lay me down to sleep," etc.

—The present year will record a new high-water mark in our missionary offerings and successes. This ought to be a matter of rejoicing and encouragement to the churches, even if not what they ought to be, as yet.

—If there are conditions in the church, the church to-day, that are dark and discouraging, are they not to be attributed, largely, to past causes? The fruits of present methods are not yet apparent.

—Rev. Samuel I. Lindsay, a Presbyterian minister of this city, read an interesting paper to our preachers in this office on last Monday on City Evangelism. The chief point of interest in the paper was the assertion that the time for united action of all evangelical churches against sin in our great cities had come. The doctrine of a confederation of forces was endorsed by the preachers who heard the paper.

—The League of Social Service, New York City, is certainly doing an excellent work. The literature sent out by this league upon moral, social and religious themes is vigorously written, yet unsectarian and non-partisan as to religious and political parties. One of the ablest writers on moral and economic questions that this country has produced, Josiah Strong, is president of this league. An annual membership in this league, which is one dollar, will carry with it the receipt of one copy of every leaflet issued during the year of membership and the use of the information bureau. Others who co-operate financially to the extent of five dollars or more in one year will be sustaining members. Further information and sample leaflets may be procured on application to the League for Social Service, United Charities Building, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Street New York.

—The influence of many preachers of the gospel is ruined by the spirit in which they go about their work. A pastor or an evangelist ought not to assume dictatorial power in and over a congregation. This course is sure to create opposition and to make enemies. If Paul could lay aside his apostolic power and say, "I beseeh thee," how much more should the evangelist or the pastor refrain from the exhibition of authority in the Lord's house. No man has a right to lord it over God's heritage. Every preacher should rule by love. Nothing sooner destroys a preacher's usefulness than the exhibition of authority. The church of Christ has no use for a dictator or autocrat.

—Not all who put themselves forward in church work are qualified for the place sought. All such ought to know that they offend good taste by so doing, and bring reproach upon the cause. On the other hand even the most competent when forced to the front are often most severely critised. This, too, is an evil under the sun, especially in church work. But of the two evils the former is the greater. A proper tribunal to pass upon the competency of every member of the church for any particular work seems to be one of the urgent wants of to-day in church work, and this tribunal every church ought to have in its pastor and elders.

—The October issue of the Christian Quarterly, number eight of their new series, is out and presents an inviting table of contents. The titles of the leading articles are: (1) The Trend of Modern Religious Thought, by the editor of this paper; (2) Religious Humbugs, by H. W. Everest; (3) The Supply of Preachers, J. W. McGarvey; (4) Alexander Campbell and the Mellennial Harbinger, F. M. Green; (5) Isaac Errett and Our Later History, A. M. Haggard; (6) Human Volition and Responsibility, M. C. Tiers; (7) The Law of Analysis and Synthesis Applied, D. A. Wickizer. In the book department quite a number, of important books are reviewed. There is one important because always interesting feature of the Quarterly missing in this number, and that is the lack of editorial notes and comments, caused by the editor's absence in England, and the pressure of his college duties after his return. There is not likely to be any complaint of this number, however, for the want of variety, as the leading articles cover a wide range of thought. The appearance of this number is attractive and creditable alike to the publisher and editor, and we are sure will be appreciated by the reader. We only regret that so worthy an enterprise is not more generally supported by our preachers and others.

—The Endeavor World recently contained an article on "Pocketbook Openers" and mentioned the "joke," the "sneer," "pathos," "pride," the "appetite" and "principle," but singularly forgot to mention love. When men love they give. No other power affects the purse like love.

—The friends of Cotner University will be interested in J. W. Hilton's statement of its present financial condition in this paper. We are glad to see that considerable headway has been made toward the liquidation of the debts of the institution and hope that the amount yet needed to free it from debt may be raised. We hope that Bro. Hilton's appeal to the brotherhood will meet with hearty response.

—In this issue we publish one of several articles we have received, called out by Bro. Tyler's editorial on "The Possession and Use of Property." We will publish another of these articles next week which will doubtless fully cover the ground in Bro. Tyler's article to which exception has been taken. No one will have any trouble in understanding just where Bro. Garst stands on this question by his article in this paper and think his views worthy of due consideration. We do not regard the single tax doctrine a cure-all for all industrial diseases, but we do believe that it strikes at the root of one of the great evils of our industrial system.

—From the 7th annual report of the principal of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, at Tuskegee, Alabama, we learn that notwithstanding the war and other unfavorable conditions, considerable headway has been made. During the present year 1,047 students have been enrolled and $58,000 added to the plant which is now estimated at $300,000. But like all great institutions, much more money is needed by its founder, Booker T. Washington, to reach his ideal of an industrrial school for his people. The sum of $25,000 is needed at once for properly heating, lighting and watering the present buildings. The report closes with an optimistic outlook for the future of this now wonderful enterprise.

A MISSIONARY'S WIFE

Interesting Letter from India—A Long Summer Season.

The following letter is from the wife of an American Baptist missionary at Nowgong, Assam, India: "After living here for several years I found the climate was weakening me. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla every summer. This I found so beneficial that I now take one dose every morning for nine months in the year, that is, through the hot weather. My general health is excellent and my blood is in good condition. My weight does not vary more than one pound throughout the year. I find Hood's Sarsaparilla indispensable in the summer and recommend it for use in a debilitating climate." MRS. P. H. MOORE.

The above letter is similar to thousands received and constantly coming in.

Hood's Pills cure nausea, indigestion, biliousness. Price 25c.

—We are glad to furnish our readers this week an excellent likeness of Prof. C. L. Loos, of Kentucky University, who is also the president of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society. He was the successor of Isaac Errett, in this position, and has given much time and thought to the subject of Foreign Missions. Few men are as vigorous in mind and body as is Prof. Loos at his age. May he be spared to us yet many years, to help advance the cause he has served so long and so faithfully.

—The serious sickness of Admiral Sampson, reported last week, following so closely upon the sickness of Captain Clark, Captain Evans and other naval officials is indicative of the intense mental strain to which they were subjected in the late war. Sometimes people are inclined to think of such men as overpaid and overpraised political pets, but they do not always know the facts in the case. It appears that the strain borne by high officials on our battleships has not only cost the life of Captain Gridley, but seriously affected the health of others, and perhaps has shortened their lives many years.

—The following card will call out the sympathy of hundreds of friends who know and love Bro. Reynolds:

MY DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—It is with a sad heart that I write this card to tell you that my sainted daughter, Mrs. Lucy Wetherhold, died this morning at two o'clock. Oh how can I bear up under this terrible blow. We need your sympathy and your prayers. Your broken-hearted brother, J. C. REYNOLDS.

Macomb, Ill., Oct. 7, 1898.

We had learned of Sister Wetherhold's illness and are not surprised to hear that she has passed through the change that awaits all mortals. The editor has known the deceased from her girlhood, and a truer and more affectionate daughter and wife we have never known. We tender our profound sympathies to Bro. Reynolds and other members of the family in this sad bereavement. He knows how to lean on the everlasting arms. He has been making his home at his daughter's for some time, where he received from her and her husband every mark of affectionate regard and care. We commend them to God whose consolation alone can comfort us in such trials.

—In our issue of September 8th we republished an article from the Ladies' Home Journal, "The Late-Staying Caller," by Robt. J. Burdette, without credit to that journal. The omission of the credit was an oversight and the matter is here mentioned with our compliments to the Ladies' Home Journal for the pleasure of the article.

"PUBLICK OCCURRENCES" THAT ARE MAKING HISTORY

An important department in THE SATURDAY EVENING POST, a weekly magazine founded by Benjamin Franklin in 1728.

It will give the story of important current events the world over in a condensed form. It will explain and interpret; it will throw light on many puzzling questions, on the meaning and relations of events that come to the general reader. The newspapers do not usually tell the beginnings of national and international troubles—there are usually "missing links" in their story. These lapses the Post will fill out.

"SPIRITED REMARKS" A strong editorial page. There are not many of them in the country—clever, vigorous, striking editorials from an individual point of view. The best writers have been secured to write regularly for the Post editorial page, which will be made one of its strongest features.

SHORT STORIES AND SKETCHES Nearly one-half of each issue of the Post will be given to fiction. The stories will be selected wholly for their interest, variety and literary value, and not because of the name or fame of the author. Every story will be fully illustrated by the Post's artists.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST as it is To-day

A good magazine is a good newspaper in a dress suit. It should have all the brightness, interest, enterprise and variety of the newspaper, with the dignity, refinement and poise of the magazine. The Saturday Evening Post, the oldest periodical in America, is a high-grade illustrated weekly magazine, equal in tone and character to the best of the monthlies.

IT WILL BE MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS ON TRIAL, FROM NOW TO JANUARY 1, 1899, ON RECEIPT OF ONLY TEN CENTS

(THE REGULAR SUBSCRIPTION PRICE IS $2.50 PER YEAR)

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY, PHILADELPHIA

—It is wise to do all church work in a systematic way, and as far as possible to classify duties; but these classifying lines should not be so rigidly fixed that any church member or officer may not work anywhere that necessity demands. It is all very nice to say that it is the duty of the deacons to look after the secular affairs of the church, the elders the spiritual and the pastor the pulpit work, but there are times, places and conditions when this order cannot be observed. The elders and the preacher should not be above doing the secular work of the church when the deacons are absent or need assistance. Some successful preachers have served as deacons, elder, preacher and janitor coetaneously in their time.

—The following clipping is not from the Funny Column of the Baptist News, but is intended for a sober editorial utterance, but we can trust our readers to see the unconscious humor in it:

When the returns are all in and Dr. Hulbert has heard from all the associations which have declared against affiliation of Baptist schools with the University of Chicago, he will have enough to keep him amused all winter. So far as heard from the rock-ribbed order of Baptists continue to resolute. Certainly they have no thought of shutting up the great University, but they warn against it as against other giant evils.

—Foreign Missions, Home Missions, Church Extention, Sunday-schools, Christian Endeavor work, C. W. B. M., Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses, Negro Evangelization and educational interests are the great themes about which a great people are in conference this week at Chattanooga, Tenn.

—We acknowledge the receipt of complimentary tickets to the full course of lectures for the season, to be given at Christian Tabernacle, Decatur, Ill.

—T. W. Grafton, pastor of the church at Rock Island, Ill., has an interesting article in the Christian Oracle, of last week, on "The Life of John Smith." Such a life as this stands out in striking contrast to that of the ordinary preacher of our times and acts, or should, as a stimulus to greater energies by our preachers for the cause they are pleading. It will do our younger preachers good to know more about the pioneer preachers of the restoration movement.

—We are requested to make the following correction in the song, "On to Chattanooga," by J. H. Stark, in our issue last week. In the third line of the first verse after the word "ground," the words, "this time," should be inserted. And after the first word in the third line of the third verse insert the word, "we," so that it will read: "So we shout aloud our songs, our greetings," etc.

—Some splendid meetings are reported in our evangelistic columns this week.

—This number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST contains an unusual number of short articles. This is what our readers like. They admit of so much greater variety in a paper. We wish that all contributors would have more regard for the beauty of condensed articles.

—Concerning the recent victory for prohibition in Canada the Voice, for Oct. 6th, says:

We see no reason for yielding one fraction of the moral effect of the victory in Canada. It was a magnificant triumph, and though it is not conclusive, in the sense of having any legislating power, it ought to result in the prompt enactment by Parliament of a Dominion prohibitory law. Prohibitionists of Canada must not be robbed now of the victory they have so nobly won.

—If you would know the splendid lines of reading outlined for Bethany C. E. Reading Courses this year send to J. Z. Tyler, Cleveland, Ohio, for a copy of the Bethany C. E. Bulletin for October. The information contained in this Bulletin ought to make even a disinterested person hungry for knowledge.

—At last a report has been published by the Society for Psychical Research which professes to have obtained experimental evidence of immortality. Dr. Richard Hodgson, who has been spending years in experiments with a medium, after his exposure of the frauds of Madam Blavatsky and Eusapia Pallandino, has announced his conviction that he has facts to make immortality an easier hypothesis than any that can be opposed to it. The report in which he states this conclusion and the facts alleged to substantiate it is one of the most amazing pieces of work that I ever read. It must produce a crisis in the study of this phenomena. There may be no outburst of excitement respecting the question, but all who have followed the work of the society, whether near or from far, must recognize that students of it have come to the parting of the ways; and even if they can still suspend judgment on the main issue, they must begin to feel the tremendous nature of the conclusions involved, whatever theory is adopted to account for the facts.

The above is a paragraph from an article in the Independent, last week, by Prof. J. H. Hyslop, of Columbia College, N. Y., on Dr. Hodgson's study of the report of the Society for Psychical Research, and his conclusions. We have not seen the report to which Prof. Hyslop refers, neither the study of it by Dr. Hodgson, but we are far from being convinced of his claims from the article in the Independent. As to a physical basis for a belief in the existence of the spirit of man after death, we do not see how we could well have better attested facts than those of the Bible, and as to intercommunication between spirits in and out of the flesh, we are of doubtful disputation, but not beyond the reach of clear testimony. The dangers of such a doctrine, however, are in the already too large accumulation of acknowledged chaff and rubbish, deception and fraud that have gathered about it as well as the absence of a clearly defined purpose in its promulgation. So far this doctrine has been unfortunately so associated with oriental mysticism that it is difficult to regard the usual so-called phenomena of spiritualism seriously. In fact, in the same number of the Independent we have another article on the same phenomena from the pen of another professor—E. E. Slosson, of the University of Wyoming—in which he stands extremely opposed to the claims of Prof. Hyslop. Here, for instance, is a paragraph from Prof. Slosson's article:

One of the commonest of mediumistic manifestations is light. It is a poor "psychic" who cannot make a ball of fire or a phosphorescent hand appear in a dark room, and we have Professor Crook's photographs to show the objective character of this light. Now if this radiant energy will decompose silver bromide on a sensitive plate why should it not decompose nitrocellulose in the magazine of a Spanish warship. Probably no single person would have sufficient force to project the psychic spark far enough, but a battery of mediums could be located on some prominent point, and connected so as to secure the greatest possible voltage.

In the secret service department supernatural powers would be invaluable. An astral form should have been kept in Sagasta's Cabinet at all hours, and perhaps a similar watch at Paris and Berlin. All languages are alike to such messengers, so a knowledge of foreign tongues would be as unnecessary to them as to an American Minister at a European court. The projection of astral forms seems quite easy from the descriptions of the process. It is simply a kind of applied calculus, first differentiation into infinitesimals and integration at the required place. Telepathy is getting so dreadfully common nowadays that there ought to be no difficulty at all in finding out the plans of the enemy, provided he has any.

PERSONAL MENTION.

T. W. Grafton, pastor of the church at Rock Island, Ill., was in the city last week attending the stockholders' meeting of the Christian Publishing Co., and visiting old friends.

A half tone picture of the vice-president of the C. W. B. M., Mrs. A. M. Atkinson, appears on the first page of Missionary Tidings for October.

John Fuller, minister of the church at Randall, Kan., in company with his sister called at this office on Thursday of last week. Bro. Fuller is returning from an Eastern trip and an absence from his people of one month.

We have learned that F. N. Calvin, minister of the church at Waco, Tex., has resigned to take effect Dec. 1st, and that he is entertaining the idea of special evangelistic work in the interest of the spiritual welfare of churches. However, he may accept a new pastoral work. Bro. Calvin has been seven years with the church at Waco. He says that he has had an average of nearly two accessions per week in his regular work for over eleven years. This is a good record.

George Lipscomb, of Maryville, Mo., says: "After a very successful six months of labor with us Bro. James S. Eldredge has resigned and entered the University Medical College, Kansas City, Mo., where he will graduate in the spring. He has added 46 to the church in DeKalb County and organized a new church. Our church is in a prosperous condition and is out of debt."

J. H. Bergman and son, of Bloomington, Ill., called at this office on Thursday last. Bro. Bergman had not visited St. Louis since 1848, and finds it quite unlike the village of that year. The town has grown somewhat since that day. Bro. Bergman speaks well of Bro. Gilliland and his work at Bloomington, and the church is showing its appreciation of his labors by repairs on its house of worship to the amount of about $5,000.

T. A. Abbott has changed his residence in this city from 4760 Kennerly Avenue to 4144 Westminster Place.

H. L. Atkinson, minister of the Church of Christ at California, Pa., has removed to Chicago, Ill. His address is University of Chicago, 146 Divinity Hall.

J. M. Lowe, minister of the gospel at Winterset, Ia., has resigned his labors for the church at that place, the resignation to become effective on or before Jan. 1, 1899.

J. H. Fuller, minister of the gospel at Burlington, Ia., who has been visiting and preaching at Barberville, Ky., for a season, called at this office last week on his way back to Burlington.

G. W. Hamilton has moved back to Roby, Mo., his old home, and is ready to answer any call for a protracted meeting.

S. B. Moore, the new pastor at Compton Heights Christian Church, this City, took his place as a member of the Christian Preachers' Association, of St. Louis, at its meeting in this office on last Monday.

J. W. Strawn, of Miamai, Mo., announces his readiness to serve churches wanting a protracted meeting.

A. C. Roah will preach one-half time for the church at Mason City, Ill., during the coming year.

R. A. Thompson began a protracted meeting at Gilman City, Harrison Co., Mo., Oct. 9th.

Thos. J. Jones, of Chicago, Ill., has gone to New York City to continue his musical studies under Prof. F. X. Arens. Bro. Jones is one of our best soloists.

A card from Bro. J. C. Reynolds, Macomb, Ill., dated Oct. 7th, announced the death of one of his daughters, Mrs. Lucy I. Wetherhold, on the morning of that day.

Frank J. Nichols, of Mokane, Mo., paid his respects to this office while in the city last week.

T. A. Abbott, Cor. Sec., for Missouri Missions, was present at the preachers meeting in this office, on last Monday, and received the personal expession of sympathy of all the ministers present for the deep sorrow through which he is now passing in the recent death of Sister Abbott.

On the 4th inst. we received a telegram from Jas. F. Stewart, announcing the death of Mrs. Stewart, on the previous evening, at Santa Palma, California. Proper notice of her life will be furnished us later for publication. We extend our sympathy to Bro. Stewart in this deep sorrow.

J. F. Merriman, one of the active members of Mt. Cabanne Christian Church, this city, has just returned from a trip to New York and other Eastern cities. While abroad he attended the Maryland and District of Columbia convention, held in the new 9th Street Christian Church, in Washington City, D. C., and pronounces it one of the handsomest church buildings he ever saw. Its symmetry, convenience and beauty he thinks are about ideal, and the cost marvelously low for what they have.

J. W. Lowber, of Austin, Tex., is delivering his third course of lectures in the interest of the students and faculty of the University of Texas. It is said that Pres. Winston encourages these lectures in every way he can.

J. P. Davis has closed his work at PawPaw, Mich., and returned to Terre Haute, Ind. He had to leave the church at PawPaw for lack of financial support, but it is said that he made many friends while in that city and left followed by the best wishes of the church and the community. Here, then, is an efficient minister of the gospel available for some church.

A. R. Hunt, pastor of the church at Tarkio, Mo., says that the influence of Bro. Northcutt's recent meeting there, for good, cannot be told in words. He was there two days over three weeks, with 36 additions.

C. E. Millard, singing evangelist for J. A. L. Romig, and others, while en route for the Chantanooga Convention, took in the Missouri State Meeting, at Nevada. On the last evening of the convention he was publicly eulogized by F. V. Loos and others for the sweet solos with which he had enlivendd the sessions of the convention. W. T. HACKER.

T. H. Kuhn, who was the minister of the church at Kokomo, Ind., resigned and is now doing the work of an evangelist. He is in a meeting at present at Williamstown, Ky., where he may be addressed by correspondents for two weeks.

Mention having been made in this paper of Dr. H. L. Willett's trip to Europe we will state here that his address until further notice will be Berlin, Germany, Care Red Star Line Office, 49 Friedrichstrasse.

PHILLIPS BROOKS' PREACHING.

ROBT. T. MATHEWS.

In making out a list of books for a reacher's library I have mentioned, mong four types of preachers to be read, 'hillips Brooks. Of no preacher can it be nore truly said that his sermons are the ower of his thought, the index of his exerience, the revelation of his ideal. 'hillips Brooks did not fall into the misake of publishing too much. Hundreds of ermons are a power in the pulpit at the ime of delivery, but shrink almost into keletons when printed. The sermons that eally stir as well as teach the reader are peculiar product—a union of vital hought and appropriate style, the secret f their freshness thus both personal and iterary. Phillips Brooks' sermons have hese educating qualities. There has evitently been a careful selection of what has een published, both before and after his eath.

Of each sermon or lecture it can be truthully said that it has a distinct attractiveess of manner as well as pith of matter. 'here is not too much repetition in these rinted discourses. One can but smile that ome enthusiastic admirers in reciting the ulpit praise of a local celebrity should ay that he was never known to repeat a ermon. Only in the narrowest of narrow enses can this statement be true, even of reat preachers. Even the greatest reachers have their horizon of thought in eaching "truth as it is in Jesus;" and in ll preaching there is more or less repetiion of the larger, inspiring ideas, to say othing of familiar developments and ractical applications of gospel doctrine. 'hus far in Brooks' discourses and lectures he appreciative reader can see "the master ight of all his seeing," and can mark how his supreme note is echoed and re-echoed n different sermons, now a well-known ivision reappearing, then an intense conriction breathing forth its strength once nore, here a homely matter of daily experience lit up by a precious Scripture, here some dire struggle of mind or heart nstructed and comforted by the inexhaustiple truth that has done a like service beore. This is the reason that his sermons re read and reread, and by no other class nore than by preachers themselves. Each ublished discourse bears all the marks of ripeness; it is felt to be full of the personal deals of the preacher, not in wearisome, pelittling autibiography, but in those rich generalizations that interpret the heart of humanity. For, to be read aright, he must lways be read in the supreme yet customary lights that shine over and through very deliverance. On account of this fact, however, Philips Brooks preached to the ear of men in the mass, the most illiterate hearers feeling a thrill of cheer and help from the lightning rapidity of the magnetic speaker, still the circle of his habitual readers will belong rather to a class. His sermons cannot be duly read piecemeal. He does not indulge in colloquial hits and pats. He does not aim to strike off a brilliant paradox for its own sake, nor to fire a stinging epigram for a sensation in the audience. Even his most exquisite illustrations "look before and after." In the fullest sense of the method he preaches in a train of thought. So vital and central is his thought that often formal divisions and mathematical headlines are necessarily swallowed up in the vitality and glow of his doctrine. Each sermon, therefore, must be read as a whole, attentively, even critically, if its full power for good would be known and felt.

So much may be said of his discourses from a literary and personal point of view. From a doctrinal standpoint it is sufficient to say that the sum and substance of his preaching was the revelation of God in Christ. But this is saying a great deal more than is commonly understood by such a statement. The Trinitarian can honestly profess that belief; so can also the Unitarian. Dr. Hodge and Dr. Channing both recognized and taught the revelation of God in Christ; but both differed radically in their doctrine of it. It is reported that Unitarians numerously attended Brooks' ministry and gratefully acknowledged, not not so much dogmatic agreement with the preacher's utterances as the comfort and help to their souls conveyed in his living sermons. One need not be surprised to hear this report, as one can easily observe the arid sands upon which, now historically, Unitarianism is gathered here and there in shallow pools. But no attentive listener, on the other hand, could fail to catch from the pulpit of Trinity Church, Boston, notes and echoes of the great catholic creed as regards the person of Jesus the Nazarene. The simple explanation of all this is that Brooks held thoughtfully and taught vitally the supreme Bible doctrine of the organic relation of Christ both to God and man. So could he, in thoughts that breathed and words that burned, make the man Christ Jesus a real, present, living object of faith to all hungry hearts. But so could he, for instance, in one of his Trinity Sunday sermons, declare in the old-fashioned simplicity of the primitive creed, "the divinity of Father, Son and Holy Ghost, this is our gospel;" or, "that is our faith in the trinity—three persons and one God."

In this respect Brooks is one of the best exponents of the best thought of the age in its centering more and more on the person of Christ. Here he stands along with a dogmatic theologian like Dorner or with a versatile teacher like Maurice—one, in short, with the broadest and deepest trend of thought as it grasps and sets forth in rich, endless variety, the truth of the relation of the historic Christ to the whole creation of God. In this largest light of God's Word "the light in which we see light" sheds itself into mind and heart. Whether in some hour of toil at the student's desk, or in some tragic experience of life as the sufferer "thinks thereon," it will always prove itself to be the master force of the ministry of pulpit and parish. As the preacher knows—knows in all his studies and duties; knows in a growing unity of thought and living, "the mystery of God, even Christ, in whom are all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge hidden," will his ministry be encouragingly fruitful. Such a truth vitally held in mind and heart will supremely guide and shape one's service in the gospel. It will restrain controversy, it will temper zeal, it will test purposes and methods. Much more, it will stimulate the highest ideal of manhood and ministry together, so that in thoroughness and roundness the minister will be a man, and the man will be a minister. So also was Phillips Brooks. He thought and lived in the knowledge of God in Christ. So also was his ministry. He studied and taught in endless variety and richness the inexhaustible truth of the relations of Christ to God and man. In this master light of all his seeing may his discourses and addresses be read appreciatively. Take any of the sermons with their distinct subjects and distinct texts, and this great Pauline truth is the secret of them all.

One may study them on their more doctrinal sides—"A Good-Friday sermon," "An Easter sermon," "A Trinity Sunday sermon"—discourses on the Atonement, the Resurrection, the Trinity. Phillips Brooks in more than one trenchant passage in his writings scorns the hard and fast separation of doctrine and practice. He would have spurned the complaint that he was not doctrinal, a dogmatic preacher. But how practical, how glowingly practical, are those three sermons! He teaches the doctrine, not in cold, logical form, to prove a thesis or to carry a point, but with his eye steadily on the relation of doctrine to life, and Christ the light, the secret, the wisdom, the power of it all.

Or, one may look at these sermons on their more practical sides—"The Choice Young Man," "The Beloved Physician," "New Experiences." Still the old apostolic creed in its simple succinctness, or in its manifold suggestiveness, shines through them all. Or, one may examine these discourses for some of their more philosophical bearings—"The Mystery of Light," "The Eye of the Soul," "The Mind's Love for God," "The Priority of God," "Identity and Variety," "Nature and Circumstances," "Destruction and Fulfillment." Here are sermons that betoken the most athletic discipline of the intellect, along with the widest readings of the history of schools of thought; but we may be sure that they were preached, or that they may be read and read again, unto edification, as the perfect life of the Nazarene in their homiletical secret and power.

But in heartily appreciating this master personality of the pulpit of the nineteenth century one need not be blind to his shortcomings and limitations. For instance, with all his extraordinary grasp of the apostolic creed, he lacked the genius of a Campbell to preach to Christendom the "one faith" as the annulment of sectarian tenets and denominational tests, in the far-seeing, patient responsibility of an organic and constructive enforcement. This latter is not only the trial of a great truth, but the trial even more of the teacher of that truth. What he might have done in his new office of bishop will never be known. That he would have come into conflict there, where only a Moses-like or a Paul-like hand of decision and action will suffice for the need, cannot reasonably be doubted. The evidence is in several of his sermons that he did not feel deeply the call, nor see at all clearly the way, to the organic reunion of Christendom. But in the bishop's office, with his views of doctrine and dogma, he would have been forced to some kind of action relative to this movement of the age. Or, again, to consider what seems a serious doctrinal deficiency, we read nowhere in his published sermons full, round, certain sounds of the Scripture doctrine of retribution. There are ominous refrains, some dying echoes of a possible result of sin, but no warnings of the judgment of hell as it stands out in the teaching of Jesus, nor of the prediction of eternal destruction according to the explicit doctrine of Paul. Indeed, Phillips Brooks' preaching at this point has a double deficiency—an insufficient grasp on Scripture doctrine and a blindness to actual, mammoth, devilish iniquity of both person and circumstance. In this respect the great preacher falls short of the temper and tone of Jesus. One thing, however, he does, let it be fairly said: he exposes and interprets the sins of the heart, and brings light and comfort to the child of God in the stress and storm of the battle with evil.

There is not a living preacher, young or old, who cannot sit at the feet of Phillips Brooks and learn rich lessons in the ministry of the gospel. He may be read critically for his power of comprehensive thought, his profound logic in searching endeavors to mediate the opposite truths of revelation, his firm grip of the difficulties of modern doubt, his steadily constructive applications of doctrine to human character, his fluent and glowing style, all in the light of the Incarnation of the Son of God. The great Boston preacher would undoubtedly have confessed with Browning:

"I say, the acknowledgment of God in Christ
Accepted by the reason, solves for thee
All questions in the earth and out of it."

But Phillips Brooks may also be read devotionally. It has occasionally been said of this or that minister, "He is a preacher for preachers." But in a broader, deeper sense can it be declared of Bishop Brooks, "Pastor pastorum"—"a shepherd of shepherds." He is this, all of it, because he was a shepherd of souls, who could guide and feed "all sorts and conditions of men"—the prodigal child coming to himself, the student with a burdensome problem, the hard-pressed wage-earner, the enthusiastic young man, the broken-hearted Rachel weeping by a new-made grave. He is "pastor pastorum," "a shepherd of shepherds," because, as fellow-preachers read him attentively and intently, marking the master truth of his ministry, feeling his whole-hearted loyalty to Christ, impressed by the vigor of his intellectual discipline, breathing the fragrance of his literary culture, tracing the secret of his homiletical method, admiring the fittingness of a figure or charmed by some delicate allusiveness of word or phrase—always, more than all, they are taught "truth as it is in Jesus," and are fed with "the bread of life."

THE CAMPBELLIAN REFORMATION.*

H. D. WILLIAMS.

(CONCLUDED.)

II. What has the Campbellian Reformation accomplished?

In the first place, it has actually restored the apostolic church. Other movements have attempted it, but it remained for this movement to do it. All other attempts at it have worked on the supposition that the apostolic church is not described at all in the New Testament, but this movement will call nothing apostolic that is not found in the New Testament. With that idea of apostolicity, the Campbellian Reformation has restored the apostolic church.

Once upon a time a staunch and able advocate of apostolic succession and church infallibilty listened patiently to a description of what he supposed was only somebody's ideal of an effort to restore the New Testament church, but which was in reality an explanation of the purpose of the Campbellian Reformation. The description ended, the man of the historic episcopate promptly declared that such a thing would be an utter impossiblility; that a church with no more organization than can be found in the New Testament could not hold together thirty days. On being told that such a movement had been in progress nearly seventy years and had built up a great brotherhood of over a million people, he apologized for his ignorance and declared that it was to him like accomplishing the impossible. But it has been done, and it can never be undone.

In the second place, this Reformation has given the world the most striking example of religious growth and development known since apostolic days. What has already been accomplished in this particular is likely only a prophecy of still greater accomplishments, for the movement is full of the active spirit of the primitive church.

In the next place, the movement has helped to popularize the cause of a united church. Other religious movements have aided in the same direction, but perhaps none more than this. It has also aided largely in the destruction of the spirit of sectarianism and the cultivation of the spirit of fraternity and toleration among Protestant bodies. It has also been a leader in exalting the Bible to the place it now holds as a book of more authority than any human creed or ecclesiastical organization.

But perhaps the greatest result of the Reformation so far is the more scriptural preaching that prevails throughout America. Formerly it was theological, fatalistic, mystical and irrational. The Current Reformation has compelled an appeal to Scripture on the part of the pulpit. That appeal has gradually modified the preaching until the Protestant pulpit in America to-day rides roughshod over its formulated doctrines and theological standards. Do no understand me to say that the Current Reformation should have all the credit for such result; I only give it the major part of the credit.

Though this movement has restored the apostolic church, though it has had much to do in popularizing the plea for union, and also in exalting the Bible above human creeds; though it has cultivated an appeal to Scripture; though it has been intensely active and evangelistic, and though it has been championed by an exceptionally able ministry it has never yet been directly and frankly credited with accomplishing anything by what is known as the theological world. In the theological writings of the day we search in vain for any direct and frank recognition of Mr. Campbell or any of our ablest men. Others, far less able and influential, are frequently recognized, but the promoters and champions of the Reformation, never. This lack of recognition is due to two facts: one is that the theology of this Reformation is fundamentally in direct conflict with the conglomerate theology of Protestanism; the other is that the movement has not yet produced the second great, comprehensive, overmastering theologian who was also able to impress himself on the world.

III. What has the Campbellian Reformation yet to accomplish?

In the first place, it has to keep right on making Christians and building churches after the New Testament pattern. It should be remembered that its work is to restore the gospel and the gospel church. Sometimes we hear it said that its first work is to unite Christendom. I do not like the expression. I prefer to say its work is to restore the gospel so the church can unite on it. A divided gospel has divided the church and a united gospel will unite the church. Once get Christendom to accept the gospel direct from apostolic hands and the church will unite as sure as water seeks its level. All diplomatic efforts at union will come to naught. Any union arising from agreements and concessions can not abide, but will at length be shattered by differences regarding the conditions of salvation.

A united church is desirable. It is the great desideratum of the age, but anxiety for it should not lead to any speedy and superficial accomplishment of it at the sacrifice of fundamental demands. It should not be forgotten that, desirable as a united church is, a united gospel is even more desirable, and that the united gospel once restored to all Christendom, the united church will be inevitable.

In the next place, the Campbellian Reformation must do one thing in the future which it has not done in the past. The restored church lacks one thing which must soon be supplied if it is to find favor before God and in the eyes and hearts of men. I frequently contemplate the following picture: Jesus standing watching the various parties of Christendom, each represented by a man or child. A very old man stands for the Greek Church, an equally old man stands for the Roman Church, a man not quite so old represents the Lutheran Church, and so on until nearly a thousands persons, ranging in age from decrepitude to infancy, represent as many different parties among the professed followers of the Prince of Peace. As the Master with pathetic face studies the picture before him there steps from the crowd a young man, somewhat overgrown, but withal handsome and rugged, the representative of the restoration movement of the 19th century. Approaching near this youug man says, "Master, what more must I do to inherit eternal life," and the Master responds, "Doest thou not know the gospel?" Whereupon the young man says, "Master, I have observed it from my youth, I believed on thee, I repented of my sins, I confessed thee before men, I was buried with the in baptism, I have not since neglected the assembly of the saints, I have honored thy resurrection day and ceased not to break bread in memory of thee. Moreover, Master, I have urged all thy people to do the same, to sit at thy feet and receive instruction direct from thee as preserved for us in thy Word, to call no man Master but thee and to know no authority but thine, to wear no name but thine and to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Then Jesus beholding him loves him and with all the tenderness of divine love says, "One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatever thou hast and give to the poor and thou shalt have treasure in heaven." And at that saying of the Master the young man drops his head and there he stands in sad reflection. I have never finished the picture. I do not know how. Shall I have the young man go his way and sell and give to the poor and then return and receive the tenderest embrace of his Master? Or shall I have him go his way and look upon his treasures and be mastered by them? May the God of all mercies, whose providences are too good for us to comprehend, finish the picture with divine skill!

The "Campbellian Reformation" has restored the apostolic church in all its forms and principles, but not in the spirit of devotion and sacrifice. This defect must be remedied. If not, the movement will be like a river flowing out into the ocean—its fresh waters will soon be lost in the briny deep. If remedied, the movement will be like the salt that savors the sea—it will permeate and purify the whole mass of Protestant Christendom.

For seventy-five years the plea has been sounded forth in this country for a restoration of apostolic Christendom—apostolic theology, apostolic preaching, apostolic ordinances, the apostolic church and apostolic fruits of Christianity. It has been ably sounded—led by one of the mightiest intellects of all time and the profoundest theologian since Paul, and championed by many of the keenest minds and purest hearts possible among men. It has accomplished wonders; its growth stands unparalleled; it bears the unmistakable mark of divine approval. But so far it has been a theological conquest. Doctrinal preaching, the preaching of plain Bible truth, of a "thus-saith-the-Lord" gospel, has done it. That alone, however, will neither convert the world nor influence Protestantism very fast in the future. It should be faithfully continued, but something more will be necessary. In the past the world and Protestantism have been asking, "What does this movement believe?" They have been ready for the answer and the answer has been a satisfactory one. In the future it will not be so satisfying. We are on the threshold of an age that will not ask, What do you believe? but, What do you do?—an age that will not inquire of a man's faith to learn his life, but will investigate his life to learn his faith. I think no man understanding the sociological and socialistic tendencies, the practical bent and moral evolution of to-day, can differ from me regarding this spirit of the age. In the past the churches of the Reformation have been thronged by people ready and anxious and yearning for a plain, simple, direct, matter-of-fact faith. They have been abundantly satisfied and in the future they need and must be given the same faith, but they will not listen to it and consider it unless it be commended to them by works. Christian people may continue to reason from faith to works, but henceforth the world will reason from works to faith. A man said to me recently that he did not believe in immersion as baptism to the exclusion of everything else, because he could not see that it made any better people. In that saying lurks a very cunning sophism, but it is practically the present position of the world and of Pedobaptist Protestantism regarding baptism.

The same attitude is occupied regarding the Campbellian Reformation. It claims to be a return to Christ, to his church, his creed, his confession, his ordinances, his Word, his authority, and henceforth it must face the test, "If you are nearer Christ than others, show it by your works." The day has come when the world will crowd those churches that do most toward the application of the Christian ethics to practical affairs of human society; it will throng those churches which manifest in the highest degree the spirit of sacrifice for humanity, which is the Spirit of Christ. Logically, theologically and chronologically the churches of this Reformation should fill that place and perform that service. If they do not, inside of fifty years the Campbellian Reformation will have lost its identity in the great sea of Protestantism. If they do it, if they rise to the magnanimity, to the breadth of love, to the depth of devotion and the sublimity of faith that will give to the world an individual and social life commensurate with its theology—if they will do this thing, which God commands and the world asks, the gates of hell shall not prevail against them.

PAUL AS A MISSIONARY.

T. H. BLENUS.

The more the student of the Bible follows the line of life of the apostle to the Gentiles, the more is he filled with abmiration at the splendid accomplishments, marvelous zeal and immense labors of this wonderful man. When we consider the means and methods of transportation of his times, the lack of direct and immediate communication between the various countries in which he labored, we are astonished into what various and distant places he bore the banner of the cross. The most celebrated and populous cities of Athens, Ephesus, Corinth and Rome acknowledged him as the herald of salvation. Countries and states most remote from each other—Arabia, Greece, Illyria, Asia Minor, Macedonia, Syria, Epirus and Italy—resounded with his gospel preaching. He utilized all situations and opportunities, signalizing them with his unquenchable zeal. He preached Christ in Jewish synagogues and in the assemblies of believers, before philosophers, in the Areopagus at Athens, to the courtiers of the Pretorium and in the palace of Nero, in prison to the jailer and his family and before Festus, Agrippa, Bernice and all their retinue, "in season and out of season," everywhere and constantly he testified of the gospel of the grace of God.

His constant journeyings and long and painful voyages gave him neither opportuitiy nor time for relaxation of mind or body. He had but one thought, and that was to advance the kingdom of the Redeemer. His heart seemed moved within him, constantly with sorrow, and at times with indignation when he looked about him, and everywhere saw such striking proofs that the highest cultivation of the human mind, as well as the lowest ignorance, were alike consistent with the grossest idolatry and superstition. He not only addressed himself to the Jews in their synagogues, attempting to lead them to the Savior they were rejecting; he labored most diligently also among those whom he met in the chief places of public resort. Again and again this mighty man of God had for a recompense the taunting insults of an infuriated populace, while his own countrymen at times endeavored even to take his life. He is accused by Festus of being a lunatic, the Athenian philosophers treat him with scorn and contempt, at Lystra he is stoned till he is apparently dead, at Philippi he is scourged and imprisoned; yet, ever undaunted, he continues his labors of love. A missionary life so generous, so varied and so filled with persecution should be an inspiration to-day to a people whose whole professed desire is to proclaim a pure faith in the Son of God. Wherever this man went, he was persecuted by those who were not converted. The preacher of to-day treads no new path if he be a faithful teacher of the truth as it is in Jesus. Enmity toward the plan of salvation still exists. There are many self-sufficient philosophers still who, elated with the conceit of their own speculations, sneer at the doctrine of the cross.

There seems to be something in the pride of worldly wisdom, of wealth and of office that so engrosses the heart of man as to indispose it to the humble and self-abasing teaching of the doctrine of the gospel. It has always seemed hard for one, filled with the conceit of his own knowledge, to confess a willingness to sit at the feet of the lowly Nazarene. It was so in Paul's time, it is so to-day. The philosophers who looked down with a supreme contempt on this humble, yet wonderful man, as one scarce worthy their momentary regard, have with their systems been long since swept into oblivion by the lapse of rolling ages, while untold millions have accepted and will ever rejoice in the faith of the Son of God.

In the latter part of his splendid ministration Paul was for two years in confinement. During this time his voice is not silent, as he instructed all who came to see him. He also profited by this forced retirement and wrote those excellent epistles to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians and Hebrews, in which, in addition to his admonitions and exhortations to all Christians, he appears to be lifted above all fears of death, and in which he expresses all the triumphs of a victorious Christian. We can bless God for Paul's chains. When liberated again for the short space of two or three years, he again with undaunted zeal started on a missionary tour to Spain—it may be to France, and also to the Asiatic churches which he had founded. Returning again to Rome, he is once more cast into prison, where in the immediate prospect of death he wrote his Second Epistle to Timothy, which contains his calm and deliberate views of an approaching eternity. Heaven now seems to be "let down into his soul," he pants to be at home and at rest in the bosom of his beloved Master, and exclaims, in view of the breaking dawn of an eternity of joy, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand, I have fought a good fight, I have finshed my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give unto me."

THE MOST POPULAR BISHOP.

By far the most beloved and honored of living bishops of the Church of England is Dr. William Boyd Carpenter, Bishop of Ripon. The finest classical scholar amongst the prelates is Dr. Brooke Foss Westcott, Bishop of Durham; the foremost theologian is Bishop Stubbs, of Oxford; the greatest ecclesiastical statesman is Dr. Temple, Archbishop of Canterbury; the most progressive and liberal is Dr. Percival, Bishop of Hereford; the sturdiest Protestant is Dr. Ryle, Bishop of Liverpool, but the most versatile and the finest preacher is the Bishop of Ripon. This clergyman stands at the head of all the English clergy for oratorical power. He is the Spurgeon of Angelicanism. His only rival in the pulpit amongst churchmen is Dr. Moorhouse, Bishop of Manchester, formerly so famous in Melbourne, but even he is hardly considered equal as a preacher to Boyd Carpenter. This distinguished man is the son of the late Rev. Henry Carpenter, Vicar of St. Michael's, Liverpool. He was born very near the spot which was the birthplace of Gladstone. He studied at Cambridge and was for some years a curate in various London churches. Eloquent curates are abundant in the Church of England, in which indeed a good preacher only comes forth by accident. In all the Dissenting churches good preaching is the rule, for a man who cannot preach at all does not attempt to enter the ministry, seeing that he would have to starve. The eternal bread and cheese question regulates even spiritual things on the side where there are points of contact with the material. But in a church the pulpit is always relegated to the side of the building, the praying desk standing on the opposite side. In a Non-conformist chapel, as we call a sanctuary not belonging to the Established State Church, the pulpit is invariably placed conspicuously in the center of that end of the building where the minister conducts the services. This well symbolizes the difference between church and chapel preaching in England. It is nearly everything in chapel, to which the people go chiefly to hear the gospel, rather too much forgetting the worship, which should after all be thought most of. In the Church of England the other extreme prevails. There worship is all in all, and the preaching is generally a brief, tedious, affected, sanctimonious, driveling drawl, lazily and monotonously read from a worthless manuscript. Yet from fashion and custom thousands of excellent people go to church every Sunday to listen to this miserable sort of pious twaddle, after asking God a great many times in the Litany to "have mercy on us miserable sinners," and after harkening to long prayers and seeing elaborate ritual parades. Therefore, a live preacher of even ordinary power is a real wonder in the Established Church, who, however, generally in his early ministry has to shift from one curacy to another, through the jealousy of his vicar.

BOYD CARPENTER PREACHING.

The best judges in the Church of England seem to agree that the Bishop of Ripon is the finest preacher in the world. This may be saying too much, but it is certain that there is not at this hour a more popular preacher in this country, in any denomination. His last curacy was at St. James' Church, Holloway, in North London, the district where I myself reside. The whole district still rings with the echo of his preaching in those days. He came to take charge of the parish during the last sickness of the old vicar, the Rev. W. B. Mackenzie, who was one of London's greatest evangelical preachers, and who sustained a congregation of 2,000 people for no less than 37 years. For nine years Boyd Carpenter shone in that pulpit as the leading pulpit light of North London. He drew such immense crowds that his fame became national. He used to preach, as he still does, in the purest extempore style, never using a note of any kind. In 1879 he removed to Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, and so became at once a fashionable West End preacher. In the same year he was appointed one of the Queen's chaplains, and he quickly became Queen Victoria's favorite preacher, being to her in England what dear old Norman McLeod was in Scotland. You are aware that our Queen has two religions. When she is in England she is an Episcopalian and would not dare to go into a Non-conformist chapel. But when she goes north of the Tweed, then she would not dare to look at an Episcopal church, because she changes her faith directly her train rolls into Scotland and is transmuted into a Presbyterian. Oh dear, what a strange muddle State Churchianity all is! Erastianism is one element in the spiritual tomfoolery of which this world is so full. Through her Majesty's influence Dr. Boyd Carpenter was elevated to the Bishopric of Ripon at the early age of 43. It is to be noted that the Queen is a great lover of good preaching and that she is a first-rate judge of it. She is a Presbyterian at heart and all her favorite preachers have been decided Evangelicals.

PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

A curious proof of the Queen's regard for the Bishop of Ripon was furnished in connection with her jubilee in 1887, for at her own command he was chosen to praech the jubilee commemoration sermon before Parliament, the two Archbishops of Canterbury and York being thus passed over to universal astonishment. The discourse was one of the most splendid ever delivered from an English pulpit. Even the eloquent statesmen who listened were carried away by that torrent of rhetoric, hemmed in as it was between banks of logic. It was as profoundly spiritual as it was glittering in style of language and thought. A fine proof of his oratorical genius was given by the bishop when he presided at the Church Congress at Wakefield. He gave a magnificent address, amazing and delighting the great and learned assembly by delivering it impromptu. This was the first extemporaneous presidential address ever given at a Church Congress in this country.

A MUSCULAR CHRISTIAN.

Dr. Boyd Carpenter has the finest physique amongst the bishops. He is a great cyclist and pedestrian. On the first Sunday after his ordination as Bishop of Ripon he came from the West End of London to preach to his old hearers at Holloway. As he refuses to ride on Sundays he walked all the way before service, a distance of nine miles. He displayed in the sermon not the slightest sign of fatigue. The sight in the streets that day will not soon be forgotten. Thousands of people vainly sought entrance into the church to hear their former pastor. One peculiarity of the bishop is that he refuses to wear the grotesque garb of an Anglican prelate. He likes to dress like an ordinary citizen, and he often tells how he in traveling gets into conversation with people who have no idea that he is a minister at all. Lately he related at a meeting with considerable glee how he had been chatting with a man in a train who drifted into a bitter tirade against parsons, declaring that nobody dressed as a clergyman should ever come under his roof. The man little imagined that he was talking to the most popular bishop in England. In his London days Boyd Carpenter used often to be seen plodding about his large parish late at night amongst the poorest cottages. He was adored by the working classes. It was a familiar sight to note him button-holing some bricklayer or laborer for the purpose of close and sympathetic exhortation. As the genial and witty Dr. Hole, of Rochester, is the "people's Dean," beloved of working men, who crowd any place where he is to speak, so is Dr. Carpenter the "people's Bishop." He would be a foremost man in any sect, denomination or community. He is to preside again at a Church Congress, which is about to meet at Bradford in Yorkshire, in his diocese. He is a wonderfully versatile scholar. Perhaps he is to be reckoned the best Dantean scholar living in this country. His Italian essays are amongst the most delightful productions in fugitive magazine literature. I was recently delighted with his "Essay on the Geryon of Dante," in a magazine called The Minister. He has had the rare honor of being both Bampton and Hulsean lecturer. Also he has been select preacher before both Oxford and Cambridge Universities. And yet this great and distinguished man was the other day seen in Ripon stopping his carriage to call up to sit beside a poor old laborer, whom he at once drove to his destination, going out of his way to do so. It is his habit to take hold of a bundle or parcel from any old and infirm man or woman whom he comes across when he is walking in the streets of Ripon. In his relation to the lower classes he is like the late Bishop Fraser, of Manchester. Such characters are very phenomenal amongst our right reverend lord bishops and fathers in God, who are peers of the realm, with thrones in the cathedrals and seats in the gilded houses of the lords. The Church of England, with all its wonderfully beautiful and romantic history, its glorious antecedents, its heroic martyrs, its noble cathedrals and its ancient abbeys; its twenty thousand beautiful sanctuaries which fill the air with echoes from their belfries, its old ivied towers and happy parsonages, is, alas, being doomed to destruction by the pirates called Ritualists, who take Protestant pay and are doing the Pope's work! And for this impending fate the bishops are to blame. They are supine, lordly, arrogant and indifferent to their supreme duty. But there are one or two noble exceptions. And the brightest of these is William Boyd Carpenter, the beloved, honored and eloquent Bishop of Ripon. Not long ago a disaster happened which occasioned great sympathy and concern. The bishop was playing in one of his few leisure half hours on his lawn with his children, when he slipped on the grass and broke his collar-bone. But he has rapidly recovered and will preside at the Congress, much to the edification of the grand assembly who will listen to his presidential address. He has an arduous duty before him, for burning questions have to be considered and a terrible crisis has come upon the church through the outrageous proceedings of the High Church party.

W. DURBAN.

43 Park Road, South Tottenham, London, Sept. 23, 1898.

New York Letter.

Now that the United States is extending her dominion into the islands of many seas, the condition of the different peoples to be brought under the flag is of national interest. The Presbyterian, Methodist, Congregational, Baptist, Episcopal, Disciple and other mission boards have already appointed special committees, charged with the collecting of information concerning social, educational and religious conditions in Cuba, Porto Rico, the Sandwich Islands and the Philippines. Recently the Church News Association, of New York, discovered that certain gentlemen were in the city who through long residence in Cuba were thoroughly conversant with the situation of affairs on that island. A conference was arranged with these gentlemen at the mission rooms of the Presbyterian building on Thursday, the 22nd of September, at which Gen. T. J. Morgan, secretary of the American Baptist Home Missionary Society, presided. Dr. Enrique J. Verona, professor of literature and philosophy in the University of Havana; Dr. Aristides Ayurer, teacher of science and pharmacy, and Dr. Juan Ones, professor of science of the same institution was present. Also, Mr. F. G. Pierra, who was a member of the Pan-American Congress, and Dr. H. Lincoln de Zayas, a teacher in the New York schools. The questions in the conference in a large degree probed into the educational conditions of Cuba. These educators from Cuba gave the conference glimpses of the sad situation, showing that only 25 per cent. of their people can read and write, that the daily sessions of the primary schools are very long, —from 7 to 11 A. M. and from 2 to 5 P. M.— and the work done in them is of a very poor grade. They said the studies include the Catholic Catechism, arithmetic, reading and writing, and a little smattering of universal history. The teachers in these schools, they said, were paid from $30 to $40 per month, and consequently those teaching are, as a rule, persons who had failed at most everything else they had undertaken. The oppointment of teachers, securing licenses from Normal schools and obtaining of literary degrees were frequently effected through a combination of political and ecclesiastical influence. Speaking of the religious condition, they said most of the priests were Spaniards from the mother country, and that church and state affairs have been so closely interwoven that it is impossible to draw the line between them. The conference resulted in adoping a resolution asking President McKinley to appoint a special commission to inquire into the social and educational conditions of Cuba and report on the same. This, in the opinion of the distinguished Cubans in the conference, was the most practicable and desirable thing that could be done.

The church-kindergarten problem is before the Extension Missionary Society of the Methodists in New York, asking for solution. Dr. F. M. North, secretary of the society, said in a recent conference of church-kindergartens that between $60,000 and $70,0000 was spent in this work last year. Several of the churches had kindergartens already, but they were not successful, and much is hoped from the new hands in which they will be placed. There is some talk of following the example of the overcrowded public schools, and having two kindergarten sessions a day in such sections as will furnish more children than can be accommodated in the morning. The following sensible argument was put forth in favor of the movement at the meeting:

Located in the midst of an overpopulated quarter, where the children live on the street and speak an alien language and follow alien customs, the kindergartens will on a larger and more systematic scale begin the Americanizing work earlier in life than does the average college settlement.

Children gardens should be opened in many places in New York and other cities, so that these little ones may blossom into all possible mental and moral loveliness.

The Rev. R. S. MacArthur, D. D., of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, gave utterance to these ringing words recently:

Anarchy should be treated as piracy. The worldwide law admitted of the hanging of a pirate wherever he was caught. No anarchist is good, but a live anarchist is especially dangerous. Even Great Britain is likely to join in refusing an asylum to these poisonous reptiles. True Americanism must oppose anarchism in all its forms. We want no anarchists on American soil. They should not be allowed to pollute American air with their breath or American soil with their feet. Such men should be quarantined for their natural lives. It is aid that we have no laws to keep them out. If we have laws to keep out yellow fever and cholera we shall surely so interpret or make other laws which shall exclude from America this class of men, who are more truly fiends than human beings.

Anarchists should be deported to some remote island, with no inhabitants but themselves. They might be given enough food to keep them alive until their first crop arrives. Let them thus test for themselves their own ideas of government. Give them the choice between work and starvation. No doubt, if they were placed under such conditions they would soon see the necessity of law and order. Without law and order no community can live. Anarchy is hades. Law is of God. America must keep anarchists out. True religion is a cure for all social ills. In true religion we shall have liberty, equality and fraternity, and every other blessing which the human heart needs and which our weary world requires.

MISSIONARY FIELDS AND FORCES OF THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST, is the title of the booklet written by W. J. Lhamon, to be used as one of the handbooks of the Bethany C. E. Courses. It is a gem of rare worth and should be studied by every Christian Endeavor Society among the Disciples of Christ. The book is clear, brief and comprehensive, giving a bird's-eye view of all our missionary enterprises, including the fields of labor, the missionaries and the mission boards. It also presents a good chapter on each of the following: Religious Conditions in England; Hinduism; Confucianism; Buddhism, and Mohammedanism. The imperative need of our people just now is missionary enthusiasm. The only way to engender it is to fill our people, and more especially our young people, with a true knowledge of the missionary problem. Let all our C. E. Societies and C. W. B. M. auxiliaries take up this work at once and push it with vigor. The other books for this year's study are "Life and Teachings of Jesus," by H. L. Willett, and "Sketches of our Pioneers," by F. D. Power. These three books and the Bethany C. E. Bulletin (quarterly) will be sent to any one for $1.00, by writing Bro. J. Z. Tyler, National C. E. Superintendent. The reading courses are very important and should be followed by thousands of young Disciples of Christ.

The time has come to claim more seriously the attention of our great brotherhood in the West to the Atlantic states as a field ripe for the sickle of the primitive gospel. It is wonderful how Dr. Strong's book, "Our Country," turned our faces from the rising to the setting sun in missionary effort. It was even urged that our Home Board be removed from Cincinnati to St. Louis, to be nearer our missionary fields. Granting that what has been done is for the best, I submit the following problem:

Given $50,000 for Home Missions, by 1,000,000 disciples, 80 per cent. of whom live in the Mississippi Valley, to determine how the money may be invested to the best advantage under present conditions.

Postulates: 1. With some exceptions in localities the American people are remarkably uniform in intelligence, education and ability to receive the truth.

2. It costs less to establish a church in the country than in a city.

3. A church planted in a center of population has an unlimited field.

4. A city church is a radiant point for missions in surrounding regions.

5. It was apostolic wisdom, guided by the Holy Spirit, to plant the church in commercial and national centers, as were Jerusalem, Antioch, Ephesus, Corinth and Rome.

With these self-evident truths I submit a series of facts. The following table gives the per cent. of the American people dwelling in cities of 8,000 and more in 1890:

North Atlantic States	52	per cent.	in	195	cities
S. " "	16	"	"	36	"
N. Central " "	26	"	"	152	"
S. " "	10	"	"	37	"
Western " "	29	"	"	23	"

The following table shows the distribution of our churches in these cities:

	With Churches	Without
N. Atlantic States, 28		167
S. " " 17		19
N. Central " 112		40
S. " " 34		3
Western " 15		8

SUMMARY.

All the Atlantic States 45		186
All other states 161		51

Of the 51 cities without Churches of Christ in the other states 30 of them are in Michigan and Wisconsin. But it is urged that in the West the people have moved to new homes, and may be more easily reached. The same is true in the cities of the East. From 1880 to 1890 the city population increased as follows:

N. Atlantic States	9	per cent.	and	58	cities.
S. " "	4	"	"	13	"
N. Central "	9	"	"	57	"
S. " "	3	"	"	17	"
Western "	7	"	"	12	"

Of the 157 cities that crossed the line of 8,000 population, 71 are in the Atlantic states. It is also urged that the cities of the West are new. The same is true of many cities of the East. The manufacturing, mining and commercial interests of the East are essentially city building interests. I have recently organized a church at Gloversville, N. Y. A few years ago where 17,000 people now live there was a small village and a large cow pasture. There are 25 leather mills and 300 glove factories in the town. That is a sample of growth of many Eastern cities. The religious interests of these cities are, more largely than in the West, supplied by a few of the great denominations. In nearly all of these cities may be found a section, usually new, where there is an opening and a demand for an energetic evangelistic church. In these Eastern cities can be found about one loyal Disciple of Christ for every thousand people, enough in nearly every city for a vital nucleus of a church.

Here is another series of facts:

1. The Disciples of Christ are making in the Atlantic states a larger per cent. of growth than in the rest of our country.

2. Our growth in the Atlantic states is largest in the cities.

3. The financial returns per member for Home and Foreign Missions is greater in the Atlantic states than in the rest of America.

4. This is a day of Bibles and Bible reading. The Chautauqua circles have stimulated associate study and comparison of views. The W. C. T. U., the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. have given Bible readings. The Christian Endeavorers have promised to read the Bible every day. The Sunday-schools have taught a general view and systematic study of the Bible. There are many independent Bible classes. All these have prepared a field for our plea for New Testament Christianity.

In my meeting at Watertown a bright man had heard three sermons. He said, "I never knew about you people before; but let me tell you that thousands of people in this country are waiting for a church that teaches as the Bible reads." He obeyed Christ. Last week a woman said, "The Sunday-school lessons on the apostolic church last year made me hungry and thirsty, and I wondered why we do not have the same now. Imagine my surprise when I heard Bro. F. P. Arthur, of Rochester, preach." At Gloversville a union worker said, "I have seen these difficulties arising from the divisions in the church, but did not know what could be done. You are preaching the truth, and your plea is of God."

CONCLUSION.

From all these facts, figures and conditions our conclusions must surely be: That the time has come for our American Missionary Society to enlarge its missionary investments in the Atlantic states. I would not take a cent nor a missionary worker from any section of our common country. Let us place the facts and conditions of the East before our brethren in the West, and their hearts will respond and our missionary boards will have more resources to invest. Brethren, we are on the mountain top of prospects. We hold the key

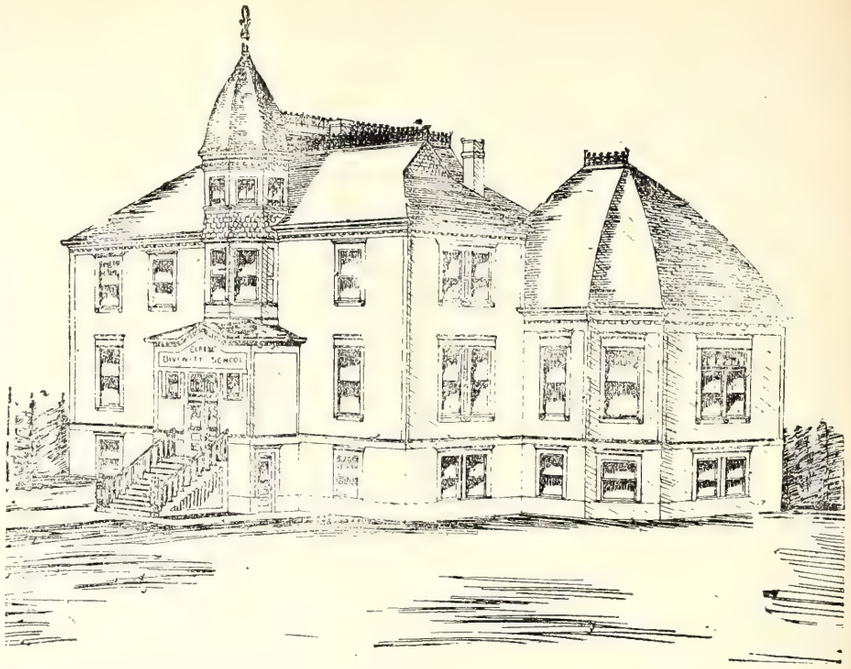
EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Dear Brother in Christ—In sending you the enclosed question, I cannot refrain from spreading some little flowers of gratitude on your editorial path. Exiled from my spiritual home—the West London Tabernacle—the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has indeed become, more than ever before, a friend to me, as well as the best of teachers, giving the finishing touch, so to speak, to the religious training I received at the feet of that prince of teachers—Dr. W. T. Moore.

Besides, it makes one feel quite at home with our American brotherhood and its work. I only wish it were more known and read among our English brethren, who are lacking precisely the strong special education and enthusiasm for our plea your paper gives. I am sorry I did not succeed in communicating enough of my love for it to some of them to make them subscribers, but I make large use of it to interest in our principles one of my own countrymen, a French evangelist, who says that had he heard of it he would certainly have joined such a movement, some eight years ago, when his prayerful study of the apostolic church made him leave his former religious associations. He thought there was room for a new reformation, but not willing to divide any more the few scattered Christian workers in France, he joined the ranks of the Baptists where has at least perfect freedom to work as he thinks right. All the new little churches he succeeds in forming, in his evangelical tours, take only the name of Christian, or evangelical church, but they are included in the Baptist denomination. For what I have seen and heard in France, lately, I am convinced that many minds are ripe for our unsectarian principles, should these be wisely dealt with, and come to them, not from a separate body of Christians, who want to antagonize their views, but as friends and allies, who come to share their work of making disciples in this hardest of all fields—France. I should myself like to go and help, should the Lord open the way.

It is worth noticing that the leaders among Baptists, in Paris, hold many different views, yet they work most harmoniously together for the one aim of spreading the gospel. Their success among Roman Catholics is marvelous. Those new converts need teachers as much as heathen do, and more!



But, dear Bro. Garrison, don't you think you have made a mistake in transforming the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into such a nice weekly magazine? If it was already a work of real self-denial to cut the old ones in pieces for the sake of feeding others with our abundance, it becomes now quite impossible to separate from the new ones, either in part or in whole. You will have to bear the responsibility of making paper-misers of your readers.

Yet—just a little thorn with my roses. I was hoping that the welcome image of the Editor-in-Chief was but the first one of quite a picture gallery of the leading brethren—sisters included—of our own brotherhood. It is very disappointing to get now but faces of people of this world, who have all the illustrated papers at their disposal to make themselves known around the globe.

Yours sincerely, in the bond of Christian love and esteem, ELIZABETH SCHWEIGHAEUSER.

Balcaskie, Pittenweem, Scotland, Aug. 20, 1898.

*This letter was probably not intended for publication, but it contains matter that will be of interest to our readers, and we feel sure our correspondent will pardon us for giving it a wider publicity than she perhaps intended it to have. The "thorn" in her handsome bouquet of roses, is not unwelcome, as indicating a desire for what it was and is our purpose to supply on our front page.—EDITOR.

Eugene Divinity School.

The Eugene Divinity School (Oregon) commenced its fourth year's work September 20th, with an enrollment of 17 students. At least three more are expected in the near future.

This young but thoroughly established school has an extremely bright future. Its dean, E. C. Sanderson, A. M., D. D., is a man of unusual talent, splendid education, untiring effort and natural tact. His consecrated character and firm yet gentle disposition make him the students' friend—one worthy of imitation. The school's origin, like its life, rests largely in the ceaseless efforts of the dean. By him the great task of organizing the institution was commenced in 1895 when the dark clouds of financial depression were hanging low over all the land. But God blessed the work and it succeeded. In the fall of 1895 a commodious dwelling near the present site of the divinity school was rented and the first term commenced with five students. It was a small school, but a good one.

A half block, immediately west from and adjacent to the Oregon State University campus, was purchased by the board of regents and the construction of the building, shown by the accompanying cut, was commenced and finished in time for dedication Oct. 31st, 1897. The structure is strongly built throughout, and the rooms are conveniently arranged and neatly finished. The foundation is made of Oregon sandstone and was laid by the Endeavorers of Oregon, Washington and Idaho. The building is practically free from debt, the funds being raised through the churches of the Northwest and by individual subscriptions. The chapel, "Cowls Memorial Chapel," is named in memory of the late Judge Cowls, of McMinnville. Mrs. Judge Cowls has recently given an endowment note of $2,500 to the school. The building is heated by hot air and contains the modern conveniences. The library contains several hundred volumes and the students have free access to the University library of several thousand volumes.

The two schools work most harmoniously and each is a source of great good to the other. The young men of the Divinity School are a part of life to the University Y. M. C. A., which order is recognized by the faculty of the University as very helpful to them in their work, as well as to the students. Christian young men and young men from Christian homes are hunted up by the society, and so far as possible are brought into close relation with church influences. The life-line is also thrown out to all others. Thus the young men of the Divinity School are doing a vast good among their college associates. Their influence for good is also greatly felt in the church. The church here has a membership of 425 and is steadily increasing under the pastorate of Rev. M. L. Rose, who is also associate professor at the Divinity School. The school stands firm for Home and Foreign Missions with J. J. Handsaker as leader in missionary history and biography.

The Christian Northwest is proud of the institution, and right well might she be, for it is a signal of Christian freedom and surety for the spread of primitive Christianity. Connected with the University as it is, it is already far superior to any sectarian college in the West and equal to many colleges of the East.

Where God is success must be. His presence has been ever manifest through the history of this institution. May such continue forever.

Iowa Letter.

I have just finished and closed up five years' work as corresponding secretary of the Iowa Christian Convention. These years form an important chapter in our nation's history and I hope in our history as a state missionary society. To me they have been filled with the rellgious romance of faith, with new monuments of friendship and with the hardest kind of labor and the joy of service. Like Moses, when called I tried to escape, but my brethren forced the work upon me and now when I lay it down many and urgent are the protests. To be chosen five years in succession, to serve with five boards—picked men of Iowa—to turn over to a worthy sucsessor my work out of debt after five hard years, is to me a chapter of life not to be forgotten. Brethren, you have conferred upon me honors for which I thank you and praise God.

Extracts from report of the Iowa board made at the Des Moines convention Sept. 28, 1898:

Twenty new houses dedicated at a cost of $58,000.

A net increase of 40,000 to our membership in Iowa for the year, 1,000 less than for 1897.

One thousand three hundred and eleven added to those churches aided by our board, of whom 869 were baptized. In 1897 the additions were 95 each month; this year they were 101.

New Sunday-schools, congregations, Aid and Endeavor Societies organized, 12 of each, and one C. W. B. M.

The receipts in cash were increased so that with 12 months income the expenses of 13 1-2 months were paid and the new year began without debt.

We have in Iowa 447 churches and 84 unorganized bands. We have 344 preachers in active service.

The year's work (13 months), translated into terms used in neighboring states, is equal to that of 10 men, five located and five in the evangelistic field. The five located men each averaging for the year 171 sermons, 30 added to the church, $700 secured on salary, $1,731.00 reduction of local debt, $3,190.00 in church property secured. Each of the five evangelists averaging 234 added, $731.00 raised on his own salary, $657 in pledges to the I. C. C., $4,975.00 in pledges for local work.

For every $25.00 going through our treasury we can show the following results: Over seven additions, 10 sermons preached, $29.10 pledged for I. C. C., $39.30 collected by evangelist for self-support, $190.50 pledged for local work. This takes no note of organization of all lines of church work, counsel in trouble, and a splendid system of convention work and bureau of information for churches and preachers.

In speaking of the year just before us I must use the plural number and say, "my successors in office." Barton S. Denny, of Hampton, is the new secretary. He is a graduate of Drake University and for five years or more he has been pastor at Hampton and district secretary of the northeast district of Iowa. He will at once move his family to Des Moines and take up his work. It is hardly necessary to bespeak for him the hearty support of any Iowa worker. All have made it their duty and their pleasure.

D. A. Wickizer, pastor of the East Side Church, Des Moines, is chosen and elected as state evangelist, with instruction to make the Endeavor and Sunday-schools first in his work. Bro. Wickizer is also a son of Drake University and was pastor at Oskaloosa for five years. In each of these pastorates he has become known as a builder of church houses. With the Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies back of him and such a yokefellow as Bro. Denny and a bright future before us all, I predict great things for Iowa in 1898 and 1899.

The new board for the Iowa work is as follows: H. O. Breeden, president; M. S. Johnson, vice-president; H. J. Prussia, recording secretary; B. S. Denny, corresponding secretary, and W. W. Williams, treasurer. In its first session it selected our splendid office secretary, Miss Jessie Williams. Her perfect knowledge of Iowa and Iowa work just now when there is a change of men on the field will be worth her salary for a year. By the way our busy convention could have done a graceful thing by thanking our treasurer for a whole lot of hard work and the free use of office room for the I. C. C. It is no easy thing to take in and check out four or five thousand dollars of current funds and loan out and care for ten or twelve thousand in permanent funds. No salary and no thanks does not make service higher or fidelity more lasting.

My readers all know that I am a prohibitionist, of cubical mold, one who can't be upset, and of course I watch with more than ordinary interest the side of our conventions which abuts near the saloon. For some reason I missed the report of the committee on resolutions and hence do not know what they have said. For a few years past they have spoken in whispers and made sentences on the whiskey question out of twine strings, and one year they were silent! Two things in the recent convention were better than any resolution. One was a season of prayer on the fourth day, Sept. 29. While the ballots in the Canadian plebiscite were falling and winning a victory for prohibition, our prayers for that victory were going up to God. Another was the presence of Matilda B. Carse in behalf of the W. C. T. U. Temple in Chicago and ex-Gov. Drake's interest in her work. He introduced her to the convention and he gave her $1,000 towards lifting the debt thereon. Nothing that F. M. Drake has done in the last five years has given me the joy that I have from this incident. I have worked with him on our board much of the time since 1880 and I know him better than the mass of our brethren. I grieved sorely and sincerely when my hero went into eclipse. When others counted it the setting of the sun I believed that it was only an eclipse. Now I have seen with my own eyes the bright, widening limit of that eclipsed sun. God grant that the closing chapter of this great life may be a clear demonstration of its deep, strong enmity to the saloon. What better heritage could he leave the Iowa Disciples? What better endowment can he bestow upon our university?

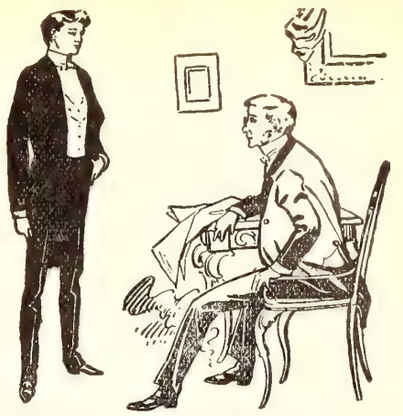
Time and space fail me. I cannot mention half the good things. The visit of our Iowa Methodist governor and what he said when informed that we had bought a church lot in his own home town and in the very block where he lived.———The great addresses by our invited guests, J. M. Rudy, of Quincy, Ill., (soon to locate in Iowa), and Frank G. Tyrrell, of St. Louis.———The educational address by Chancellor Craig and the educational symposium.———The splendid C. W. B. M. program.———The lecture by Dr. Butchart and the views shown by him.———The hospitality of the churches—all these must pass with a word.

A. M. HAGGARD.

Minnesota.

OUR PER CAPITA.



In a recent letter I referred to the fact that the 3,277 brethren of the state contributed $8.26 per capita to all purposes the past year, and now I wish to present an honor roll showing by churches ten of the principal givers and naming them in relative order viz., Plainview, per capita, $18.46; Olivia, per capita, $15.92; Luverne, per capita, $15.20; Minneapolis, $14.08; Rochester, $14.02; St. Paul, First Church, $13.03; Duluth, $11.79; St. Paul, Central, $11.66; Willow Creek, $10.76; Belle Plaine, $8.56. As stated previously, these figures embrace in each instance, not only church giving, but auxiliary giving, and are reliable, care having been taken in the matter of possible duplications. And, indeed, the figures are under rather than over the true showing, for it has been quite out of the question to get at much of the personal giving to benevolences; hence the true per capita is quite likely nearer $9 than $8. These are expenditures only, and do not take into account balances in treasuries, which can only show properly in another year's annual report as expenditures for that year. Which leads to a homily, brother, sister, upon—

PASTORS' SALARIES.

A splendid record has been made; but what proportion of this per capita, think you, the pastors received? The state per capita is $8.26; of this just $3.45 or 24 per cent. went to the support of our beloved leaders, and what shall we say of ourselves? The average salary for the year was $595 which means that many struggled along under much less remuneration, and God forgive the mark! Intellectual, self-respecting, pushing men stood by us for this pitiable salary. Aspirations for culture, ambitions for family advancement, desire to be in the forefront of all that makes for leadership, had to go by the board because of the niggardly support rendered when abundance was all about. We are not a poor brotherhood; our farming brethren are well situated and our city and town brethren are well able to add the necessary modicum for the proper remuneration of the brethren, and yet we chose to depress, to dispirit and to wrong as we did.

I say the necessary modicum, by which I mean that it is not a new proposition that is before us, but a proposition to add slightly to an obligation already assumed, and $200, it is safe to say, is the minimum which should be added to all salaries. In general terms it may be stated that "one gets what he pays for," and though the present preaching force may be excepted conversely from the rule, yet the truth embraced holds good that if just remuneration be not provided a degenerated ministry is to ensue, for intelligent men are in demand at increased salaries in other states and will not come to nor remain in Minnesota to experience needless sacrifice, when equal work can be done elsewhere under comfortable circumstances. And especially so when the sacrifice is uncalled for. And another phase of the question is this, that if an unintelligent ministry prevail, influence upon the world is to be practically nil and a resultant, intellectual deterioration in membership, is to take place till the church sinks below the consideration of thinking people, for intellectual people will not sit under unintellectual speaking.

The pastor should be the intellectual equal if not the peer of the flock or the community to which he ministers. No half-educated, unimpressive man, no matter for his good intentions, can fill the place. Goody-goodyism is out of date. Now shall we sit idly by and allow matters to approach this crisis? Never! Minnesota is too rich a prize to let slip thus.

When a young man asks a father for his daughter's hand in marriage, if the father is a wise one, he thinks of one thing equally as important as the young man's morals, social and business standing and intelligence. A young man who suffers from ill-health has no right to marry until his health is restored. To do so is to commit a crime against the human race. While all diseases may not be directly inherited, the constitutional tendency to acquire them is inherited. If a man is a consumptive, the chances are that his children will have weak, undersized lungs, and a predisposition to acquire the same disease.

The young man who suffers from bronchitis, weak lungs, spitting of blood or any disease of the air-passages which, if neglected leads up to consumption, may take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery with almost absolute assurance of recovery. It cures 98 per cent. of all cases when taken in time. It soothes and heals the delicate and sensitive tissues of the air-passages and lungs, checks the cough, facilitates expectoration, drives out all impurities and disease germs from the tainted blood and builds new and healthy tissues.

Mr. John G. Born, of 4020 Liberty Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa., writes: "Some thirty months ago I said to my wife, 'I don't want to keep anything from you, I must tell you I am in the last stage of consumption.' In December 1896 I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I could then only speak in whispers. I have taken thirteen bottles, and can say with truth I am greatly benefited. People are surprised to hear me speak. I can halloo, and my voice has not been as good in eight years. My stomach was never in better condition. Formerly I could not eat without suffering very much immediately after, but now I can eat anything."

Our little 3,277 band must arise to the occasion. It must have leaders competent to cope with the situation. A state crusade must be inaugurated. Now possibly not another soul in the church may view this letter, so limited is the circulation of our literature, and hence I would that I could impress upon you—you, YOU THE READER HEREOF—the importance of your taking action in the premises. Will you take the question of increasing your pastor's salary before the church, before the official board, before the prayer-meeting, before the individual members and agitate, agitate, agitate till a just salary is raised? Will you enlist for the war? Will you be one for raising the standard of the brotherhood?

With a justly paid and intellectual ministry, Minnesota can be brought into the fold; then let us at the proposition.

The official board will not act of itself; it will need pushing, need rousing; then elbow your way, undauntedly holding up the proposition till the entire membership is alive to the importance of it. The responsibility is yours. A higher standard!

A Good Ministry.

It is but little more than a decade since this church had its birth, and for most of the period, N. S. Haynes has been its minister, he having entered upon his seventh year last March. From the first of his pastorate the growth of the church was so pronounced that scarce a year had passed when the original chapel was moved back and a new building placed on the front of the lot, the two structures forming one auditorium and the seating capacity being nearly thribbled. At the beginning of his term the membership was 160; accessions during the time 508; which, with the usual decrease from all sources leaves the present membership about 375. Attendance upon the Sunday services has shown a steady and healthy growth. The church has kept fully abreast of the advance lines in its observance of the general benevolences of the Disciples, and has led all of our Chicago churches in continuous contributions to our city evangelization work.

Until recently the church had not succeeded in freeing itself from its (moderate) property debt, but this last spring Bro. Haynes planned a movement—himself leading with a characteristically generous subscription—and conducted it to a successful issue; securing in gilt-edged subscriptions the entire amount, something over $3,000, payable in installments, running to June '99. With all our financial obligations thus provided for, the material outlook for the church is very promising, and yet our beloved pastor of these years has deemed it best to let this latest, effectual undertaking to clear the church of its debt be the crown and close of his ministry among us, and a goodly number of us have sat uninterruptedly under his preaching through the entire time.

Custom is to heap adulations upon the departed soldiers of the cross who have finished their earthly labors and lain their armor by; but do we often enough speak the appreciative word of the living warrior on life's battlefield! I trow not, and so make free to record such word of Bro. Haynes. No church could be blessed with an undershepherd truer to the best interests of the flock than he, nor one setting a more godly example in all holy living, liberal giving and fidelity to the teachings of Christ and his atoning sacrifice. Devout, industrious, studious, he seems in the very prime of his powers intellectually—if he has passed, by a few years, the half-century mark—and his sermons come fresh-forged every week from the gospel anvil, with an earnest gospel invitation at the finish, almost literally never omitted.

A marked characteristic of his ministry has been an ever-readiness to lead his people in the paths of prayer, to mark out for and educate them in special Bible study and investigation, and the utilization of expedients and lines of endeavor for winning souls. Spiritual minded himself, his constant aim has been to avoid all sensationalism and clap-trap, and to give forth spiritual truth—that "pertaining to the spirit and life of God in the soul of man." It goes without saying that one of whom all this can be spoken could never compromise in any sense the cause of Christ or the church with which he labors, or give occasion for any member of the body to hang the head. Hence it is that the Englewood Church of Christ has standing in the community and a reputation than which none ranks higher. In keeping with his uniform record in all of his former charges—as is testified by those who know—Bro. Haynes leaves this church at peace and with the best of feeling prevailing. Action upon the resignation has been deferred, but will probably be taken at an early day. While absent from us most of the summer, he returned and filled our pulpit on a recent Sunday and will likely do so again, as his farewell address has not yet been delivered. Many are the expressions of regret over the severance of the tie that has bound pastor and people in loving fellowship, and individual voicings of sorrow abound at the thought of parting with our brother and his faithful companion who, in the well-nigh ceaseless grind of these years, has been to him a helpmeet indeed; and to the congregation a continual benediction. Englewood will remain their home for an indefinite time to come. Our prayers will follow him and his, that God will more and more abundantly own their consecrated labors.

Butler College Affiliation.

From the time when postgraduate study first began to occupy a prominent place in the scheme of higher education the need has been felt for some means of facilitating the student's passage from the undergraduate work of the college to the graduate work of the university. For those whose whole course is taken at one of the universities, beginning in the undergraduate department and ending with the attainment of one of the higher degrees, the process is simple enough. But difficulties arise when the beginning of graduate study means a transition from one institution to another which is wholly out of relation with the first, and organized and administered without reference to its curriculum and requirements. Yet, the fact remains that in most cases the aspirant for special study and a higher degree must and ought to seek them outside of his Alma Mater. A more perfect understanding of the reciprocal relations existing between the college and the university has suggested to educators certain plans for obviating the difficulties mentioned. The most notable of these is the plan of affiliation, whereby a university and a college enter into such mutual agreements that the path of the student from the latter to the former is made straight and easy, and inducements are offered for the pursuance of courses of study after college graduation.

The articles of affiliation recently agreed upon between the University of Chicago and Butler College have this for their object, and it is believed that the items of the agreement are such as will bring about this desired effect in a measure hitherto unattained anywhere. In the nature of the case the concessions must be made, for the most part, by the university, the college merely taking such steps as will guarantee to the university its worthiness to co-operate with it on the proposed terms. The University of Chicago agress—

1. To read all answers to examination questions set by the faculty of Butler College and passed by the college, and to give all students whose work is of the passing grade credit for the same as though they were matriculated in the University.
2. To confer at each commencement of the College the Bachelor's degree of the University upon that member of the graduating class of the College who shall be designated by the College as having sustained the highest average rank during the whole college course.
3. To confer at each commencement of the College upon every member of the graduating class that receives the Bachelor's degree from the College a certificate showing that its possessor will be entitled to the Bachelor's degree of the University upon completing one quarter's (twelve weeks') study at the University, subsequent to completion of the course for the Bachelor's degree at Butler College.
4. To give to all Bachelors of Butler College, who become candidates for the corresponding degree of the University of Chicago, free tuition for one quarter at any time within twelve months of graduation from the College, and to grant the Bachelor's degree of the University upon completion of such study in accordance with the provision of clause 3.
5. To grant annually three fellowships affording free tuition for one year to graduates nominated by the faculty of the College. The holders of these fellowships may take advantage of the pledge in clause 4 in addition to the fellowships, thus securing from the University free tuition during four quarters.
6. To grant free tuition in the graduate schools at any time to members of the faculty of the College under regular salary.
7. To consult through the heads of corresponding departments with the faculty of the College upon all questions respecting methods and standards of work upon which mutual understanding is desirable.
8. To consult through the president of the University and the president of the College, or some other officer duly empowered by either party, upon all cases of appointment or removal of instructors, before nomination is made to the trustees of the College.
9. To elect the president of the College to membership in the University council. By virtue of such membership he becomes also a member of the University Congregation.
10. To give to the College all the other privileges which are incident to the general plan of application as set forth in the register of the University.

The College, for its part, agrees to send to the University examiner copies of all quarterly examination questions prior to their use; to send also the examination papers after they have been marked at the College; to pay the actual cost of reading the papers at the University; and in general to allow the University such oversight as will assure it that the quality of the work done in the College is kept on a par with corresponding work in the University.

In entering into such an agreement as this the College in no sense forfeits any independence which is worth preserving. It abrogates the right to lower the standard of its work, the quality of its courses or the quantity of its requirements, and it surrenders the privilege of appointing to positions on its faculty instructors without sufficient qualification. In exchange for the surrender of these doubtful privileges it secures for its students recognition from the University, as before specified, gives its graduates an assured standing with which to begin more advanced work in the University, and secures for them free tuition to the extent and under the conditions above mentioned. If this shall prove to be a bad bargain the agreement may be dissolved by either party. No educational institution in the country has ever been more conservative and careful in the distribution of its degrees than has the University of Chicago, and this recognized fact gives increased weight to the generous propositions above quoted, both as evidence of the present high grade of work done by Butler College and as assurance of profitable and intimate relation between and the foremost educational movements the day.

Write Macbeth Pittsburgh Pa

St. Louis Letter.

During the past month this city has been doing the act of a host, and she prides herself in the feasts she has spread for her guests; but of course, they pay for what they get, and in some instances they pay dearly for it. There is a sense in which there is recreation and pleasure in a visit to a large city, but there is another sense in which the real profit is with the city. Of course, the city partly atones for this harvest of coin and currency from all over the surrounding country in the special attractions prepared for the amusement and delight of those who want to see odd things, but after all the sight-seers pay the bills. It is doubtless a great relief for people to get away from the humdrum of common life and feel the thrill of new and startling sensations such as a large city affords, or can give as a special attraction, but how many realize that a large per cent. of their profits or hard earnings for the year are swept away for naught by these festal waves. With them it may be pleasure, but with the city it is a matter of business. It is a harvest for its railroads, merchants, saloons, hotels, theatres, fakirs, thieves and robbers. No city goes into the entertainment business for its health.

But on the score of sight-seeing the so-called "country cousins" are not the only game for money-getters. It is no trouble for one who knows the city to see about as many "gawkers" on the night of the Veiled Prophet from the city as from the country. And, what is more, you will usually find them on such occasions perched on poorly provided, hard seats, for which they have paid a quarter, half or full dollar, a thing which those from the country regard as purely a matter of pride and of inexcusable extravagance, while they will stand for hours to see—shadows. Of course city folks laugh at the way visitors stare at our tall buildings and their remarks about city people, sights and events, but this is only half the story. If city folks could only know how unfitting some of their remarks about country ways are and how "perfectly silly" some of their questions about country things are to country people, they would perhaps not be so inclined to make fun at the expense of people whom they have induced to visit the city and of whose money they have taken—that is, the city has taken—freely. To take things on the whole, then, our conclusion is that it is about as awkward a job for city people to take in the country as it is for country people to take in a city.

But of course there are some features about the St. Louis Exposition and Fair that rank above the office of the spectacular only. They are at least supposed to have educational features, in which our friends from the country are probably the greater sharers. At least they look at things more sentimentally. With the majority of city folks the opportunity to visit either the Fair or Exposition is made the occasion of "a good time," and little interest is taken in the whys and wherefores of anything unless it be Sousa's band. When visitors from the country return to their homes they have things to talk about for the next six months; but city folk dismiss all such things with some casual remark and begin to wonder whether "we will ever have anything worth going to see any more." What they have been at pains to show to their guests and discoursed upon with eloquence, leaving an impression upon the visitors that we verily feast upon these sights and wonders from year to year, suddenly lose their charms and become worthless as attractions. And sometimes even the frown of regret for the time wasted in "doing the city" for friends come to the face. But not so with all. The visit of some are appreciated by some, nevertheless.

But the festal days are about over; the people have gone to their long (distant) homes, or to the Omaha Exposition, and the mourners are beginning to go about the streets. The tall buildings that have been looking down into sentimental faces gazing up at their dizzy heights will have to stand through the long months of another year without the sight of a human face, except an occasional visitor, unless they conclude to break the monotony with an occasional fire. But how sad it must be for these great monuments to look down upon a people whose eye is continually fixed upon the almighty dollar, or whose nose is continually on the grindstone, or whose feet are ever hurrying to some new attraction. And our churches, too, are left to wonder why they were neglected or passed by so indifferently by the throngs who have come and gone perhaps without a visit to the place where they might have been most deeply impressed or most happily blessed.

The Iowa Christian Convention.

The twenty-ninth session of the Iowa Christian Convention and the eighteenth session of the Iowa Woman's Board of Missions, also the Bible-school and Endeavor Societies, held their yearly conventions at the East Side Church of Christ, in Des Moines, Sept. 26-30. A. D. Wickizer is the pastor of this church. The generous-hearted people of the East Side, assisted by the other churches of Christ in Des Moines, entertained the delegates royally. The ladies of the church served excellent meals at noon and night in the basement of the new church.

The C. W. B. M. occupied the first day of the convention. Their reports showed increased work. No state auxiliary is better organized or more efficiently officered than the Iowa C. W. B. M. All the officers are wise, talented and active. The president, Mrs. Ella M. Huffman, of Prescott, told in her splendid annual address of the good work accomplished in the past year by the state and district officers. The auxiliaries paid into the national treasury $4,771.70, an increase of more than $300 over last year. This increase was up to July 1st. For the national year to Sept. 1st it is over $700. This increase was made by societies doubling their dues and by contributions for the Dr. McNeil Fund. One hundred and fifty-three auxiliaries are reported. The Bible Chair Fund reached $509.04; $213.50 was from life memberships. To July 1st $305.29 was contributed to the Dr. McNeil Fund. This was largely increased by other contributions before the Doctor sailed. The receipts on C. W. B. M. Day were $283.87; from all sources, $6,189.94, every member paying $2.25. Eight auxiliaries raised over $100, seven raised over $70 and twenty-four over $50. The C. W. B. M., of Iowa, have a right to "think highly of themselves" and the work they are doing. We shall hear still better reports from next year.

The first session of the Iowa Christian Convention was given to Home Missions, Church Extension and Ministerial Relief. Dr. McCash, of Des Moines, spoke in behalf of the American Board under the theme of "Our Country." He said: "This country Christianized will be God's power to civilize and save the world. The needs and opportunities of Home Missionary work are so many no man can number them." G. W. Muckley, of Kansas City, Mo., our "Hobson," brave, determined, fearless, poured out his soul in eloquence in behalf of the Extension Board's work. Dr. Lucas, of Indianapolis, whom all Iowa loves for his goodness of heart and loyalty to the Master's service, enthused the convention with his pathetic plea for Ministerial Relief.

Prominent among the visitors at the convention was Miss Hattie Pounds, of Indianapolis, who pleased the convention with her address on "Woman and the Kingdom." Miss Pounds is endowed with a felicitous combination of high gifts of soul. The Christian Church may well be proud of those of her women "who labor with us in the gospel." They have intellectuality without masculinity. Frank G. Tyrrell, of St. Louis, addressed the convention on "What do Ye More than Others?" This sermon was a strong plea that Christian people should be consistent with their own profession. If we are just a little better than the denominations in doctrine and in ordinance, should we not do "more than others" in all Christian enterprises, and be "more than others" in high thinking and holy living. E. R. Dunlap, of Seattle, spoke to the convention about the needs of the Far West. L. W. Rose, a former preacher of Iowa, but now of Eugene, Ore., was a visitor at the convention. J. M. Rudy, the new pastor at Cedar Rapids, Ia., delivered a very thoughtful address on "Present-day Problems, and How to Meet Them."

Secretary Haggard's report showed 20 new houses dedicated during the past year, costing $58,000. Membership of Iowa increased by a net gain of 4,000, making our present membership 56,000. One thousand, three hundred and eleven were added to the churches aided by the I. C. C. It also showed that we have in Iowa 447 churches and 84 unorganized bands; 432 Bible-schools, only 15 congregations without schools. There have been 12 new congregations, and 12 Bible-schools, and 12 Endeavor Societies, and 12 Aid Societies, and one auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. organized. We have 344 preachers in active service.

Treasurer Williams' report showed total receipts to be $3,449.40, and a balance on hand of $85.86. The secretary in his report said that this was an off year; while the work has not been neglected it has in a measure given way, while "the God of battles was shaking the iron dice of destiny." The prospects for the coming year are most encouraging. The officers elected for the new year are H. O. Breeden, president; S. M. Johnson, vice-president; I. N. McCash, recording secretary; B. S. Denny, corresponding secretary; W. W. Williams, treasurer, and A. D. Wickizer, state evangelist. This office is an additional one. Heretofore the secretary under the direction of the board looked after all field work and employed special evangelists for meetings. Evangelist Wickizer, in addition to "the work of an evangelist," will be superintendent of Bible-schools and Endeavor Societies, and will if he can hold or cause to be held Bible and Endeavor institutes in every county in the state.

Governor Drake refused on account of feeble health to serve as president of the I. C. C. He has been president of the I. C. C. for ten years. His farewell address, though not rhetorical, was eloquent with a tender pathos that aroused feelings akin to those occasioned by the last words of Moses and the farewell address of Washington, and the words of Clay when he bade the United States Senate adieu. Bro. Drake has liberally supported all of our benevolent and missionary enterprises. He is, I believe, the most liberal man in our brotherhood. His gifts and donations will aggregate nearly $100,000, perhaps more. During the convention he gave $1,000 to the Chicago Temperance Temple Fund. He said, "The saddest thing in all the world was the manner men gave to support the work of the Lord. I have borrowed money to pay my pledges, and given till I felt it; and I tell you I felt mighty good over it. I have been prospered as I have given."

Governor Shaw, the present executive of Iowa, favored the convention with his presence. He is an ardent member of the M. E. Church. He is at present superintendent of the Bible-school at the Central M. E. Church, Des Moines. He said that he rejoiced in the fact that the denominations were not now quarreling as they were wont to do. Whether the Governor sees the reason why or not, I can not say, but thank God, his statement is true. And it is true because all are learning to love Christ more and denominations less.

Chancellor Craig's report of Drake University was gratifying. It showed repairing done, additions to the library, apparatus for the biological department, faculty increased by P. O. Powell and M. R. Woodman, the business college reorganized and placed under Dean Belle, and that $44,000 of the $50,000 has been secured. The report declared that this is the most important work in Iowa. One hundred and forty men were preparing for the ministry last year. The future of our cause in Iowa depends on the character of our leaders, and the character of our leaders depends on the equipment and work of Drake University, and the equipment of Drake University depends on the generosity of our brotherhood, whom God has blessed with much wealth.

The Spanish War and the Christian.

The return of our emaciated, sallowfaced soldiers from the Spanish War is entirely too full of suggestion to be passed carelessly by. May be they look a little worse through the smoke of the great war scandal that follows their coming back, like the smoke that came with the locusts of John's fifth trumpet.

Poor fellows, their patriotism is unquestioned. They have merited our love, but they are victims of blundering officials and a murderous avarice and of partisan fanaticism.

The close of this strange war is an ominous and pregnant hour. The drum-beat of mustering out is pierced by a cry for peace from a quarter the least expected. The powers of the Old World had some months before our late conflict began agreed to establish a court of peace, of arbitration and of reference, to which all international disputes might be appealed. They presented this most humanitarian and most Christian measure before our nation for its acceptance, but our boasted Christian Republic declined. Our Senatorial House of Democratic lords refused it and I believe almost without a protest from the Christian press and pulpit of the country—to our shame be it said.

Closely upon the heels of this benign proffer came the declaration of war with Spain on the humanitarian(?)ground that a hundred thousand or more of Spain's own subjects had died from privation and confinement, etc. To reach this island of suffering with our sympathy we had to look over the tops of two hundred and fifty thousand saloons, which kill about sixty thousand of our own citizens every year, and as it is believed above the heads of more than a million victims of our own sweatshops; and now, in the close of this war, in which we have won a conquest over territory which may be many times the trouble to us that Ireland has been to England, we hear the trumpet from the Almighty coming from the greatest and most warlike nation on the earth crying, "Peace on earth and good-will to men!" God has spoken to us through the Czar of Russia in the midst of our hypocrisy and shame. Had we accepted the offer of the powers and established a court of peace for the world the trouble between us and the Spanish nation might have been referred and settled without the blood and wreck and ruin which so well illustrate John Sherman's definition of war.

How broad and inconceivably great would be the educational effects upon the nations of the world should such a question as that be brought to the thought of their citizens for free discussion. Three months of such widespread discussion would do more to prepare the world for the kingdom of God than all the wars of the world and all its legislative acts combined. Why was our own nation among the last to abolish slavery? Why the last to refuse a world's court of peace? It is out of the weak side of democracy. That is the dead-level spirit of a false and tyrannical democracy which cuts down every man who raises his head above its dreary level. They do it with such wordy weapons as "ultraist," "radical," "cranky," etc., as effectually as a French guillotine could do it.

The only independence we have is our national independence of other nations, well protected by the great waste of waters, but no personal independence above the malarial, sickening level of public opinion, which stands over our heads with scorpion whips to bring us into subjection to this giddy, fickle majority.

In England a citizen may stand well with his own class and have an independent opinion, but we are one class in America, and that is not a Christian or educational, but a strictly political class. Our religion takes second place and our churches are echoes of politics. We surrender everything to our politics and our politics is blind and partisan. Whether it is war or peace or license or superstition of vice, the pulpit and religious press are a weak and sanctimonious echo of it and feebly says, "Amen." How came we to hear this peace trumpet from Russia? It is because Russia has something greater than a Czar, greater than a republic—it has a great, true man, a Tolstoi, who has dared to utter braver words for the true meaning of the religion of Christ than any man in America for a generation. Tolstoi's emperor seems to have caught this greater spirit and is at least able to utter it from a world point of view.

What sound is this we now hear, that "where our flag goes up, there it must stay?" It means no less than the turning away of the mind of the people from the most vital issues that confront us to a new and benevolent (?) scheme of evangelizing the world with gunpowder and bringing it under the benign sway of avarice, commercialism and licensed doggeries! It means the waste of a billion of dollars yearly, spent to create vice under the permission of Congress and by the votes of church members at the ballotbox. God bless the Czar and Tolstoi, and send us some missionaries who who can stand up for Christ against immoral politics and a false democracy. If this nation is to be judged by its opportunities and its professions will it not be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for us?

J. S. HUGHES.

[So far as this article condemns the attitude of the political parties, and of many professed Christians, to the liquor traffic, it has our hearty approval; but we cannot see the wisdom or justice of associating a righteous war, a necessary war, with the nation's shortcomings in other respects. This government, however, has never rejected any proposal for a court to decide disputes between nations, for no such proposal has ever been submitted to it. Our Senate refused to ratify an Anglo-American treaty of arbitration, and in this we think it acted unwisely; but the principle of arbitration was not objected to. Tolstoi had precious little to do with the Czar's proposal for a peace conference. The venerable novelist is a literateur of some distinction, and a man of kindly impulses, but he is a rationalist who rejects Christ's claims of divinity and accepts only such of his moral teaching as commends itself to his judgment. Men of a very different mold are needed to save this nation.—EDITOR.]

Northwestern Colorado.

J. C. Hay, of Clarksville, Tenn., who has been preaching in Northwestern Colorado, and who knows of the condition of our cause in that region, and also of the country and climate, its possibilities and profits, says:

Brethren contemplating migration to Northwestern Colorado can place the fullest confidence in whatever Bro. J. L. Ellis states about that country. I spent three months this summer in gospel labors in Routt County. Hoping to attend the General Convention at Chattanooga, I shall be pleased to give any interested brethren who may be there the results of my observations. Bro. Ellis' address is Craig, Routt County, Colorado.

For Nervous Women.
Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

DR. J. B. ALEXANDER, Charlotte, N. C., says: "It is pleasant to the taste, and ranks among the best of nerve tonics for nervous females."

Thomas Munnell.

I have just received the sad news of the death of this servant of God. I knew him long and well. For some years he had not been prominently before the brotherhood. This was doubtless his own fault, though I think the brethren were not altogether free from blame with respect to the matter. There is a tendency among many churches to shelve the old men. As a rule, a preacher passes the deadline when he reaches the age of forty. In some cases this is a righteous retribution. I know preachers who struck twelve before they were twenty-five. Their ministerial growth has been like the inverted view of a telescope. The big end is nearest the eye.

But this was not the case with Thos. Munnell. He was a student up to the last day of his life. He may not have kept abreast of all the living questions of the day; for being somewhat outside of the conflict he probably did not feel the need of a close touch with living issues. Nevertheless, he did not cease to think, and even to write upon current questions.

He was a careful, critical and earnest student of the Word of God. In my judgment he was the most forceful writer in our ranks on questions related to Christian ethics; and I do not hesitate to affirm that the Christian brotherhood are indebted to him more than to any other man among us for right conceptions of the relation of the law to the gospel. He was more than a writer; he was a thinker. Perhaps his greatest mistake in life was in imagining himself a man of affairs. He had little capacity for details. He occupied several positions which he could only fill idealistically. Our misssionary work was too low in his day for him to make practical his high conceptions as to what it ought to have been. However, his work as corresponding secretary was, after all, useful in opening up the way to better days. Still, this position was not the one he ought to have filled in life. He was a born college man. His own education ought to have been the highest attainable, and then he ought to have filled a place where he could have impressed himself on a class of students capable of following a great mind.

He was not appreciated at his true value. He did not move in the procession where popular favor is the reward of timely serving. A few friends knew him, understood him and appreciated him. Some of the things he wrote will live in our literature. His article in the first number of the old Christian Quartely entitled, "Indifference to Things Indifferent," is the best thing of its kind in the English language. It has furnished the key to many a public teacher to unlock questions of casuistry, and in it has also furnished texts for many a sermon on Christian ethics.

It is hoped that some suitable sketch of his life and work will be prepared by a capable hand. But my personal relations to Bro. Munnell will not allow me to wait for this sketch. I, therefore, send these few lines as a small tribute to the memory of one of the truest and best men among us—a man of singularly fine intellect and a culture considerably beyond that of our average educated men.

Notes and News.

David Walk, minister of the church at Los Angeles, and superintendent of the Chinese missions of that church, in his monthly report to the church, says:

Jeu Joe Wah was with us for the last time, Sept. 5, before sailing for China.

Chung Sing, one of the oldest and most faithful of our Chinese brethren, was given a farewell reception on the evening of the 26th. He returns to his native land as a herald of salvation to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death.

His credentials were signed by W. J. A. Smith, C. H. Owen, B. F. Coulter and David Walk. Mr. A. W. Francisco, Collector of Customs, gave him a handsome testimonial of a nature calculated to obviate any difficulty in the way of his returning to the United States.

An interesting and affecting feature of the occasion was the presentation of an elegant edition of the Bible, inscribed as follows:

"For other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3:11).

"Presented by the following named teachers of the Christian Chinese Mission: David Walk, superintendent; W. J. A. Smith, C. H. Owen, Sadie Lapin, Mrs. Lipscomb, Mary Lipscomb, Jens Johnson, Theo. U. Lawson, L. F. Berkey, Fannie Collins, C. O. Goodwin, Emily Hambleton."

Thanks to All.

To the many kind friends, far and near, who sent messages of love to Mrs. Abbott while yet alive, and which sent so many rays of light down into the valley of shadows in which she walked so long, and to the great number who have sent such tender messages of sweet sympathy to us since our great loss, we want to return our most grateful thanks. We cannot write to you all individually, yet we want you to know how much we appreciate your loving words. May God bless you all.

Since our coming to the Northside Christian Church, May 15, we have built a tabernacle for permanent use with a seating capacity of 400. Bro. B. Q. Denham, of North Tonawanda, N. Y., dedicated it with $65 more money than was needed to pay all indebtedness against the church, and we have added to the membership 46, nearly all of whom are helpful additions, almost doubling our strength, both financially and as a working force. We had seven additions Sept 11, day of dedication, from two to four every Lord's day since, and we are praising the Lord for his goodness toward us. Let the brethren rejoice with us.

A New Era for Bethany College.

At a meeting of the trustees of Bethany College, held in Pittsburgh, Sept. 30, plans were perfected that are expected to work out very promising results for Bethany's future. Campbell Jobes is to continue his work in the field where he has been so successful in soliciting funds and students. His address is Claysville, Penn.

J. L. Darsie was also elected to the work in the interest of the college, with headquarters at Bethany, W. Va., and Chas. A. Young was tendered the presidency of the institution. It is not yet known whether Bro. Young will accept or not, as he has reserved his decision, but Bethany's friends are hard at work and very encouraging results are already apparent.

In a few days we hope to present a financial exhibit that will be a surprise to all who have, by injurious reports, been led to suppose that the college was about to suspend.

A fine attendance of students this year, with promises of many more who will doubtless come in soon, may put the present session far above the average.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—The cause of my absence from the state convention at Nevada was sickness. I was sick in bed under the care of a physician. I so notified Bro. Abbott, but the condition of his wife kept him away from Nevada.

We are now nicely located in a splendid new parsonage. Come up and occupy the "prophet's room." J. T. OGLE.

Carrollton, Mo., Oct. 2, 1898.

Wanted.

The church at Gravett, Ark., would like to receive a donation of three dozen hymnbooks that have been laid aside by some church. Send them by freight to Mary E. Justice, Gravett, Benton county, Ark.

JOHN FRIEND.

Washington Convention.

Brethren of Washington, our state convention will be held at North Yakima, Oct. 26-28, 1898, and we hope it will be the best ever held in the state. Let us make it such by all attending who possibly can. The church here will entertain free all the delegates who come. As all the trains arrive in the night, be sure and send your name and the time you will arrive to me, so that ample provision may be made for you. L. F. STEPHENS,

Pastor of the Church of Christ.

A New Entertainment.

About the latest thing in the way of entertainment for Endeavorers of which we have heard is the tomato peeling contest. By special arrangement such a contest took place at the Tomato Canning Factory at Lebanon, Ind., by the Endeavor Society of the Christian Church, recently. The prizes awarded and won netted the society $11.82 for their evening's work. Some of the most prominent women of the city, it is said, entered the contest.

South Dakota Remarks.

Your scribe is, perhaps, rather young to be giving advice to those matrimonially inclined, but he has at least known what it is to have a happy home and a loving wife, who was a true helpmeet.

Not long ago I warned a friend against marrying a girl unless he truly loved her. I quote from his reply: "You are getting love out of its proper place. It is husbands who are to love their wives as Christ loved the church and gave himself for it. Nothing is said about boys loving their best girls. Look at the people who marry just because they love each other, and how do the live? The family life of the heathen who never sees his wife until his wedding day puts them to shame." How is that for an exaltation of heathenism? I was dumbfounded. He concludes, "I believe a preacher can do better work married to a godless woman than a single man can do." That is scarcely Pauline, is it?

"Our Cause at Chicory," by R. C. Barrows, is a little book containing much truth concerning the introduction of apostolic Christianity into the Northwest. It is well worth perusal.

Another book which I dare say very few of our younger brethren have read is "Hadji in Syria," by Mrs. Sarah Barclay Johnson, daughter of our first Foreign Missionary. This was published by James Challen & Sons, Philadelphia, in 1858.

As superintendent of C. E. I have been calling the attention of our pastors and Endeavor Societies to two important matters: the Bethany C. E. Reading Course and the observance of Forefathers' Day, Oct. 23. "Amen!" to the suggestion that Dr. J. Z. Tyler be induced to give all his time to the interests of our C. E. Societies.

In my humble opinion it is not the best thing possible that the country is being flooded with Endeavor Bibles of the Authorized Version when the Revised Version is so much better. Don't misunderstand me: an A. V. Bible is infinitely better than none at all, but a R. V. Bible ought to be in the hands of every young person. Our fathers are wedded to the verses as they learned them; let us learn them as they are in the light of recent study.

What's the matter of Des Moines for our general missionary conventions next year? It would be a blessing to our brotherhood in the Northwest to have a convention so near that we could at least get daily papers telling about it.

L. W. Thompson will remain a second year with the churches at Volga and Pleasant Valley.

A. Erichstone, a Scandinavian evangelist for the churches of Christ, is spending a few days in this part of South Dakota. His home is at Seattle, Wash. A. H. SEYMOUR.

Arlington, S. D., Sept. 23, 1898.

Some Reasons for Observing Forefathers' Day.

1. Most people shape their lives by others; our prominent forefathers were heroic; we should keep their heroism before those whose characters are forming.

2. The greatness of our forefathers was largely due to their self-denial; this should be kept before the eyes of our young people that they may be willing to deny themselves.

3. We should be grateful for all good things; many of these we have obtained through our forefathers to whom our gratitude should be directed.

4. We claim to be a progressive people; we should study the lives of our forefathers and see how much we have progressed.

THE PURPOSE OF FOREFATHERS' DAY.

The purpose of Forefathers' Day is two-fold; to make the young people among the Disciples of Christ familiar with the purposes and achievements of our pioneers, and to enlist them in a co-operative effort to evangelize every part of our own country through the agency of the American Christian Missionary Society.

The young people among the Disciples should become familiar with the names of such men as Barton Warren Stone, Thomas Campbell, Walter Scott, Alexander Campbell, Benjamin Franklin, Isaac Errett and others who have wrought for the restoration of New Testament Christianity.

Brief biographical sketches of such men should be read before our C. E. Societies on Forefathers' Day.

The minister has no more enthusiastic helpers than Christian Endeavorers. He should bind them to him with hooks of steel by co-operating with them in their religious work. No better means of getting deeper hold and giving needed help can be suggested than Forefathers' Day. We earnestly recommend that it be made a great day in the church—a day of prayer, of song, of reminiscence, of renewing zeal in the distinctive work of our brotherhood. It should be a day of education, of prayer, of rejoicing in victories won, and in preparation of greater victories.

The Kansas State Convention.

It was held at Wellington, near south line of the state. Notwithstanding, the attendance was comparatively large—much more so than some supposed it would be. It began Monday night, the 3rd inst., with an address by Sister Helen E. Moses, of Indianapolis, and ended the 7th inst., with an address by Bro. W. T. Moore in the City Auditorium. Brethren B. L. Smith, of Cincinnati, O., G. W. Muckley, of Kansas City, and W. S. Priest, pastor of the church, Atchison, Kas., each delivered an address in the same auditorium.

There were numerous day addresses by sisters as well as by brethren, some of which, and all the better for it, were in manuscript. By motion Bro. Hilton, of Beloit, and Sister Mattie Titus were requested to have theirs published.

It occurred to me that the program was rather too much crowded, but it was executed, however, from start to finish, in a commendable manner, under the admirable rulings of those who presided respectively at the sessions of the C. W. B. M., Y. P. S. C. E., B. S. and K. C. M. S.

It appeared that our common cause has been injured no little in Kansas by immoral preachers. Elders and deacons are required to be men of "good report," yet a man who is reputed as a drunkard is allowed by some congregations to occupy their pulpits. And why? "To reform them," we are told. The pulpit, my brother, is not the place to reform a man from drunkenness or any other immorality.

"Tell me I hate the bowl?
Hate is a feeble word;
I abhor, I loathe,
And my very soul is stirred
To its deepest depths,
Where'er I see or hear or tell
Of this dark beverage of hell."

The thought that other religious bodies are troubled more than we are with unworthy ministers is no reason that we should excuse drunkenness or any other immorality of any one in the church, especially of a preacher. But our cause in Kansas is onward. Was surprised to learn that only one Protestant body has a larger membership in this state. We may ere long be first in that regard.

O, that not only here, but everywhere we might be first in holines, and in all that it takes to constitute a real Christian in a full-orbed, or gospel sense.

Would like to report more, but fear that this is already too prolix. J. A. WALTERS.

Another Victory for Eureka College.

Last night, at the meeting of the Inter-collegiate Oratorical Association, of Illinois, the representative of Eureka College, H. G. Harward, won the first prize in oratory over the representatives of five other colleges, of the state of Illinois. The colleges represented were Knox College, Wesleyan University, Monmouth College, Blackburn University, Illinois College and Eureka College. The contest was held at Galesburg, and the Association was a guest of Knox. Mr. Harward is from Melbourne, Australia, and is one of our most devoted and promising young preachers. We rejoice greatly in his success, which was at the same time a splandid triumph for our college.

A Glorious Plea.

The plea of the Christian Church is to restore primitive Christianity with all of its doctrines, ordinances, fruits and practices. This is a plea both to the world and to the various religious bodies. There are millions in our country who have never heard of this plea, and who would accept it if they could hear it, but how can they hear unless we send them preachers?

When this glorious plea is properly presented to American citizens they accept it with great joy. During three years of labor in Virginia I preached it in new fields and it was welcomed. I spent six years of my ministry in the far West and found it welcome there. I have spent five years in these great middle states and have found it welcome here. I have made side trips to Pennsylvania and Massachusetts to preach it and it was received with joy amongst these conservative people. I can testify with other evangelists and pastors that it is just the plea the world is needing. The field is ripe. Yes, brethren, millions are waiting in the North, East, South and West for you to send them the primitive gospel.

Missouri County Convention.

County meeting of Jasper County, Oct. 26-29, will be held at Webb City. All churches are requested to send delegates. All pastors are invited and urged to come. Springfield district convenes at Carthage Nov. 28-30. A good program in both cases. All the churches in the fourteen counties are earnestly urged to send representives.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The Hickman's Hill preacher is Geo. W. Terrell, and whenever he begins work with a congregation they begin co-operating with us if they had not done so before, and it seems that self-preservation would urge me to do all possible for such brethren; don't you think so?

Mt Cabanne, St. Louis, is one of the model schools. Their preacher is a natural teacher of teachers and has a Bible class of nearly thirty. Their superintendent has been in the vanguard of Bible-school teachers for lo! these many years, and is to-day, through the helps of the Christian Publishing Company, teaching, training and making more teachers than any other one person in all the brotherhood. I would love to mention the many good points which I noted for use for the schools of the state, but space forbids. F. M. Call, business manager of one of our greatest publishing interests, is assistant superintendent, and there is Barclay Meador, assistant secretary of the Y. M. C. A., in this city, leading the music, while there are a multitude of chief men and women giving their ready assistance to the success of the school. Why, they have a Bible club, under the inspiration of J. F. Merryman, one of the busiest and best lawyers in the city, and the club is just entering on its fourth and last year. Then they have a Bible-school missionary, Miss Mattie Spillman, who makes over two hundred visits a week (think of it!) in this great work of Christ. Why, of course they are friends of state Bible-school work, and with all the other doings of the schools you will hear from them in this respect during the new year.

Walker, where J. H. Jones leads, gave George E. Prewitt a hearty welcome and promp assistance, the sum being $10, then sent him away with a cheery God-speed. Such congregations are on the highway to prosperity and great success.

At Marshall, the Saline county meeting began at the close of a 28 hours' rain, so that the representation from the county was not good. Preachers present: J. W. Strawn, J. S. Russell, G. E. Shanklin, Ransom Cole, B. T. Wharton, H. F. Davis, W. B. Young, G. A. Hoffmann, E. J. Wright, Edmund Wilkes. In our Bible-school conference many took part, and from the interest it seemed that all were pleased and benefited, especiall that practical man, J. A. Gordon, in whose home we discussed the work from start to finish. He has put the Marshall school to the front among the Missouri workers, sparing neither time nor money to make it a success, and it is in such co-operation that Saline is in such hearty accord with us in state work.

Cowgill, where Mrs. Frank E. Goodnow is in the front, send us the first quarter on their apportionment, with some good pointers as to improved methods introduced.

The Waverly brethren have no thought of giving up their work. Though depleted by death and removal, their school is reported as in better working order this year than usual, while the apportionment will be paid in full.

At Jacksonville Mrs. N. D. Conely has been in the work for many years and the school has always been in touch with our work, this year being no exception, for the remittance is made in full, thanks to all the leaders.

Knobnoster is one of the smaller schools in the state that no more think of neglecting this work than of trying to do without helps; so that their prompt response was not new to us, but was cheering as usual, as it is the only school in Johnson county that has accepted their apportionment for this year.

At Schell City, for the first time in years, one of our evangelists made a plea for this work and the brethren responded real well, considering, but the friends at Berea are not slack to help us, and so let G. E. Prewitt see, when he was with them last week, but happily responded to the call; thanks.

But now why not hear from some of the better schools in the state? H. F. DAVIS.

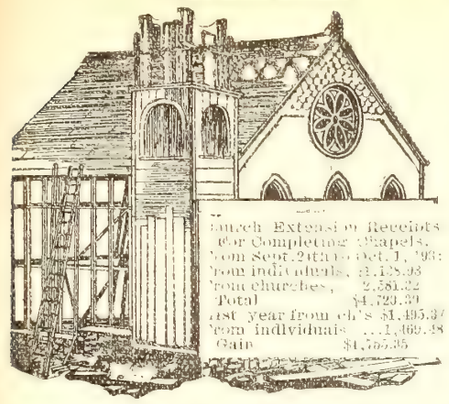
North Carolina.

While "Our Plea" has not made the strides in North Carolina which have characterized the "movement" in the West, the slowness of our growth may be easily accounted for. Many difficulties have and do beset our forces which would discourage less resolute workers. With supreme faith in God they overcome obstacles which seem insuperable. Prof. Dawson, one of the most godly men I have ever met, works very hard, having visited about eighty of the one hundred and twenty churches in the state within the present missionary year. North Carolina is a great mission field. Stretching out over a territory five hundred miles from east to west, and about three hundred miles from north to south, she has within her vast domain a number of cities and towns, bustling centres of business and influence, which have never yet been reached by the grand plea for an apostolic Christianity. How any one whose soul is on fire with zeal for truth can look over the state and behold her as she extends her arms in an appeal to "come over and help us" and be indifferent to her need is one of the unexplained mysteries of the human heart.

Some six or seven houses of worship are being erected this year by our brethren. Winston is building a splendid house, the forces there being led by H. C. Bowen. Wilson is building a magnificent house. Bro. B. H. Melton is the popular pastor of that church. Bro. Dawson is superintending the construction of the houses at Plymouth and Ayden. The North Carolina Christian College is located at Ayden. Prof. A. F. Moon is the principal, and I hear he is doing a good work. The policy of the state board for the present year is to strengthen the weak places, and they are helping to support seven preachers at needy points.



Death has been mowing down some of our best workers in the old North State. J. L. Winfield, late editor of the Watch Tower, the wife of H. D. Harper and J. J. Harper's wife have passed away within the present missionary year.

The veteran preacher of the state is J. R. Winfield, of Pantego, who is about eighty years old and is awaiting the Master's summons to pass into the great Beyond.

Extracts From Annual Report.

A gain of 22 churches over last year and a gain in receipts from churches of $1,085.85.

The year closed September 30th, with a net gain over last year of about $900. The receipts aggregate as follows:

From church collections	$ 6,442.34
Individuals	11,643.00
Bequests	2,848.00
Annuities	1,500.00
Advertisements	204.25
Interest	4,860.59
Total new receipts for the year	$27,498.18
Collected on loans	13,766.75
Total receipts, from all sources	$41,264.93

FUND STATEMENT TO SEPT. 30TH, '98.

Amount in Extension Fund	$167,243.03
Loans collected since beginning	66,987.14
Interest paid to date	25,115.28
Number of churches aided	389
Number of churches having paid back their loans	104
Number of loans outstanding	285

THE PREACHERS' PERPETUAL VOLUNTEER LEAGUE is still increasing in favor and numbers. Thus far over 800 have joined the League, representing over 1,000 congregations. To join the League is simply to agree to take a collection annually for Church Extension, wherever you may be preaching.

ANNUITY FUNDS FOR CHURCH EXTENSION.

The National Convention at Des Moines, Iowa, in 1890, made the following recommendations to the Board of Church Extension: "We request the board to consider and adopt, if practicable, the Annuity feature in raising funds for Church Extension, believing that it will prove, as in the case of other churches, a successful method of raising money for this fund.

The board began to receive annuities for the first time this year. The board pays six per cent. on annuities, loaning the money out at six per cent. to mission churches that cannot be helped from our general fund. The board gives an Annuity bond to the person giving his money, and at the death of the annuitant, the gift becomes the permanent property of the Church Extension Fund, without further obligations on the part of the board.

LOANS MADE FOR THE YEAR.

During the year 47 loans were made, aggregating $23,230. Other loans have been promised to the number of 53, aggregating over $25,000.

CATALOGUE OF CHURCH PLANS.

The convention at Indianapolis recommended that the Board of Church Extension get out a Catalogue of Church Plans, varying in price from a $500 chapel upwards. In the January-March issue of Business in Christianity a catalogue consisting of 72 strictly up-to-date church and chapel designs was published by the board. The advertisements secured will pay for the extra expense of publication. This catalogue is strictly up-to-date, is gotten out by the best church architect in the country and is already beginning to meet a long-felt want. The catalogue can be secured by a remittance of ten cents upon application to the board at Kansas City.

The board is still seeking to carry out the recommendation of the convention at Indianapolis. $20,000 was asked from the churches this year. This amount was apportioned among the churches. 85 per cent. of the churches that have been heard from sent in their apportionments. However, we still lack $13,557.66 of reaching the $20,000 on the 30th of September. Collections are still coming in and we trust the churches will have commendable pride in helping to reach this amount.

INDIANA.

Fowler, Oct. 3.—I am holding a meeting at Bethany Chapel, nine miles east of here with 11 accessions so far. Large audiences and a great interest. I baptized six young men yesterday and took the confession of four more. A great day and a great victory for Christ.—LEE TINSLEY.

Vincennes, Oct. 4.—I closed a meeting in Davis County, Oct. 2, resulting in 22 additions; 17 by confession and baptism.—P. C. CAUBLE.

Wabash, Oct. 5.—One addition last Sunday; two the Sunday before. My third year begins with good prospects. Old debts incurred before my time are being paid off; nearly $1,800 in the past two years. Better methods and greater faithfulness are promised. Will have several representatives at the Chattanooga Convention.—EARLE WILFLEY.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta, Oct. 3.—Began my eighth year of copartnership here yesterday with three additions at the morning service; 15 added since Aug. 1st, nearly all of whom are by primary obedience. Field enlarging continually and growing whiter and whiter to a glorious harvest. Eighteen added in last three weeks in a tent meeting held by M. F. Harmon, of Alabama, with fair prospect of another organization.—C. P. WILLIAMSON.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Britton, Oct. 3.—Meeting here resulted in 14 additions and the reorganization of church They have been somewhat belligerant in the past, but all seems to promise peace. I go to Wellington, Kan., to attend state convention this week.—ARTHUR W. JONES.

ARKANSAS.

Fayeteville, Oct. 4.—There were six additions to the First Church last Sunday; one by letter and five conversions.—N. M. RAGLAND.

Arkadelphia, Oct. 4.—Four additions here last Lordsday; three by statement and one by baptism.—E. S. ALLHANDS.

IOWA.

Sheldon, Oct. 4.—Our meetings closed with 28 additions, the result of the four weeks' effort. Baptisms, 12; by primary obedience, nine; from the sects, 13; by renewal, two; males, four; females, 24; parents, 10; adults, 23. Could we have held Bro. Abberley a week or 10 days more I believe a great victory might have been won over the sinners and sects, but much good seed was sown by the able preaching. Prof. Sweetman conducted the singing services.—PARSON MOWRY.

ILLINOIS.

Stanford, October 7.—Victor W. Dorris, of Georgetown, Ky., this evening closed what is probably the best meeting Stanford has ever enjoyed. The best that can be said is that he knows the Book, loves the truth and preaches Jesus. This church loves God and hates sectarianism more because of his preaching. Fifteen baptisms and five added otherwise; one confession where baptism was prevented by bigoted parents.—MELVIN MENGES.

Saybrook, October 8.—Meeting at Fairview closed last night; result: 98 confessions, seven reclaimed and five letters from other churches. This is the result of work done in this church by John H. Swift.

KANSAS.

Abilene, Oct. 3.—One reclaimed here yesterday. I close my work here and go to California to locate for my wife's health by advice of her physicians.—N. B. MCGHEE.

KENTUCKY.

Grayson, October 7.—Please report four additions to the church in Carter County since last report. Work prospers.—E. P. GROW.

Hebron, October 8.—Am in a meeting with the old church at Florence. Baptized four yesterday. Next meeting will begin at Bullittsville, Oct. 17.—GEO. W. WATKINS.

MISSOURI.

Center, Sept. 8.—One addition here since last report; a man over 60 years old. Am now in a meeting here with some interest.—W. D. MCCULLEY.

Belton, Oct. 8.—Updike-Easton meeting closed here with 62 added. Rain and sickness hindered the first 10 days. Meeting satisfactory to all and church in good condition.—L. H. OTTO.

Tarkio, October 3.—Closed a three weeks' meeting in this place last night; 36 additions, 6 additions last day. Bro. Hunt, the pastor, is doing a good work here. I go from here to Stanford, Ky.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Civil Bend Oct. 5.—We have just closed a very interesting meeting at Old Union, Daviess County, with four baptisms and the brethren aroused to duty. We also report a new organization of about 25 members, all of which are reliable farmers of the true type. We extend an invitation to our preaching brethren to give us a call at any time they chance to pass this way. The writer is employed here another year one-fourth time.—Z. MITCHELL.

Springfield, Oct. 5.—I have just closed another protracted meeting at Bruner. There were 23 additions; 13 by confession and baptism, 9 by relation and one from the Methodists. There were three additions by baptism in my August meeting that were not reported, making 26 in all.—E. P. TRABUE, General Evangelist.

St. Louis, Oct. 10.—At our preachers' meeting, on last Monday, F. O. Fannon reported 13 additions at the First Church since last report, S. B. Moore one baptism at Compton Heights and Dr. Dungan four baptisms at Mt. Cabanne.

The Temple of Song.

MRS. ALICE ROBINSON.

Like a pearl in the midst of the city of light,
Like a shining pearl stands a temple white,
By the side of the mystic, running river,
That rolls down the golden height forever.
Thro' its aisles a softened radiance glows,
Thro' its air a flowery perfume blows,
And solemnly, gladly, all day long,
Its arches ring to the service of song.

On the height above the banners unfurl,
And ensigns are waving o'er gates of pearl,
And the wonderful light is that alone
Which in radiance shines from the great white throne.
There worshipers throng the golden street,
And messengers hasten with willing feet,
And ever the earnestly hurrying throng
Near the music that swells from the temple of song.

In the starlit silence when earth is at rest,
Molding her millions asleep on her breast,
The spirit leans out with an ecstasy strong
To catch the far notes of the angelic throng.
Down from afar—half felt and half heard—
Like the song of the stars or a paradise bird,
Solemnly sweet and grandly strong
The organ tones roll thro' the service of song.

JESUS ON TRIAL.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

What shall I do with Jesus which is called Christ?—Matt. 27:22.

"Hello, Tom! What's the matter?"

Tom Mayhew looked up to behold the familiar face of his friend, Frank Collins, whom he would have passed without seeing in his abstraction.

"What's the matter," he repeated absently, and then asked:

"Did you know, Frank, that Harry Loomis died last night?"

"No; did he?"

Tom nodded, then spoke seriously—more seriously than Frank had ever heard him speak before:

"And do you know, Frank, I was just thinking—well, you know, it might have been some one of the rest of us," and he shuddered at the thought.

"That is true," replied Frank, "but Harry's friends have this consolation, he was prepared."

"Which is more than can be said of some of the rest of us—myself, for instance. Somehow it has brought the thought mighty close—this death—and I was thinking that if it had been—well—myself, it might have been different, you know."

"Have you seen Harry?"

"I was there all night, have just left, and Frank, it was wonderful how he died; he hadn't the least fear. And his folks, although grieving because of their loss, actually seem almost to rejoice for his sake. Surely, there must be something in religion if it can rob death of its terrors."

Frank now put his arm round the shoulders of his friend and turned to walk with him. So often he had tried to say a word to him on this subject, but as often Tom had evaded it; he had almost given up the effort, but now the longed-for opportunity had come.

"Rest assured, Tom, there is something in religion. Christians do have a hope that takes away the terrors of death. They know that it is but a change from this material body to one that is suited to the spiritual state. And this 'king of terrors' that men call death is really a friend to those who are ready to meet it. Harry's relatives know that in his case 'to die is gain.'"

"It must be a blessed thing to be a Christian, and such things as death, especially when it comes to one whom I know, makes me wish to be one myself, only I am not yet quite ready."

"You believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and want to be a Christian, and are yet not ready?"

"And yet not ready," replied Tom. "When I become a Christian I want to be prepared to withdraw from all things worldly. I want be ready to retire from business and from all contact with the ungodly. I want to be prepared to live a purely spiritual life, far above all public matters."

"And are these your reasons? Is it possible, Tom, that you actually have such ideas of a Christian life? Why, my friend, that would be the old morbid sort of Christianity that has long ago gone out of fashion because of impracticability. The spirit of true Christianity is not the sort that causes one to hold himself aloof from all public affairs. Of all people, the Christian should be the most interested in such things, for of necessity these matters affect the welfare of the human race. As to contact with the ungodly, we are told that it is not the whole that need a physician, but they that are sick. Christ was not above eating with sinners, and if Christians are to let their light shine, it should certainly shine in the dark places of earth, where it will do the most good. And as to business Christianity is, in itself, a business, and a business that will harmonize with any other that is honorable and legitimate. When we hear a man say that he cannot harmonize Christianity with business, then may we know that there is something wrong with that man's calling. If we would but take our Christianity with us in to our regular, every-day affairs it could not but have its influence. Then would we be less prone to crush our brother in our hurry to get rich, then would we be more humane in the treatment of those who toil for us and more generous in remunerating such toiling ones. In fact, we cannot afford to bar out our religion from every-day affairs, for our soul must starve without the daily bread that God alone can give."

"But," argued Tom, "one must give up so many pleasures to become a Christian. I am too young yet to give up all the pleasures of life."

"Pleasures of life!" exclaimed Frank. "Why, my friend, such pleasures as you have in mind, are as naught compared with the joy of the Christian; the joy that passeth all understanding; that endureth forever; that satisfieth the soul. Surely, the Christian, because of the hope he has within him, has the right to be the happiest of all creatures. On the other hand, I ask you to answer me honestly. Do you not in the midst of your so-called pleasures, have everywhere and all the time a consciousness of the soul unsatisfied? the life unfilled, incomplete?"

"It is true!" Tom answered. "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." And his friend replied:

"Would to God that it were not only almost, but altogether. 'Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him and will sup with him and he with me,' said Jesus in his message to the church at Laodicea. But, although primarily addressed to a lukewarm church, it is likewise a message to every impenitent heart, from which Christ is barred by disobedience. 'Behold, I stand at the door and knock.' How ready he is to enter! How lovingly he asks admission! But it is necessary that we respond to this knocking. We are free moral agents, and Christ will not thrust himself into any heart if its possessor is unwilling; but, 'It any man hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him and sup with him and he with me.' He wants to be our Friend; to have mutual fellowship with us. He is knocking at the door of your heart to-day, Tom. Ask of yourself the question that Pilate put to the accusers of the sinless Son of God: 'What shall I do with Jesus?' Jesus is still on trial. The great question before the world to-day is, 'What shall I do with Jesus which is called Christ?' We can not preserve a neutral ground concerning this question. The mere washing of our hands will not free us from the responsibility of decision. We cannot say, 'I find no fault in him,' and yet shrink from his service without casting our influence with his enemies. He that is not for him is against him. We are crucifying him anew each time we hear the still small voice and the gentle knock, and yet refuse to receive him and to yield loving and loyal obedience to his commandments."

Frank and Tom had now reached the home of the latter; after a fervent handclasp Frank would have passed on, but his friend detained him:

"Come up to my room, Frank, I want you to pray."

A moment later they knelt reverently and Frank approached the throne of grace in earnest prayer:

"O, God, thou gracious Giver of all good gifts, we do thank thee for the unspeakable gift of thy Son, who gave himself a ransom for our sins; and who is now standing at the door of our hearts, seeking admission. O, may we listen to thy gentle voice, pleading with us so tenderly. And may we, through the memory of all thy goodness to us, open our hearts and no longer refuse entrance to thy sinless Son who seeks such entrance, that he may establish a right relation with us, that through such relation we may be transformed into his own image. Grant, O, God, that we may enthrone him in our hearts, thereby answering most fittingly the question that has to do with each soul: 'What shall I do with Jesus?' For thy name's sake. Amen!"

St. Louis, Mo.

"Inasmuch."

She had once been beautiful and pure. Now she was ugly and steeped in sin. Reeling across the waiting room, she fell in a senseless heap in the entrance. There were plenty of people near—elegantly dressed young ladies, gallant young men, loving mothers, so-called Sisters of Charity, and many others representing the easier walks of life, but not one extended a helping hand. Even the large-bodied colored woman whose function it was to look after the comfort of lady patrons of the various railroads centering there, straitened herself up to her full height and, with a curl of the lip, touched a bell and summoned a policeman. A big, burly fellow, club in hand, soon made his appearance, and the poor unfortunate was loaded into the patrol wagon, and, amidst the jeers of the ever-present small boy, the significant glances of the idler, and the scornful looks of society generally, driven roughly to jail. None followed, for none cared. The young ladies sauntered off home, white parasols in hand. The young men sauntered along. Mothers met their incoming friends, or bade them good-bye with many a loving kiss. The tall man with the Prince Albert coat, white tie and flowing burnsides took the train for his appointment, earnestly meditating upon the text he had chosen for his Sunday morning sermon, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."

But better far it is to speak
One simple word which now and then Shall waken their free nature in the weak
And friendless sons of men.

Advance To Full Growth.

C. H. WETHERBE.

In Heb. 6:1, R. V., are these words: "Wherefore, let us cease to speak of the first principles of Christ and press on unto perfection." A marginal note renders the word "perfection" thus: "Full growth." The latter part of the quoted verse, as amended by the margin, would read: "Press on unto full growth." There is no doubt that this is the apostle's precise thought. The meaning of the word "perfection," in this instance at least, is evidently that of fullness of growth in Christ. In the last verse of the preceding chapter Paul says, according to the revised version, that "solid food is for full-grown men, even those who, by reason of their senses, exercise to discern good and evil." Here the word "full-grown" is rendered in the margin "perfect," which indicates that, in the apostle's mind, the two words are, in this connection, the same in meaning. He would say that the full-grown Christian is a perfect Christian; he is completely rounded out; he is fully, perfectly developed. We need to bear in mind the spiritual condition of the Hebrew Christians at the time that Paul was writing this epistle. They were mere babes in Christ; at least many of them were. There was no need of their being such at that time, for Paul says: "For when, by reason of the time, ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God." They were stunted spiritual babes, far from being in the perfection of Christian manhood, and the apostle reprimanded them for being in such a state. In substance he said to them: Get out of your imperfect, baby condition and press on unto perfect manhood. Press quickly on unto full-grown men and women in Christ. This threw the burden of responsibility on each Christian. It was a perfection with which each had much to do. It was not a "second work of grace," to be performed by God, but a steady work for each to do for himself. Simply to pray for perfection was not enough. A child cannot at once become a man by prayer, however earnestly it might pray. There must be appropriate exercise and proper food and time for growth. Nor can a young babe in Christ become a full-grown man in Christ in an instant; but he can hasten fast toward that state; he can and should "press on" unto this most desirable condition. Are you still a Christian baby?

Alice Cary.

MARY E. WARE.

Sweet Alice Cary! Her body was too frail for her intellect and her intellect was never strong enough to express the fine emotions that vibrated through her soul. Is there anything more pathetic than to feel the throes of great emotions and yet not to have the power to express them?

Not long since, during a trolley party, in Cincinnati, one of the company pointed northward and said, "The home of Alice and Phœbe Cary lies about one mile from here."

Little dreamed they, in their girlhood, that their neighboring town would grow until it would one day reach their farmhouse door! When that day comes, Cincinnati will surely do herself the honor of buying it and converting it into "Cary Park."

As you look at that grand old forest, with its magnificent trees that seem almost possessed with souls, you do not wonder at its being the scene of her most beautiful poem—"Pictures of Memory."

Nothing that she has written more truly reveals her sweet, shy self, her love of nature, and her capacity for sorrow. The poem is full of the pathos that tinged everything that she wrote.

She recalls the birds, the flowers, the butterflies and the sweet, affectionate companionship of her brother during their childhood. It begins in this simple way:

"I once had a little brother
With eyes that were dark and deep.
In the lap of that olden forest
He lieth in peace asleep."

Her memories of this brother are tender and beautiful. In her "Order for a Picture," which she thought her best poem, he is the hero, though the family history is somewhat disguised.

Early in the 50's she and Phœbe went East, with the intention of locating themselves where they could earn their livelihood with their pens. After many visits and inquiries, New York was selected.

GOSPEL MELODIES

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

First Lines of Some of the Best Songs in this Excellent Book

Praise Him! Praise Him!
I love to steal awhile away.
Delay not, Delay not.
Softly and tenderly.
If God has riches given you.
Oh, I want to be still nearer.
Where the billows roll the highest.
There is a land beyond somewhere.
Oh, would to me were only given.
The Bible reveals a glorious land.
The voice of the Savior says come.
The path is set with many a thorn.
Oh, the love of God to me.
List to the song of the reapers.
Night with ebon pinion.
In the presence of our God we meet again.
Preaching Jesus on the way.
I ask not earthly treasure.
Oh, bless the Lord, Oh my soul.
There'll be room enough in heaven.
I am going to Jesus.
Broad is the road that leads to death.
There is a home, a beautiful home.
Attend young friends while I relate.
Peacefully lay her down to rest.
In thy name, Oh, Lord, assembling.
Toiling for Jesus day by day.
How sweet 'tis to know.
When our earthly life is ended.
Just beyond the shad'wy valley.
The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide
Far beyond the rolling Jordan.
Lead me gently home, Father.
How firm a foundation.
Go on, you pilgrims.
Oh, how lovely! (Anthem.)
List to the voice of the Savior.
In our Father's home above.
There is one thought that cheers my way.
Make channels for the streams of love.
I've found a friend in Jesus.
It is the hour of prayer.
When storm-clouds arise in the sky.
I wonder if any poor sinner will come.
Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus.
See the ranks of sin approaching.
A thousand lords had gathered in the palace of Belshazzar.
Glory and praise to the Lord who died for me.
See! on the cross, the Savior bleeds.
There's a city of light 'mid the stars, we are told.
Just over the river are palaces grand.
Christians, are you growing weary?
There is a rock in a weary land.
O pilgrims, look forward to glory.
When the day is full of gladness.
There is a precious fountain.
Beyond the golden sunset sky.
Do you know a soul that's fainting?
Yes, we have a friend in Jesus.
Come now and let us reason.
When the waves are rolling high.
There is a house not made with hands.
Gone from our home.
I am on my journey to Canaan's happy land.
In thy temple, Lord, we gather.
Christ is knocking at my sad heart.
Let me sing the old song o'er again.
I will tell you an old simple story.
I'll rejoice in the love of Jesus.
There's a beautiful land far beyond the sky.
There's a hand ever ready to lift up all the fallen.
All for Jesus, all for Jesus.
There's a city that is far, far away.
When the trump of God shall sound.
Where are the ones we love fondly?
Teach me thy way.
God of our salvation.
Oh, there is joy in believing.
Praise Him, praise the name of God most high. (Anthem.)
Great is the Lord. (Anthem.)
One sweetly solemn thought.
Make a joyful noise unto the Lord. (Anthem.)
Hear the call to labor for the Lord.
Savior while my heart is tender.
Of the old time I'm thinking.
Twilight is stealing.
At home or away, in the alley or street.
Mother, tell me of the angels.

Their open, frank and ingenuous ways appealed to older and more experienced people. Publishers became interested in them, men of letters like Whittier and Greeley, aided them with their advice and their influence.

One of the most beautiful metrical tributes in our language is Whittier's "Singers." In this he says of Alice Cary—

"The crown of pain that all must wear, Too early pressed her midnight hair."

and again:

"All felt that behind the singer stood
A sweet and gracious womanhood."

Their modest home on Twentieth Street, their informal Sunday evening teas and their scholarly guests all suggest the ideal that Wordsworth had in mind when he spoke of "plain living and high thinking."

A great shock came to her loyal, trusting heart before she left her Western home. A man of wealth, culture and college education came into her neighborhood on business. He was surprised to find such a lovely, gifted young woman amid such plain surroundings. His surprise deepened into interest, and that into affection.

After they became engaged he returned to his Eastern home to make ready for their marriage. It is the same old story that the novelist uses so often, because it is so true to human nature. A proud, rich family insisted that he give up his rustic sweetheart, and a weak man yielded to their influence.

In her quiet way she once said to an intimate friend: "I waited for one who never came back. Yet I believed he would come till I read in the paper of his marriage to another."

Strange, strange what destinies are woven by the Fates for some of the truest, purest, and noblest of mortals! Yet compensation is always the golden thread woven in the fabric of their lives.

The love that was denied Alice Cary by one individual was given to her a thousand, thousand times over by her personal friends and her devoted readers. The grace, beauty and harmony which she would have carried into her own home have been scattered abroad to make all homes, where the music of her poetry has been heard, more harmonious.

She was greatly interested in Dr. Deems and his work. When told that Commodore Vanderbilt had given him Mercer Street church she wept for joy.

She was sick at the time and tried so hard to get well enough to attend the first service. It was not to be. When she did go, it was on her bier.

Her death, like that of Frances Willard, bowed the whole nation in grief.

"The clear blue eye, the tender smile,
The sovereign sweetness, the gentle grace,
The woman's soul and the angel's face" had, at last, found their resting-place.

He Careth for Me.

IDA B. DAVISON.

In life's brightest moments, when all is at rest,
And all things about me seem happy and blest;
In nature about me, God's presence I see;
For I am his child and he careth for me.

When dark is my pathway and over my soul
The dark sea of sorrow, in great billows roll,
Then close to my Savior I ever would flee;
For, oh, blessed thought! He careth for me.

Dear Lord, I entreat thee, that close by thy side
I ever may keep, whatever betide.
In joy or in sorrow, thine ever I'd be,
For thou art my Father and carest for me.

Curious Wedding Ceremonies.

In different ages and nations there has always been a wide variety in marriage customs. But all these marriage ceremonies are capable of a threefold division: 1. Marriage by capture; 2. Marriage as a religious ceremony; 3. Civil marriage.

In many lands it seems to be a tradition or form of etiquette that no woman should willingly give herself to any man. This notion prevails among those barbarous or semi-civilized peoples where the lot of woman is peculiarly one of hardship. It is concluded that a refusal must inevitably meet an offer of marriage, and as the desired bride can on no account permit herself to marry peaceably, her lover captures her.

The fashion of wife-capture, based on the theory of woman's natural aversion to marriage, has been in many countries followed as a historic method, or commemorative of some great event in the national history, long after the original reason for the capture passed out of existence. The story of the capture of the Sabine women by the Roman bachelors is well known to us all; also the capture of the Shiloh women by the wifeless Benjaminites. The Greek myth of the Centaurs, who seized the daughters of the Lapithæ, is probably a poetic account of the conflict of two early barbarous races, where the men of one tribe stole for wives the daughters of the other tribe—the homo-equine nature of the Centaur merely expressing some Scythic race of horsemen. Among the Patagonians, Australians and Bedouins marriage is still by capture. In many cases the marriage capture is only a form, the contract of marriage having been carefully arranged. The Greeks and Romans pretended to capture their brides after all the preliminaries, especially the financial contracts, had been settled. The practice of lifting a bride across the threshold of her husband's home is a remnant of the capture plan.

In Australia the stealing or capture of wives is a fact attended by bloodshed and cruelty among many of the native tribes. If the poor girl is considered a beauty, she is often wounded or nearly killed in the strife of her suitors, and a murder or two of rivals in the melee is not uncommon.

Among the Circassians the bride, duly appareled and waiting, is noisily stolen by night—after the wedding contract is signed and the dowry paid! In Khurdistan the bride is captured in the daytime, her young friends making a furious defense of her. The more biting, screaming, slapping, scratching, kicking and stone-throwing that is done by the damsels the finer is the style of the affair! Among the African tribes the bride is generally carried off forcibly, even when the respective families have amicably exchanged wedding gifts some days previous to the seizure. Among almost all Tartar, Slavic and Scandinavian races marriage has been until modern times, or is now, by capture; as, for instance, among Mongols, the Caucasus tribes, the Kalmucks, Kirghiz, and anciently in Poland, Sweden, Finland and Muscovy. Two centuries ago in Prussia the young man always stole his wife, his father having straitly charged him whom to capture. This sapient parent then went to the maiden's sire and begged that his dear boy might be allowed to keep his booty. The parents signed the contract, and a grand wedding followed.

We are told that in Ireland, even in 1802, "marriage was but a lame exploit" in the hilly counties unless the groom showed himself of spirit sufficient to run away with his bride. This gave the groom fine opportunity for the national delight of "quietly arguing the matter with sticks."

In the rural districts of Scotland, England and Wales there are retained wedding customs which are plainly relics of old Celtic fashions of bride-capture.

In nearly all civilized countries marriage is accompanied by religious forms. In Protestant lands marriage is regarded as a civil contract, made in the presence of competent witnesses, and is entirely valid even if unaccompanied by religious ceremonies—as, for instance, marriage by a magistrate. It is equally valid if performed by an accredited minister of any church. In some sections of the country ministers must be licensed by the state before they can perform marriage ceremonies; in other states the groom must exhibit to the parson a license, obtained from an appointed authority, before he can be married.

In Roman Catholic countries marriage is invested with the sanctity of a strictly religious ceremonial. The Roman Church esteems marriage a sacrament, and does not approve of the intermeddling of civil authority with the rite. This has given rise to much conflict in Italy and France, the state insisting upon a civil ceremony before a magistrate, without which the bridal is illegal and the children are illegitimate. The state in these cases is quite indifferent to the question of a religious ceremony before or after the civil contract. During the Revolution in France religious ceremonies at espousals were forbidden, and only purely civil marriages were legal. In Germany a civil marriage is required without reference to the religious celebration.

Among the early Christians marriage was esteemed as a civil contract, the chief ceremony being the leading of the bride into her new home in the presence of witnesses. Gradually, to prevent disorders, the betrothal and marriage were required to be made in church in the presence of a priest. Many of the wedding ceremonies of the Christian church were developed out of the customs of the Greeks and Romans, as the use of the ring, the making of vows and the priestly benediction. In the Roman Church marriage-candles are the successors of the nuptial torches of the Latins; the holy water is the ancient aqua lustrate, the marriage-mass takes the place of the lamb, sacrificed by the Latin pontiff. In the year 300 A. D. the church began to make laws in regard to marriage.

In the Hebrew nation the betrothal was as binding as the marriage, and the woman was a "betrothed or espoused wife" until she became by the later ceremony "a married wife." Thus the Virgin Mary was Joseph's "espoused wife." For the wedding as great splendor of dress as was possible to the partiess was en regle. The "friend of the bridegroom" arranged all things in his behalf. The groom went after dark to claim his bride. He was accompanied by torches, music and troops of friends. The parents with much pomp delivered the maid to her lover, and her train of friends joining the procession of his attendants, they set out, walking or riding, to the future home, the pair going under a canopy while fruits, nuts, flowers, perfumes, money, confections were strewn in their way. Songs and instrumental music accompanied the procession. A rich groom gave robes to all his guests. The feast lasted sometimes 14 days, being longer for a maid than for a widow.

A modern Jewish wedding is famous for its splendors. Lavish gifts are made. For the ceremony the bride and groom stand under a canopy, upon a special square of carpet called a taleth. On the taleth stand also the parents and the rabbi. The canopy is of crimson velvet, belongs to the synagogue, and is brought and returned by the servants of the synagogue. The guests hold the corners of the canopy during the ceremony. The drinking of a glass of wine and the breaking of the glass yet remain part of the Jewish nuptial ceremony.

An ancient Greek marriage was begun by betrothal, dowry and bridal gifts. Then sacrifices were made to Pollux, Hera, Artemis and the Fates. To the latter the bride gave a lock of her hair. The ceremony was at a temple, and the bridal pair were crowned with ivy. After nightfall the bride was placed in a chariot drawn by oxen and carried to her husband's home, where youths and maids met her with torches and wedding hymns.

Among the Latins augury for the marriage was first made. Then the bride's hair was rolled a la Diana, her robe was white wool with a purple border and a girdle of white wool; her wreath was of verbena, her veil yellow, her shoulders covered with a cloak. The bridal pair stood upon a sheepskin at the house door. A woman dressed as Juno Pronuba stood by the bride, the vestal virgins near at hand held oil, cakes, salt, wine. Ten witnesses were required; the bride held three ears of wheat. The friends of the groom lifted the bride over her husband's threshold, and her husband presented her with vases of fire and water. When she had touched these he gave her a kiss and the household keys, thus investing her with domestic authority.—Julia McNair Wright, in the Voice.

STARVING
in the Midst of Plenty.

That's what people with poor digestion are doing every day. They have no appetite, or if they do have an appetite and eat what they require, it does them no good, because the stomach does not digest it, and the fermenting mass of food becomes a source of disease, of headache, sleeplessness, languor and the thousand and one symptoms of disordered digestion. Mr. Judson A. Stanion, the great Church and Sunday-school worker, and president Christian Endeavor Union, St. Louis, Mo., says:

"I have had to be extremely careful what I ate. Many things were indigestible, and after a hearty dinner I could scarcely keep awake. I never have been sick in bed, but have had a great deal of inconvenience from indigestion. Since I learned of the merits of Stuart's Tablets I keep them in my desk or carry them in my pocket, and find that I can eat anything at all without discomfort. They were recommended to me by a friend who is enthusiastic in their praise. I cannot afford to be drowsy after lunch, and find these tablets just the thing to assist digestion and keep all my faculties wide-awake." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets promptly relieve and cure all forms of indigestion. They have done it in thousands of cases and will do it in yours. The reason is simple. They digest the food whether the stomach works or not, and that's the whole secret. At all druggists, 50 cents a box. For book on stomach diseases giving valuable advice, address F. A. A YOUNG MAN'S VISION.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

Far and away the most important of the prophets whose life story has been preserved to us is Isaiah. When the brilliant reign of Uzziah (Azariah) came to its close in 737, B. C., he was a young man living in Jerusalem, educated, moving in high social circles, admitted freely to the court, perhaps not distantly related to the royal family. He had no thought of being a prophet, did not belong to the prophetic guild, had been given no training to prepare him for such a ministry. But the call of God came to him and he began to preach the doctrine of the holiness and righteousness of God and the duty of the nation. Years passed and the people had given but little heed. They did not like to be reproved for following their own devices, and moreover they found themselves prosperous and felt no need to change their conduct at the voice of one who so constantly reproved. At last they demanded his authority for preaching as he did, just as Amaziah, of Bethel, had done when Amos preached there; just as the Scribes and Pharisees were to do when Jesus gave them disquiet regarding their own influence centuries later. What right had Isaiah to preach as he was doing? Who gave him authority to rebuke as he did? Then at last the prophet opens the door into an inner chamber of his own soul and permits them to see the origin of his message. While, therefore, this is not the first of his discourses to be given utterance, it was certainly the earliest of prophetic experiences, and constituted his call to service.

The description is graphic. In the death-year of King Uzziah the prophet, who was no prophet at that time, says he saw, either in a vision of the night or in a day-time vision what seemed an epiphany in the temple or palace. At the further end of the hall appeared the divine form, seated upon a lofty throne, the skirts of his mantle filling the forecourt. On either side appeared a group of shining attendants, each having six wings. With two he shielded his eyes from the intolerable brightness of the divine presence; with two he covered his person and with two he moved. The two divisions of this antiphonal choir were chanting responsively the Trisagion, ascribing praise and glory to God, and so mighty were the voices of the angelic singers that the very pillars of the court trembled as the song rose, while the incense ascending from the golden altar in front was gradually filling the house with its heavy perfume.

It was the vision of the glory of God, and its effect was most singular upon the young man. Taught to believe that no one could see God and live, he became all at once conscious of his imperfections. He who had lived the happy, careless life of a courtier felt the first profound conviction of sin. The vision of the perfect life had melted into a vision of his own utter unworthiness to stand in its presence. Nor does the consciousness of sin come otherwise. Men are not often scolded into virtue. But when they are pointed to the life of God in Jesus Christ they become conscious of their own utter imperfection before him. Isaiah cried out in self-abasement, "I am a man of unclean speech and I dwell among such a people; I shall instantly perish, for I have seen Jehovah." But the vision of sin melted into a vision of forgiveness as one of the seraphim came to signify by the touch of the living coal that his sin was cleansed. Nor does any soul ever cry in vain to God. The whole message of the gospel is one of forgiveness and love. God only wants to pardon, but he cannot pardon till the soul is ready.

And now the young man is thrilling with the joy of a great deliverance. Life itself will be but a small compensation to God for such an experience as this. At that moment a question is asked by the divine voice. The nation of Israel is stubborn and disobedient. There is no promise of repentance. Yet new efforts must be made. Who will go and proclaim God's will? Who will seek to turn the sinning people to righteousness? Among the angels there is no response. No one seeks so ungracious a task. But Isaiah has heard and with all the enthusiasm of a soul in which the vision of forgiveness has melted into a vision of service he cries, "Here am I, send me."

This is the genesis of all true service. God has as much need of prophets to-day as then. They are not called to the same service, but it is as important. They are not called in the same way, but after all their experience is the same. No one is prepared to serve God who has not passed through just the process here described in the life of Isaiah. There must be the vision of God, beheld in the face of Jesus Christ, and understood sufficiently to make all life beside seem paltry and worthless without that divine possession—only such a vision of God can bring an adequate conception of the awfulness of sin. Then when out of this darkness the soul has emerged into the light of forgiveness through the power of the gospel, the first and growing desire will be to render a worthy service to God—any ministry will then seem worthy of all effort. To find oneself without the motive to service is to be aware of a flaw somewhere in the process of our salvation.

The closing verses of the chapter refer to the divine warning to Isaiah, that though he should preach the people would not be willing to listen. He tells the nation that he had been warned of their stubbornness, and he tells it as though it had been actually a part of his work to make them so. But this is only to heighten the effect of his statement that their attitude is no surprise to him, and that its inevitable consequence is going to be the almost total distinction of the nation, with the survival of but a remnant. But this remnant is the hope of the future. It was a hard message, but needed for the times. From the day of this inaugural vision to the close of Isaiah's career was more than forty years of constant service as a prophet.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

A single event may turn the tide of a life into an entirely new channel. The man who has never seen God spiritually will be able to bear no message for him. The service of man is greater than that of angels. The anthem of every life should be ascription of praise to God. We shall never greatly prize our salvation unless we realize the terrible nature of sin, from which we have been saved. God is more ready to forgive than we are to request it. The word of every truly converted soul is, "Here am I, send me." When it is only "Here am I send him," we may know there is some imperfection in our gratitude. When the gospel is refused the heart grows harder and more difficult to reach again. There is always a remnant of righteousness left as the hope of the future.

HELPFULNESS.

(Ex. 17:8-13; Gal. 6:1-5.)

It takes sometimes but a very small matter to help one very far along upon his way. Perhaps this is because it takes such a very small matter to hinder one a great deal upon his way. One is very much discouraged sometimes by a very small trifle. Perhaps we get up in the morning and within the first hour of the day something goes awry—we scarcely know what it is. A whole day is ruined for us because of that mishap. Again, on the other hand, it often happens within the early moments of the day some light matter occurs which we could not lay our finger upon or analyze, which lightens our spirits throughout the livelong day. We are like swimmers in the water. A very small thing will help; a very small obstacle will hinder. How careful ought to be our bearing towards those about us; for it may be a single word, or a single look, a gesture, a frown or a smile will affect a whole day in a lifetime for some one with whom we are thrown in contact. We should be very careful to show the right side of our natures to the world, and the right side is the bright side. Express packages come marked, "Right side up." Upon every life should be stamped the label, "Bright side up." Let us keep the darkness hidden away as much as possible, and let us show the better side, which is forever the brighter side of our lives, to others. Only to our very intimates should we dare to show the darker, sadder phases of our lives, and even to them not in such a way as to cloud their lives.

Moreover, the mutual character of helpfulness is one of the striking facts about it. We are dependent upon each other. We are like shocks of grain where each bundle helps support the rest. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ," said an apostle who felt very keenly his fellowship with man. "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault"—what a tender and beautiful word is that word, "brethren!" Paul uses it so frequently, showing that he appreciates the mutual element in our lives.

Who are those, then, whom we can help by the way? Naturally, first of all, those with whom we are most closely associated, our home ones. It is so easy to make life bright and sweet for those about us, and it is so easy to make it hard and dreary. One bright, cheerful talker at a home table, one unselfish, attentive, thoughtful disposition in a home circle can brighten a whole family's life. But alas! such a one is too often wanting about the fireside and at the breakfast table. Each Christian Endeavorer should resolve from now on to make his life a helpful life in the home circle.

We can be helpful, also, to those whom we are associated with in business life or in the school or on the street. It was said the other day of a business man that he had helped many a young man to a career of usefulness. Few better things could be said of any business man. As J. E. Pounds says, "The only thing you can give a man in this world is a chance; you can not give him an education, you can only give him a chance to get an education." So among the highest and best gifts that any one can place in the way of a young man is a chance. Some men are helpful to all whom their lives touch—even to agents, book agents, sewing machine agents. Agents are human beings, and it is possible to be courteous, and kind, and helpful even to them. Poor agents! It is very seldom, no doubt, that they get a smile or a kind word. In our strict Endeavor work there are many who need our help; the president, the corresponding secretary, the chairman of the committee to which we belong—how much these would appreciate a volunteer offer of your service, fellow-Endeavorers. And the pastor, who can say how his heart is cheered by an occasional, really sincere and honest attempt to help him in his work. Indeed, who is there about us who does not need our help? The writer once came under the influence of a certain one's life whose constant aim it seemed to be to seek some one who needed help, even in very small affairs, and to bestow that assistance; and the fragrance of that memory has not departed to this day, but will live throughout the years of memory.

"Organic Evolution Considered."

In writing of the volume of Professor A. Fairhurst on the subject of "Organic Evolution," I dare not undertake to speak of the question considered on its merits. Want of knowledge has more than once occasioned timidity.

The book, however, leaves an impression, and I may at least tell of that. The author has undoubtedly studied deeply the question in hand. There is no fumbling, uncertain touch. His tread is that of a man who knows that he has feet, unlike Melancthon, of whom Luther said, "He is trying to walk on eggs without crushing them." I like an author who has a grip and who can say in good English, "This is what I mean."

And yet, in Professor Fairhurst's book there is the utmost courtesy and fairness in dealing with those who hold an opposite view. There is no fierce denunciation, no attempt to drive his opponent out of court by the use of hard names—infidel, heretic and the like. The spirit of the book is altogether admirable.

One need not read very far to recognize the method of the teacher in this production. The style is simple; the plain facts, without ornamentation, are stated; the argument is made and the reader is left to draw his conclusions, and that, too, without any penalty attached, should the said reader happen to think that the conclusion is unsound. When our author chooses, he can take a flight into the empyrean, but for the most part he prefers the terra firma of ergis.

The book is a storehouse of information and will repay the careful perusal of any earnest student. I am glad that in the reading of these pages on a scientific subjec, the reader will receive no such solar plexus blow as meets him in Herbert Spencer's famous definition of evolution—"A charge from an indefinite incoherent homogeneity to a definite coherent heterogeneity through continuous differentiations and integrations"—concerning which, to quote from Drummond, the Contemporary Reviewer remarked that "the universe may well have heard a sigh of relief when, through the cerebration of an eminent thinker, it had been delivered of this account of itself." The book of Professor Fairhurst calls for thought, but it does not demand that the brain shall be wrecked in trying to understand it.

I take very great pleasure in commending "Organic Evolution Considered," and wish for it a wide circulation.

E. L. POWELL.

OCTOBER MAGAZINES.

The sensational article in Scribner's for October is an account of the battle of San Juan, by Richard Harding Davis. Mr. Davis is a vigorous writer, and he does not hesitate to relate what he sees or thinks. He believes that this battle was fought without adequate preparation, and that many lives were unnecessarily sacrificed, and does not hesitate to tell why and how it all happened. His criticisms on some of the heads of departments are severe, while his eulogies for the men who fought and won the battle are strong and eloquent. The article is of historic value and the things stated should command the immediate attention of the government.

The leading articles of the Woman's Home Companion for October cover a wide range of thought and research, and the department articles fairly sparkle with their brightness, variety and attractive illustrations. The seasonable cover was designed by Wilcox Smith, and adds greatly to its attractiveness. The poems are of good quality and pleasant to read.

Two of the contribuied articles in the American Monthly Review of Reviews for October deal with the serious lessons of our recent war with Spain. Dr. Carroll Dunham presents a calm and exhaustive survey of the nation's experience of the past six months in its medical and sanitary aspects. He shows where the failures in army administration occurred and what steps should be taken to prevent the recurrence of such costly mistakes. Lieut. John H. Parker, of the Thirteenth Infantry, who commanded the Gatling gun detachment at Santiago, explains from an officer's point of view the nature, cause and bearings of some of the defects revealed in the course of that campaign, and also summarizes the advance in our knowledge of the value of machine guns in battle as compared with heavy artillery.

The Pall Mall for October contains a good selection of articles for the magazine reader. One of the leading articles of this number is a discussion of English and American literary experiences by Mr. William Archer, which will be found of great interest to literary and historic minds. The Pall Mall record for fine illustrations is not broken in this number, neither its selectlon of fiction and poems.

An article commanding interest is that on "Electrical Manufacturing Interests" in the October Chautauquan. The facts it gives concerning the growing uses of electricity and its commercial value are gratifying and reliable, coming from the pen of Thomas Commerford Martin. Equally authoritative is Prof. L. H. Batchelder's scholarly paper on "The Growth of Chemical Science." In the same impression Eugene Parsons reviews "English Colonization in the Western World," and Mary H. Krout writes of "New Zealand and Its Resources."

Frank Leslie's for October is a seasonable, up-to-date number of this popular magazine. Beginning with the next (November) number, Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly will be changed in form and dress. Its price will be reduced to ten cents per copy, one dollar per annum. Mrs. Frank Leslie will direct editorial control of the magazine. The changes proposed will be in the line of development of the popular pictorial and literary features which have characterized it heretofore. At the same time, various novelties will be introduced.

The Treasury of Religious Thought for October, 1898, is an attractive number to a working pastor, as well as to the general Christian reader. Its frontispiece is an excellent portrait of the Rev. Samuel Zane Batten, of the First Baptist Church, Morristown, N. J., who has become widely known by his active connection with the Brotherhood of the Kingdom, the "Kingdom" newspaper, and, more recently, by his able discussion in book form of the problem of Christian brotherhood. Mr. Batten gives a stirring sermon on "The Greatest Change in the World," and a pleasant sketch of his own church, while a short notice of his life is given by Rev. S. S. Merriman, of Trenton. The first illustrated article is a full description and history of "Hawaii: Our New Territory," showing how great reason Christian Americans have for interest in that island possession. There are able sermons by Mr. Moody, and Dr. Burdett Hart; and suggestive outlines of sermons by Rev. Frank M. Ellis, Principal Gerrie, Pres. Patton, Dr. John Clifford, and others. Dr. Robert S. McArthu contributes a fourth of his able discussions • "Bible Difficulties," taking this time "The Destruction of the Canaanites." There is a fresh article on "Northfield and its Convention," by Rev. Dwight M. Pratt. The Rev. Frank J. Mallett discusses "The Financia Problem." Prof. Small gives his review of "Movements Among the Churches," Dr. Hallock gives the "Prayer-meeting Topics." There is a sketch with a portrait of Dr. John Clifford, the London Baptist who has supplied Tremont Temple pulpit during September (one of his sermons there being given in synopsis), and all the minor departments of the magazine are well maintained.

Hair Hints

It is much easier to keep the hair when you have it than it is to restore it when it's lost. If your hair is "coming out" it needs instant attention. The use of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR will promptly stop the hair from falling, and stimulate it to new growth.

"Some years ago my hair began to fall out and I became quite bald. I was advised to try and had used it but a short time when my hair ceased to fall out and a new and vigorous growth made its appearance. My hair is now abundant and glossy."

EDMONDS.

Dr. W. A. Edmonds, well known to our churches in Memphis and in St. Louis, died at the residence of his daughter in Woodford County, Ky., on September 22nd, 1898, in the 77th year of his age. Dr. Edmonds was born in Green County, Ky., July 28th, 1822. He confessed his faith in Christ at the age of 20, and through all the subsequent years he never relinquished his attachment to the church of his choice nor his faith in Christ. He was a physician of prominence in Memphis, Tenn., for 20 years. He moved from that city to St. Louis, and soon occupied a prominent place in the medical profession in this city, being connected with the homeopathic school and a lecturer in their medical college here. He was gifted with the power of graceful speech, and his talks in prayer-meeting and on social occasions were much enjoyed. As a physician he carried sunshine with him into the sick chamber, and was always thoughtful and considerate of his patients. He was a reader of our literature, and was deeply interested in all our general interests. His health failed him while he was a resident of St. Louis, and he went to Kentucky a few years ago, where he was residing at the time of his death. He leaves behind him his daughter and his faithful Christian wife, who mourn the loss of an affectionate father and husband. Mrs. Edmonds was a sister of Mrs. Enos Campbell, who like her is a woman of rare beauty of character. Our tenderest sympathies are extended to both wife and daughter in this their great bereavement. Hundreds, we are sure, will join with us in this expression of Christian love and sympathy. G.

HARRIS.

Addie D. Harris, the beloved wife of D. M. Harris, fell asleep in Jesus at her home in Girard, Kan., Sept. 26, of heart failure, aged 46 years, two months and two days. She leaves to mourn her departure her husband and seven children, all of whom were present except Lauren V., who is in the 20th Regiment Kansas Volunteers at San Francisco. We will meet again. D. M. HARRIS.

HASKIN.

Sister Caroline H. Haskin, widow of Leonard W. Haskin, aged 67, died at the home of her son, Walden L. Haskin, in Granville, N. Y., Sept. 27th. She was born at Pittstown, N. Y.; united with the church at an early age, and was there married in 1850. She has since resided in Battenville, N. Y., Petersburg, Va., Jacksonville, Fla., Quincy, Ill., and Granville, N. Y. She is survived by two sons, Walden L. and LeGrand. Her life was one of devotion to Christ and her chief happiness was in doing good to others. X.

HOUSTON.

Rhoda A. Houston, nee Curtis, was born Mar. 21st, 1852, in Carter County, Tenn. She was married May 9th, 1869 to George Houston. She became the mother of fourteen children; eight boys and six girls. Two boys preceded her across death's stream. Sister Houston united with the Church of Christ in 1868, and was an humble follower of the meek and lowly Savior. She gently fell sleep in Christ Sept. 14th, 1898. She leaves to mourn her departure, besides hosts of friends and relatives, three brothers, three sisters, six daughters, six sons and a fond and affectionate husband, who is also an able preacher of the gospel. On Thursday, Sept. 15th, a 3:30 P. M., the remains were followed by a vast throng to Sparks' cemetery, where interment took place. Elder W. L. Dunlevy conducted the burial services. The funeral was preached on the fourth Sunday in September by the writer, a large concourse of people being present. "She is not dead, but sleepeth." W. C. WILLEY.

Cassville, Mo., Oct. 1, 1898.

McDONALD.

Sister Orpha K. McDonald died of consumption in Denver, Col., where she had been taken by her devoted husband with hope of recovery, Sept. 27, 1898. She was the youngest daughter of the late John and Cordelia Allison, born near Eureka, Ill., June 17, 1872. She obeyed the gospel under the writer's ministry Feb. 20, 1887, and faithfully trusted and served the Lord until the end. On July 11, 1889, she became the wife of Bro. C. C. McDonald. Unto them were born four children, three of whom are still living. The family lived in Fairbury until last spring, when they came to Eureka. It was a most devoted family, thoroughly Christian and full of true culture. The remains were brought back for burial beside her mother in the Mt. Zion cemetery. The writer preached the funeral sermon from Matt. 25:21: "Well done, good and faithful servant." May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved. J. G. WAGGONER.

Eureka, Ill.

STUTZMAN.

My mother, Amanda M. Stutzman, fell asleep in Jesus at her home in Summerset, Pa., on Sept. 21, in the 74th year of her age. She closed her beautiful Christian life with expressions of serene confidence in her Redeemer. Her companion of 51 years survives her. Besides the writer there remain of sons and daughters: C. H. Fisher and Mrs. Emma Cook, of Summerset, Pa.; Mrs. Lillie Brown, Baltimore, Md.; Mrs. Lou Hoye, Sang Run, Md.; Mrs. Anna Boardman, Trumansburg, N. Y.; Mrs. Cora Johnson, London, Ky.; E. S. Sunday-School Literature

THE matter of Sunday-school Literature is one of very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no importance, or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

We understand a FEW of our schools are using sectarian or union (so called) supplies, in order to save a few cents each quarter. Are you one of that number? Samples of our Supplies sent free

Hiram's Financial Situation.

In the three preceding articles the history of Hiram has been placed before our great brotherhood. We believe Pres. Garfield was right when he said, "Hiram has done more with the money she has had than any institution in the U. S." Whether this be true or not, it certainly is true that Hiram has accomplished a marvelous work with the small means at her command. The magnificent work done has been accomplished under disadvantages that no one can fully appreciate except those closely connected with the college. It remains now to briefly sum up the financial situation and then submit the case to the great brotherhood for action. Hiram has gradually accumulated a small endowment. If space permitted we would be glad to mention some specific gifts that she has received, but we have not room for this at the present time. Suffice it to say that her endowment has gradually increased from year to year until she has at present about $100,000 of productive endowment and probably $50,000 more that will become productive in the not distant future. She has never lost any of the money that was given to her, but has carefully guarded it and used it wisely and well. The great enlargement of its work, made necessary by the continually advancing standard in education and the continually growing demands upon the college has outrun the very gradual growth of the endowment. To show how greatly the work has increased we will say, that in 1883 thirty-nine classes recited each day; in 1898 eighty classes recite per day. In this comparison we estimate the work of the special teachers. In 1880 fifty-seven credits were necessary in order to graduation from the strongest courses; in 1898 sixty-eight credits are required. It will be understood that a credit means twelve weeks' work in a given study. In 1880 Hiram offered five courses besides the irregular and eclective work; in 1898 she offers twenty courses besides the irregular and elective work. In 1880 Hiram employed seven teachers. not counting student tutors. In 1898 she has twenty instructors, not including physical directors.

To keep out of debt under such circumstances has been a herculean task and it has only been done by the most rigid economy and by supplementing the income from tuitions and endowments by the gifts of individuals and churches. We must greatly enlarge the endowment. To cut nown the work would be disastrous. In fact it is a question of enlarging rather than decreasing the work. Hiram's board has decided to make an appeal once for all to the people, for the college that has in a very emphatic way been a college of the people. Hiram's Jubilee Commencement in June 1900 is to be made the occasion for adding $250,000 to the endowment, thus placing the institution once for all on a solid foundation. The call is for at least 50,000 persons who will unite in the accomplishment of this great object, and why should not a college like Hiram, that has offered its blessings to thousands of worthy young people, be endowed by the people? Tuitions have been marvelously low and expenses have been kept down in every way. Every encouragement has been offered to struggling young people who have thus been enabled to secure an education. Hundreds and hundreds have gone forth from Hiram well equipped for the work of life that could never have received an education at all if it had not been for the advantages in the old college on the hill.

In next week's issue of the paper our great formal appeal will be made. Keep your eyes open for this appeal and read it carefully and then send your name in at once as one of the 50,000 who will join in this great movement. You can at least give one dollar and thus be enrolled in the Hiram army. Many can give much more. Let the friends of Hiram join hands in this movement and the work is done.

Z.

The Gospel in our Coast Cities.

Within the next few years there will be an immense and unprecedented growth in the foreign commerce of the United States. The Spanish war has called vivid attention to our foreign relations. We now really enter the field of a wide foreign trade. The possession of Cuba, Porto Rico and other West Indian territory of the Sandwich Islands and of interests, at least, in the Philippines, would of itself greatly increase our external commerce. Our business firms already have their agents on the grounds in our various prospective possessions. But our new business will not stop with this increase only. Our people are now reaching out for a wider trade in all directions. English ships are now carrying a large part of the foreign trade of this country. But this shall not be always so. The late war has called attention to our ships and our navy, and we shall from this time become more a maritime nation. Our own citizens will carry our own trade and their families will live in our seaports.

It is easy to see that we are upon the eve of a large growth in our seaport towns and cities. As exports and imports increase under this mighty impulse, the work of transfer and shipment will require a large working force and population in our coast cities. Especially will our Southern and Southeastern coast cities, in growing proximity to the great agricultural region of the West and Southwest that sends a considerable portion of its products to foreign lands be subject to a great increase in growth. In fact, quite a considerable growth, without the expansive influence of the late war, has already been manifest within the past few years.

During the last six years this city of Galveston has shown a striking growth in foreign trade; the value of exports has increased in instances as follows: Cattle, 1894, $900; 1898 an increase to $95,500. The exports of corn were in 1893, 186,000 bushels, having a value of $118,000, and this has increased to 4,762,000 bushels in 1898, having a value of $1,870,000. During the same period the value of wheat exports has increased from $859,900 to $10.139,-000. Cotton seed oil exports have increased from $21,250 to $1,529,000; lumber from $12,-700 to $606,300; zinc from nothing to $890,000 in 1897; while the total value of exports has doubled. Imports have increased one-half in the same time.

I, therefore, brethren, submit the conclusion, that we are called upon to spare no effort or money in establishing strong churches in these centers of future influence.

Publishers' Notes.

Sir William Dawson of the McGill University, Montreal, Canada, gives his opinion of "Organic Evolution Considered," as follows: "I think the book may do much good in meeting the difficulties of young naturalists perplexed by the sophistries if agnostic or spontaneous evolution."

Prof. G. P. Coler, of Ann Arbor, Mich., says concerning "Wonders of the Sky," by W. J. Russell: "One of the good things about this book is that it is brief, containing only eighty-two pages. These pages are crammed full of interesting information and inspiring thoughts." The price of this little book is 50 cents, postpaid. The book is bound in beatiful illuminated cloth.

"Queen Esther," written by M. M. Davis, has just been isssued from our press. The book is bound in beautiful cloth, and the price is 75 cents.

The book recites Queen Esther's career and brings out grand lessons from her eventful life.

The book can but have an ennobling and refining influence on the minds of its readers. The young men and young ladies of our times should carefully read this new publication. The style of the author is fascinating and the thoughts are inspiring.

Those who are not acquainted with the biography of Alexander Campbell should read "Life of Alexander Campbell," by Thomas W. Grafton. This work is a condensed history of this great religious reformer, beginning with his boyhood and following the events of his life to its close. Every member of our church should be acquainted with the history of Alexander Campbell. A careful reading of this late book will give one all the important events in the life of this great man. It is a book of 234 pages, and the price is $1.00.

Announcements.

We have accepted the work at Hot Springs, Ark., the famous health resort. We will take pleasure in giving our brethren any information desired concerning this place if they write with stamps. We desire you to visit our church while here. The church is located at the end of the Ouchiua car line. Address W. H. Connell, elder or myself.

Railroad Rates.

The Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River has granted a rate of one and one-third fare, round trip, to the gateways of the Central Association, on the Certificate plan, to the Chattanooga Convention, Oct. 13-21, 1898.

Those coming from the Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River will pay full fare to the gateway of the Central Traffic Association, and from there will get round-trip tickets to Chattanooga and return, at the rate of one fare for the round trip. When you pay full fare take a certificate for the same, and after having it signed at Chattanooga you will be returned from the gateway at which it was purchased to your home for one-third fare.

Please notice that those coming from the Western Passenger Association and the Trunk Line Association north-east of the Potomac River purchase tickets twice, one at the home station for which they will take a certificate, and the second at the point where they reach the bounds of the Central Traffic Association, where they will buy round-trip tickets at the one-fare rate.

Our convention at Chattanooga promises to be the most interesting in all our history. Preparations have been making for months that it shall be the strongest Convention we have ever held. The brethren at Chattanooga have had it on their hearts the entire year, and have made the most ample preparations for the successful entertainment of this Convention.

In behalf of the Boards we desire to extend the invitation for a general gathering of the loyal Disciples of our Lord and Savior. Let us say in our hearts, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of our Lord."

Come to the Convention at Chattanooga, October 13th to 21st, 1898.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

GOSPEL MELODIES

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

First Lines of Some of the Best Songs in this Excellent Book

Praise Him! Praise Him!
I love to steal awhile away.
Delay not, Delay not.
Softly and tenderly.
If God has riches given you.
Oh, I want to be still nearer.
Where the billows roll the highest.
There is a land beyond somewhere.
Oh, would to me were only given.
The Bible reveals a glorious land.
The voice of the Savior says come.
The path is set with many a thorn.
Oh, the love of God to me.
List to the song of the reapers.
Night with ebon pinion.
In the presence of our God we meet again.
Preaching Jesus on the way.
I ask not earthly treasure.
Oh, bless the Lord, Oh my soul.
There'll be room enough in heaven.
I am going to Jesus.
Broad is the road that leads to death.
There is a home, a beautiful home.
Attend young friends while I relate.
Peacefully lay her down to rest.
In thy name, Oh, Lord, assembling.
Toiling for Jesus day by day.
How sweet 'tis to know.
When our earthly life is ended.
Just beyond the shad'wy valley.
The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide
Far beyond the rolling Jordan.
Lead me gently home, Father.
How firm a foundation.
Go on, you pilgrims.
Oh, how lovely! (Anthem.)
List to the voice of the Savior.
In our Father's home above.
There is one thought that cheers my way.
Make channels for the streams of love.
I've found a friend in Jesus.
It is the hour of prayer.
When storm-clouds arise in the sky.
I wonder if any poor sinner will come.
Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus.
See the ranks of sin approaching.
A thousand lords had gathered in the palace of Belshazzar.
Glory and praise to the Lord who died for me.
See! on the cross, the Savior bleeds.
There's a city of light 'mid the stars, we are told.
Just over the river are palaces grand.
Christians, are you growing weary?
There is a rock in a weary land.
O pilgrims, look forward to glory.
When the day is full of gladness.
There is a precious fountain.
Beyond the golden sunset sky.
Do you know a soul that's fainting?
Yes, we have a friend in Jesus.
Come now and let us reason.
When the waves are rolling high.
There is a house not made with hands.
Gone from our home.
I am on my journey to Canaan's happy land.
In thy temple, Lord, we gather.
Christ is knocking at my sad heart.
Let me sing the old song o'er again.
I will tell you an old simple story.
I'll rejoice in the love of Jesus.
There's a beautiful land far beyond the sky.
There's a hand ever ready to lift up all the fallen.
All for Jesus, all for Jesus.
There's a city that is far, far away.
When the trump of God shall sound.
Where are the ones we love fondly?
Teach me thy way.
God of our salvation.
Oh, there is joy in believing.
Praise Him, praise the name of God most high. (Anthem.)
Great is the Lord. (Anthem.)
One sweetly solemn thought.
Make a joyful noise unto the Lord. (Anthem.)
Hear the call to labor for the Lord.
Savior while my heart is tender.
Of the old time I'm thinking.
Twilight is stealing.
At home or away, in the alley or street.
Mother, tell me of the angels.

GOSPEL MELODIES contains several good easy anthems that will please choirs and singing societies. It is the only church music book of its class that does.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The event which is at this time most vividly present in the national consciousness is President McKinley's triumphal progress through the central states, en route to the Omaha Exposition and return. The tour has been one unbroken ovation—a general peace jubilee. The cheers which have everywhere greeted the appearance of the President have not been in any considerable degree cheers for the currency doctrine for which he stands or for the protective tariff. But, besides being tokens of his personal popularity, they have been expressions of approval of the way in which he has preserved our national honor in the late war, and in a more or less general way, approval of his conception of the duties which grow out of our victory. The President's visit to the Omaha Exposition was an exceptional opportunity for an ovation and the most was made of it. His sojourn of a day in St. Louis was a return to the place where he received the presidential nomination and where he was certain to meet with a reception marked by no ordinary degree of enthusaism. The climax is expected to be in Chicago where he will participate in the peace jubilee which is to be celebrated in that city during the present week. Evidently war is not the normal condition of this nation. We enter upon it reluctantly, acquit ourselves in it honorably, and great is our rejoicing when it is over. We have two causes for thanksgiving: victory and peace.

Since the days of the Homestead strike and riot there has not been a more threatening situation of that class than the one which developed among the coal-miners at Virden, Ill. The strike among the employees of the Chicago-Virden Company has been in progress for some time, but the acute stage was not reached until the company attempted, to make good its threat to supply the places of the strikers by negroes imported from the Southern states. The strikers, being forewarned of this attempt made armed resistance to the landing of the negroes from the train. The company, being likewise forewarned of the probability of armed resistance, placed upon the special train which brought the negroes a force of forty or fifty of Pinkerton's men armed with Winchesters. The result of the attempt to disembark the men at Virden was a pitched battle between the strikers and the guards, resulting in fourteen deaths and the injury of thirty or forty more. The strikers carried the day and the train drew out as soon as it could, carrying the imported laborers on to Springfield. The militia of the state have been called out to restore order and they have done so by cooperating with the striking miners in preventing the landing of the imported laborers. The situation is at present peaceful but still critical, for the operators of the mines announce their determination to bring in negro miners at all hazards and the troops are at hand with orders to prevent the landing of any that may arrive.

The peculiar and noteworthy feature of this case is the attitude assumed by the Governor of Illinois, who tacitly justifies the action of the strikers in taking up arms to prevent the filling of their places by imported laborers, but charges the officials of the Chicago-Virden Company with murder in employing armed men, most of whom were not citizens of Illinois, to protect their imported laborers, who were also not citizens of Illinois. The point with him seems to be that the imported negroes are a lower and cheaper grade of labor than the average in Illinois and are altogether an undesirable class of citizens. So long as he is governor, he says, he will not permit the importation of cheap contract labor from other states into Illinois, and accordingly he is now employing the militia of the state to prevent the landing of the negroes. Gov. Tanner is forced to admit that there is no law on the statute-books of his or any state prohibiting the migration of labor under contract from one state to another, and that consequently he is employing the armed force of the state to execute a law which does not exist. In explaining his measures in opposition to "the pernicious system of importing labor," Gov. Tanner says: "Perhaps in placing an embargo upon imported labor I am a little in advance of statutory enactment. However, sometimes in the interest of society it becomes necessary to enforce a law in advance of its statutory enactment." This, in our humble opinion, is a most extraordinary doctrine and a dangerously liberal interpretation of the function of the state executive. We are not prepared to give an opinion as to the merits of the original controversy between the miners and the operators. Probably the miners had good reason to strike and are deserving of our sympathy. Two facts, nevertheless, remain. First, that the action of both sides in taking up arms and turning the dispute into a battle was equally criminal. Second, that in calling out the militia to prevent the importation of contract labor solely on the ground that it is in his judgment a "pernicious system," Governor Tanner is invading the legal rights of the Chicago-Virden Company and is laying up for himself all kinds of trouble.

It is by no means assured that the trouble with the Chippewa Indians in Minnesota is satisfactorily settled or that it will be settled without more fighting. The offenders, whom the deputy marshal was trying to arrest, have not all been surrendered. The tribe is assembled and is in council, and the authorities are giving them a reasonable amount of time to consider the consequences of continued opposition, but it is hard to tell whether they are seriously deliberating about the surrender of their erring brethren or getting on their war-paint. General Bacon is prepared for the latter contingency and if the Indians are obdurate there will be bloodshed in the reservation.

One of the bills to come before the next session of the present Congress, we are informed, will be one authorizing the government to issue Post Cheques for fractional currency uses. One of the strong reasons for the issue of these cheques is for the convenience of all persons who have occasion to send small amounts by mail to other parties. The inconvenience of the present method of sending small amounts, whether by express, draft or registered letter, is familiar to all, to say nothing of the disproportionate cost of the same. C. W. Post, of the Postum Cereal Co., Lim., at Battle Creek, Mich., has placed before a few well-known merchants, and also before Secretary of the Treasury Gage, a form of postal domestic currency that is the best solution of the problem yet offered. The demand is for currency in general circulation that can be instantly made safe for transmission by mail, and free from the present annoyances. The Post Cheque is no more nor less than fractional currency in everyday circulation, while the spaces on the face are left blank. They are intended to replace the silver coin, either partially or wholly. When the individual desires to send a small amount of money through the mail, he takes from his pocketbook perhaps a fifty-cent piece and a one-dollar piece, without more ado fills in the name of the firm or person to whom he desires the money paid, gives also the name of the city and state, then affixes a two-cent postage stamp in the square indicated, and thereupon signs his name in ink, the signature traversing and canceling the stamp. By this act pieces of money that up to that moment have been negotiable and have passed from hand to hand are instantly transferred into pieces of exchange, payable only to the payee named, and the toll or fee must be paid by the sender and canceled by his signature. It is then ready for enclosure in a letter, and cannot be made use of by any dishonest postal clerk or other person than the one named as payee. This plan would also dispense with the need of money order clerks and the red tape attendant upon the present clumsy methods.

It is proposed to issue the Post Cheque in five, ten, twenty-five and fifty cent pieces, also in one, two and five-dollar notes, their faces printed in suitable form to allow of proper entries in ink by the sender, and their backs in suitable treasury note form. The faces will indicate in large figures the denomination of the note. The Post Cheques are to be redeemable at any post-office. The postmaster pays out new Post Cheques when he redeems the old ones, and this method serves an excellent purpose in keeping the notes fresh and comparatively clean, as is the case with Bank of England notes. As long as unsigned the cheques pass as ordinary currency. Just what Congress may think of such a bill, or how they would secure such currency, we are not informed, but it looks feasible, and we are sure would be a greatly appreciated convenience.

The condition of affairs in the Far East is as much of an enigma as ever. Even yet it cannot be said with certainty whether the emperor is dead or alive, but only that the empress is at the head of affairs and that the condition at Peking is critical. Foreigners resident in Peking have been subjected to indignities which have rendered it necessary for both Russia and Great Britain to introduce small bands of marines into the city. The crisis may result in a joint occupation of Peking by the powers. The Europeanization of the Orient is the end toward which all events point, but by such outbreaks as this China is only bringing upon herself more speedily the inevitable end. Little by little, European nations have been allowed to acquire interests in China and these interests, involving the lives and property of their subjects as well as the prestige of their governments, the powers must protect. In recognition of our interests in China and our right to protect them, Secretary Long has ordered two American warships, the Petrel and the Baltimore of the Philippine squadron, to proceed to Chinese waters and approach as near as possible to Pekin. The river upon which the city is situated is not navigable for boats of this size as far up as the capital, but our two warships will proceed to the lower waters of the river and be ready for any emergency. This movement is unanimously approved by the British press since it gives hope of Anglo-American co-operation in settling the Chinese question. Our interests in the East are identical with those of Great Britain and if we are drawn into the fray it would be scarcely possible to avoid an alliance with her even if we wanted to. With our military and naval forces in the Philippines, which could be available on short notice if necessary, the United States is now almost if not quite the strongest Western power in the Orient.

The net gain of the Presbyterian Church last year, the Herald and Presbyter says, was 14,966. One-third of this gain was in Pennsylvania. In New York there was a loss of 1,370. The Herald and Presbyter is by no means pleased with this report. It had expected this year's additions to raise their membership to a million in the United States, but it is still short of that number by 25,000.

A SAMPLE OF CONSTRUCTIVE TEACHING.

In an article last week we commented upon the statement of Jesus, that He came to fulfill the law and not to destroy it as indicative, not only of His own method, but of the method that must be observed by all who would advance the cause of religion on earth. It may be well to give an illustration from the New Testament of how this principle was carried out by the inspired writers. Perhaps there is no better example of this than the letter to the Hebrews.

We do not know who the author of the Hebrew letter is. The view that it was written by Paul is very generally abandoned now by biblical scholars. Some ascribe it to Barnabas, but more perhaps to Apollos, the eloquent Alexandrian. But whoever the author was his method was constructive, not destructive. He saw Judaism and Christianity coming in contact with each other and contesting the ground for supremacy. His purpose seems to have been to show that Christianity is not something opposed to the Jews, but that it was a fulfillment of principles, truths and worship, which are found in germ in the law which the Jews revered.

God did, indeed, speak in times past unto the fathers in the prophets, he says, and you Hebrews are right in claiming that your religion was divinely given; but it is also true that He has spoken again unto us in these days in His Son, and this message through His Son is more important than the former one, by so much as the Messenger Himself being none other than the express image of the Father and the very effulgence of His glory is superior, not only to the prophets, but even to the angels through whom the law was said to be given on Mt. Sinai. For this reason "we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things we have heard" from Christ and His apostles. For if disobedience to the law spoken through angels received its proper punishment, what possibility of escape is there for those who neglect "so great a salvation" as that which has been made known to us through the message of Christ, and has been confirmed to us by the testimony of His apostles? Notwithstanding the divine majesty and glory of the Son of God, it was necessary that He should become a partaker of flesh and blood, in order that He might be like His brethren, and enter into full sympathy with them in all their temptations and trials.

Now as to Moses, he was, indeed, "faithful in all his house as a servant." He was the great and good man which you believe him to have been; but Christ comes, not as a servant, but "as a Son over His own house." Some of your fathers would not believe Moses nor accept his leadership, and they perished in the wilderness. You would do well to take heed lest you also should fail through unbelief in Christ.

Aaron was a high priest, called of God, and filled his position as well as any mere human being could, but our real and perpetual High Priest is Jesus Christ, who is a priest, not like Aaron, not after the manner of the Levitical priesthood, but a priest after another order—that of Melchizedec This High Priest does not need to make an offering for His own sins, for He is sinless, but He made an offering once for all, of His own blood, through which we are cleansed from our sins, and they are remembered against us no more forever.

And so the writer goes on with his argument, pointing out that the "ordinances of of divine service," which were under the first covenant, find a completer fulfillment in Christ and His worship, and that the law contained only "a shadow of the good things to come." Then follows the roll of the heroes of faith, who are all recognized and honored; but after all God had "provided some better things concerning us," which is made known in the gospel. The same faith which enables these men of old to achieve their triumphs under the law should lead us now to "look unto Jesus who is the Author and Perfecter of our faith," and through whom we have received "a kingdom that cannot be shaken."

How well this line of argument is calculated to favorably influence those who were inclined to be held in the bonds of Judaism and to lead them on to something higher and better than the law could furnish! How much wiser this course was than if the writer had made war on the Jewish religion, indescriminately pointing out its defects, but failing to recognize the truth there was in it! By recognizing all that was true, and divine, and praiseworthy under the law he opened the hearts of those Hebrews to receive his message concerning the "better things" of the new covenant given through Jesus Christ.

This is the divine method. It must be recognized in our work in pagan lands where our missionaries come in contact with pagan systems of religion, and in our land, where we are seeking to present and to illustrate the New Testament type of Christianity as against the more or less perverted forms in which it has come down to us. We have not always been loyal to this method, and to the extent that we have not the cause of truth has suffered at our hands. To seek to do Christ's work, in Christ's method and spirit, is the sure road to success.

DEFEAT OF THE PEOPLE.

Dr. Amory Bradford, in a sermon delivered last year during jubilee week in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, and published in The New Puritanism, calls attention to some of the evil tendencies that threaten the future of the American Republic. Among the characteristics that imperil the New Democracy he enumerates a widespread and growing tendency toward the effacement of the feeling of individual responsibility to God; a misconception of what is meant by intellectual and spiritual freedom; a dimming of the lines which separate virtue and vice, right and wrong; and, most painful of all, we are living in a republic compelled to witness the defeat of the people. This, in Mr. Bradford's opinion, is the most ominous and perilous fact in American history. The fundamental principle in modern civilization is the right of the people to rule, but the people in this country, we are told, do not rule. Two illustrations are given to show that the fundamental principles of democracy are being systematically overthrown in the land of the free and the home of the brave.

"In a small town the question is merely one of the granting of a franchise to a trolly company. The people say: 'Restrict and safeguard,and let it come;' but outside monopolies, thinking only of dividends, either buy up a council, or procure special legislation and drive through their own schemes without the slightest regard to the wishes of those who own the property, whose homes are invaded, and whose life-purposes are ruined. Thus the people are defeated."

The other instance is the defeat in the United States Senate of the arbitration treaty between this country and Great Britain. "Two great nations, after glaring at each other for more than a century, conclude that they have shaken fists long enough, and that they had better clasp hands and prove themselves the brothers that they are in blood and language, in history, in religion; and the people in both nations lift such a cry of gladness as has not been heard for a quarter of a century. This is the people's business, and they have a right to be heeded. But no; the machinery of government is straightway invoked that prejudice may rule, and the people be humiliated and disgraced. Thus government of the people, for the people, and by the people has failed almost before the echoes of Lincoln's oration have died away. Most of our cities are ruled by corrupt oligarchies; most of our states are in the hands of selfish politicians; and international problems, instead of being solved by representatives of the people, are shelved by those who misrepresent them."

These illustrations of the defeat of the people under a so-called democracy might, with little trouble, have been indefinitely multiplied. "Satan's Invisible World Displayed," in Tammany politics, in the metropolis of the United States, the rottenest civic government this side of perdition, would have been a fruitful instance for the consideration of the preacher. For years, unmolested, Tammany and his harpies, fed at the public crib, and laid under tribute saloons, brothels, gamblidg hells, and all the doings of darkness, to line the pockets of its rogues, preserving institutions of evil it was sworn to suppress, for self-revenue only. At last a reaction came and the people in their wrath smote the thieving Boss, and turned the money-changing rascals out of the municipal temple, and New York, like the swine-herding prodigal, to all appearances, had come to itself. But how long did the people's will prevail? Till the next election. The boodle-ringing Boss and his horde of civic thieves were on the alert, as the minions of Satan always are. The corrupt oligarchy is again in the saddle, and the people are unhorsed. No inconsiderable majority of the voting population of the metropolis registered themselves against the reinstatement of Tammany rule, but the Boss went in all the same, and the people are powerless to help themselves. A more undemocratic proceeding that the civic administration of New York has never been known in the history of mankind. The people do not, and it seems cannot, rule in their own affairs in this great city. The democratic experiment, the rule of the people, is a failure, if New York City is to be accepted as the criterion of judgment.

The American people do not believe in monopolies to enrich the few at the expense of the many, to the impoverishment of not a few, but they are seemingly powerless to prevent it. Equalization of the burden of taxation so that the expenses of government shall be equitably borne by individual citizens in proportion to their wealth, is a fundamental doctrine of modern civilization, believed in by every loyal American, and yet the fact is well known that a millionaire in the United States pays less taxes than a man worth fifty or a hundred thousand dollars. The Almighty Dollar and the corrupt political Boss have the American people by the throat. To this combination the liquor power ought to be added. Nothing does more to defeat the people, and to hand over their interests to Satan and Boss rule, than the saloon. Last year a petition was circulated asking for a local option vote in the county in which this is written. The saloon element got wind of what was being done, sent round a counter petition in the town, asking for an election in the town precinct, to forestall the county election, which would entrench the saloon for three years. The judge of the county court decided in favor of the saloon petition for the minority of the saloonists against the majority of the people, ordered the election in the town, where it was known the liquor interest would carry against the majority in the county, where in all probability it would have been defeated. We ask in vain the privilege, in this county, of voting on the question of whether we will have the retail liquor traffic or not, because the saloon does not want us to. This is a specimen of American democracy under the rule of the saloon. An adjoining county carried on local option two years ago by a majority of over 500; it was thrown out by the courts on a technicality. Last year the question was again submitted to a vote and the saloon was knocked out by over 700 majority, and the saloon is running as though nothing had happened! We tried last year to get a fair and reasonable measure to both sides, through the state legislature, so that a county as a whole could vote on the question of local option, so that the individual precincts could not remain wet or dry because they happened to vote that way, against the majority in the county. This was democratic and fair, and put the power in the hands of the people. But it did not suit the saloon and whisky-soaked county towns, and again, and quite as a matter of course, it was defeated. There is no democracy and no rule of the people as long as the saloon is permitted to exist. With corrupt politics, the saloon, and the subordination of government to selfish ends, the downfall of democracy and the defeat of the people is permanently assured.

FULFILLING THE MINISTRY OF CHRIST.*

II. What is it to "fulfill" the ministry of Christ in this age?

Archippus was exhorted to give heed to the ministry which he had received in the Lord to the end that he might "fulfill" it. No man can fulfill his ministry, as a preacher of the gospel, except he have some worthy and adequate conception of what that ministry should be. It is to be feared that many take upon themselves the work of the Christian ministry without an adequate idea of its scope, of its responsibility and of its vast importance to the well-being of the race. One of the secrets of Paul's greatness, as a preacher, was the high conception which he had of his calling. What is it to worthily fulfill such a ministry as thatof the gospel of Jesus Christ?

1. It is first of all, is it not, to have a clear grasp of the fundamental truths of the gospel, an adequate appreciation of their supreme value, and then to preach them with all the earnestness and power one can command. The gospel has a definite message. It consists of facts of tremendous importance, of truths most vital to human welfare, of commands and promises that have to do with the present and eternal interests of men. The preacher whose mind does not seize these sublime facts and truths, whose divine power and energy have been tested in his own life, and deliver them to men with a moral earnestness born out of his own experience of their supreme value, cannot fulfill the ministry of Jesus Christ. To philosophize, to speculate, to expatiate upon the sublimities and beauties of nature is not to preach the gospel which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

2. No preacher can fulfill his ministry who relies wholly upon preaching to his congregation from the pulpit. He must see them in their homes, in their offices and in their shops. The great preacher whose advice we are studying said to a church with which he had labored in the gospel, "Ye yourselves know from the first day that I set foot in Asia, after what manner I was with you all the time, serving the Lord in all lowliness of mind, and with tears, and with trials which befell me by the plots of the Jews: how that I shrank not from declaring unto you anything that was profitable, and teaching you publicly, and from house to house, testifying both to Jews and Greeks repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." It was this sort of ministry that enabled him to say to the elders of this same church, "Wherefore, I testify unto this day that I am pure from the blood of all men." No minister to-day can dispense with hand-to-hand and house-to-house work if he would have his ministry crowned with success.

3. The man of God who would fulfill his ministry must know the age in which he lives. He cannot live in the seventeenth or eighteenth century and serve the present generation. He must know the thought of his times. He must be acquainted with the problems of the age. He must seek to apply the old gospel to the new conditions of his own age and country. He must not only know the Scriptures, he must know the people among whom he labors, if he is to greatly benefit them. He must know how to apply the gospel to the daily needs of men; otherwise, the people will turn away from him to find something which is of some practical interest to them.

4. A preacher who would fulfill his ministry must keep his mind and heart open to all the new light that shines from every source to illuminate God's Word and God's world. He cannot grow without this, and to cease to grow is to die as a preacher. No preacher can long maintain the confidence and respect of thoughtful people, when he gives evidence of having closed his mind to the truth, and in his blindness opposes the truth, because it is new, and because he has not taken pains to investigate its claims. The man who is the servant of any system of theology which men have made, and who feels it to be his duty as a preacher to maintain and defend such a system of theology cannot fulfill the ministry of Christ to-day. He must be a free man in Christ Jesus. He must know no master but Christ, and must seek to follow him whithersoever he leadeth.

5. Finally. He must enter into fellowship with Christ—fellowship with his great plans and purposes, fellowship with his sufferings and his joys—in order to minister to the manifold needs of our poor sinning and suffering humanity. He must know Christ and seek to convey his tender message of sympathy and love to sinning, sorrwinig and suffering men and women. He must hold up before the world the perfect ideal and model in Jesus Christ, and urge men toward the attainments of this ideal.

By so doing those who are ministers of Christ's gospel may hope in some measure to fulfill their ministry, and at last to receive from the hand of our Lord the crown of everlasting rejoicing.

Hour of Prayer.

THE SYMPATHIZING FRIEND.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Oct. 26, 1898.)

Jesus wept. The Jews, therefore, said: Behold how he loved him!—John 11:35, 36.

Few stories are more familiar than that associated with the beloved family at Bethany, consisting of Lazarus and his two sisters, Martha and Mary, where Jesus used to visit so often. By some spiritual quality in their nature they were able more than most others to apprehend the real character of Jesus, and to love him with a tenderness seldom manifested toward him in his earthly ministry. In his absence on one of his preaching tours, Lazarus sickened and died. Jesus had been sent for, but did not arrive until four days after the death of his friend. The weeping sisters poured into his ear their sorrow and grief. The Man of Sorrows was touched by their tears, and he wept with them.

"Jesus wept." Precious words! They bring this noblest and highest born of all the sons of men, this King of humanity, into the fellowship of the great company of the sorrowing and suffering ones of earth. We feel, instinctively, that he is brother-man with us. Those tears are evidence that he has a heart that can be touched with human sorrow. He made the sorrow of these orphan sisters his sorrows, and mingled his tears with theirs. He is the same "yesterday, to-day and forever."

Where, in all the annals of history, can we find a friend who is at once so strong and yet so tender; so omnipotent in his power to help, so sympathetic in his regard for others? Truly may we sing—

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear!"

The strange thing is that so many of us have not appreciated nor cultivated the friendship of Jesus. We have had worldly friends who have deceived us, and we have had friends in prosperity who have deserted us in the hours of adversity. We have also had true friends who have done what they could for us, but who could not meet the deepest need of our soul. But here is a Friend "who sticketh closer than a brother." He is a friend in adversity as well as in prosperity. He is a friend who can minister as none but he can, to the hunger of the heart.

There are friends, so called, whom we do not care to have with us when the shadow of death comes into our homes. Somehow we feel that they cannot help us. There are other friends whom, when sorrow overtakes us, we like to have visit us. Jesus was such a friend. "If thou hadst been here," the sisters at Bethany exclaimed, "our brother had not died." Who of us does not want Jesus to come into our home when death has invaded it, and when we—

"Sigh for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still?"

He is pre-eminently the Comforter in the presence of death; but he is also the Helper in every temptation and in every trial.

Let those of us who have never made the acquaintance of Christ seek his friendship; and let those of us who have been his disciples cultivate his friendship more than we have ever done, and seek to be more worthy of it. "Ye are my friends," said the Master, "if ye do whatsoever I command you." Jesus is our friend. Are we the friends of Jesus according to his own test? "Behold how he loved him!" Does he not also love us? Let Gethsemane and Golgotha answer.

PRAYER.

O, Thou Lord of Life, who did taste the bitterness of death for our sakes, and who by all Thine acts of self-denial and condescension and tender love hast shown Thyself the truest friend of humanity, accept the homage of our hearts for all the marks of Thy friendship to us. Help us, we beseech Thee, to manifest our friendship for Thee, by doing those things which Thou hast commanded us to do, and by manifesting that spirit which Thou didst manifest when Thou wert here in the world. May we be tender and true and sympathetic to those in trouble, as Thou wert, that we may alleviate the sorrows and sufferings of our fellowmen. Do Thou go with us, dear Master, and be our sympathizing friend in all the sorrows and struggles of life, and bring us at last to be with Thee to share in Thy glory and Thy friendship forevermore. Amen!

INSTITUTE WORK AMONG THE CHURCHES.

F. N. Calvin, of Waco, Tex., who is to close his work in that city Dec. 1st, writes concerning a matter in which we feel the churches are generally interested. We take the liberty of copying the following extract from his letter:

I have thought of going into the general field to hold revival services in the churches. What I mean is, to try as a special work to revive the churches rather than to baptize people. I believe that if the churches will do their duty, and conduct their work so as to maintain the respect and attention of the community, sinners will gladly come to be baptized. I have made a special study of pastoral work for over twenty years, and I believe I understad it pretty well. If I should do that work I would go to a place and take up such subjects as Church Organization, Church Officers, Church Finances, The Pastor and the Church, Church Buildings, Church Committees, The Institutional Idea as Applicable to our Churches in Towns and Smaller Cities, etc. In short, I would hope to cover in two or three weeks as much as possible of the ground of the church as a business and spiritual institution. My work would be specially to help the pastor and workers to carry on a larger and more aggressive work after I get through. I am the pastor's friend. I know the little annoyances which often retard his work and dampen his ardor. I would hope during my stay to get as many of these out of the way as possible. I could settle difficulties among the brethren, help to raise church debts, show them about special committee work, where such instruction is needed, etc.

Then, in addition, I would preach one regular sermon each day. In some places I could hold my special work during the day, and preach at night. In others I could give the first week to my Institute work, and follow that up with a week or two of straight preaching.

We do not hesitate to say that there is need for the very kind of work which is here described, and we believe, too, there will be a demand for it as soon as its usefulness can be demonstrated in a few such meetings. We hope that Bro. Calvin will be encouraged to undertake this kind of work among the churches.

Editor's Easy Chair.

We often receive letters from men, and women, too, breathing a spirit of moral heroism that shows that the same faith which made heroes and martyrs in the past is present yet in the church. Here lies before us a letter from Bro. A. H. Seymour, of Arlington, S. D., which, after expressing his appreciation of "Macatawa Musings" and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in general, adds:

"I cannot go to Chattanooga. I have had no vacation, except a long, sad, lonely trip back to Northern Ohio to lay the body of my beloved wife in the soil of her native county. Day after day, and week after week brings hard work and perplexity and heartache. I had been growing almost jealous of the brethren who can go on a vacation trip or attend some summer school to gain some new inspiration, but one day I began to count my blessings, not the least of which is the privilege of reading the interesting and inspiring accounts of others' vacations. There was a bit of help in your last Musings when you said you had not done all the reading, etc., you had planned to do. I had come to think no one but myself fell short there."

It would tend to prevent jealousy of others very much if we would do as Bro. S. has done—stop to count our own mercies—and, in addition to that, if we could only remember that others have their burdens and sorrows that we know not of, just as others know not of ours. The main thing in this life is not the pleasure we get out of it, but the good that we can do to others and the advancement we can make.

"Not enjoyment and not sorrow
Is our destined end and way;
But to live that each to-morrow
Finds us farther than to-day."

Has this age turned itself against gray hairs? Not in law, not in medicine, not in statesmanship, not in any of the higher callings of life, so far as we know, except in the ministry. But one would think that above all other places the ministry would have especial need for the experience and maturity which come with gray hairs; and yet the testimony seems to be that in all religious bodies gray haired preachers are at a discount. Bishop Merrill says: "The embarrassment in all our Conferences is what to do with the old men." Dr. Jackson, Presiding Elder, Rock River Conference, says: "It has come to pass in this as in other Conferences that when a man's head begins to turn gray people cease to believe he knows anything." Another Methodist bishop states that he has difficulty in locating preachers over forty years of age. We know of a few men among us who have had the misfortune to turn prematurely gray, and who, in the zenith of their power find it difficult, and in some cases impossible, to secure employment that will earn them a livelihood. There lies before us a letter from one of our ministers, of unblenished character, who is several years younger than the editor of this paper—scarcely past the half-century mark—who says his gray hairs—being permaturely gray—are a bar to his employment by the churches. This would seem to be ridiculous, if it were not pathetic. A man can scarcely be expected to have reached the maturity of his powers at the age at which this brother is laid on the shelf.

This is not true, of course, in every case. There are some men so full of vigor, vim and vitality that gray hairs do not count. No doubt there are cases where men cease to grow because they fail to keep their minds and hearts fertilized with the new and fresh thought of the times, and they are shelved, not so much because they have gray hairs, as because they do not use, sufficientiy, the gray matter of their brain. But this does not wholly account for the indisposition on the part of churches to employ men with gray hairs. There does seem to be an unreasonable prejudice against men of that class. We believe it to be an abnormal symptom, the cause and remedy of which should be studied. We all thank God for the young men who are entering upon the work, but surely we cannot afford to dispense with the richer experience and the maturer wisdom of men in middle life and beyond. Many of our churches are suffering to-day for lack of the very kind of teaching and pastoral care which these elderly preachers could furnish them. Isn't it time the churches should reconsider this question of age in connection with their preachers?

We are making no plea for the incompetents. If men will not toil with their brain and keep their hearts fresh and young by keeping in touch with the best thought of the age in which they live, and with the best methods of work, they must inevitably suffer the consequences. What we are asking is that men who have lost none of their competence and are able and willing to think and plan and work for the Master, should not be laid on the shelf simply becanse they have gray hairs. There is a good book which say: "The hoary head is a crown of glory if it be found in the way of righteousness." Our churches need the influence of men of maturity of years and of experience and of wisdom, to guide them safely through the perils that surround them. We say of our social order that something is wrong with it when men who are able to work and willing to work can secure no employment. Is it not equally true that there is something wrong in our ecclesiastical regulations and methods when so many men, capable of doing good work and pleading for the opportunity of doing it, are compelled to turn aside from the ministry to earn a support for themselves and family? We owe it to ourselves, we owe it to those men, and we owe it to the cause, to find out where the wrong is and remedy it.

Current Religious Thought

The Outlook of Oct. 8th has an editorial addressed "To the Clergy," which we believe the preachers of all religious bodies would do well to heed. Speaking of the temptation to turn aside from the real work of the pulpit to discuss the public issues of the day, it says:

Nevertheless, the community as well as the church is a loser when the preacher yields to this temptation, and ceases to be a preacher of righteousness and becomes an instructor in politics or sociology. For the latter function he has no special equipment. His library is not rich in political and sociological departments. He has no expert knowledge and no special information. He is as dependent as his congregation for the knowledge of the facts on the daily papers, and generally also for his understanding of principles. He is either much more or much less than the average man if he is not subject to partisan prejudices, is not a Republican, a Democrat, a Populist or a Prohibitionist. It is not safe for him to assume that he is superior to those prejudices which are common to humanity; and if he is unprejudiced because he is indifferent, he is unfit to be a teacher. The fact that the press will report his political sermon and no other is rather a reason against preaching it than the reverse. For the kingdom of God cometh not with observation; and he who preaches for the newspapers rarely preaches with real effectiveness to his own congregation.

On the other hand, if he turns aside from his specific function of iliuminating and inspiring the individual life, there is no one else in the community to take up his work. And his work is by far more important than that which beckons him away from it. It is far more important that the individuals in the community should be inspired by habits of self-control than that the state should have any particular form of legislature on its statute-books; that the citizens of all parties should be educated to abhor that which is evil than that political power should be transferred from one party to another; that Americans should govern themselves with honor in their individual lives than that they should assume the government of a new and distant people. For the solution of all political and sociological problems depends on this spiritual illumination and inspiration of the individual. Without it there will be the grossest licentiousness and self-indulgence in spite of laws on the statute-books; political reforms will only transfer the state from one set of robbers to another, and the expansion of America will be the expansion of selfish and corrupt misrule. Reforms which are simply changes of form are of very little value. The state may become Democratic in form, but if the love of despotic control is left dominant in the few and the love of political ease is left dominant in the many, the despot will reappear with the change of mask, and the old bureaucracy will be reconstituted with a new nomenclature. Feudalism may be abolished, and freedom of control established. But if the individuals who constitute society are still actuated by the principle of "Get all you can and keep all you get," industrial servitude will reappear under competition, and the victory once won for freedom will have to be won again by a new battle around a new strategic center.

The article gives some further good reasons why the minister should keep close to his high calling, as follows:

During the summer new and exciting political issues have arisen. Preacher and people are both interested in them. What more natural than that the minister should make his pulpit instructions bear directly upon these public themes? But we are convinced, and we should like to convince our clerical readers, that they should do so very rarely, if at all. This is not at all because the congregations are divided in sentiment on these questions, nor chiefly because they are wearied with the overdiscussion of them in the press, nor altogether because the minister is not generally better informed upon them than most of his people; it is because the people have come to church under the pressure of a different need. Some of them are consciously perplexed by problems of personal duty on which they desire light; all of them unconsciously suffer from some unrecognized atrophy and need life. The minister who fails to understand this need and to find in the gospel of his God a means of ministering to it, whether he turns his pulpit into a lecture platform in order to attract the crowd, or neglects his pulpit altogether and endeavors by social calling to build up a congregation, or suffers his church work to fall into a second place and gives himself to civic reform, law enforcement, sociological discussion and educational progress, misses the opportunity which the peculiar privilege of the pulpit gives to the preacher. This is an opportunity to add to the sum of life rather than to direct life into any particular channel. To interpret to men their own restlessness, their half-conscious sense of need; to pierce the armor of their self-conceit and awaken in them a divine discontent where it does not already exist; to set before them in the life of Jesus Christ a type of human excellence, and so inspire in them an ambition to be better than they are; to arouse in them a spirit of loyalty to him, obedience to which is the sum of human duty; to recover them from that dull despair whose end is death, by showing them in the free gift of God a power to do all and be all that the highest aspiration sets before them; to put into their exhausted lives a new heart of hope and love—this is the function of the ministry.

The reports at the recent conference of the International Committee of Y. M. C. A. indicate a prosperous year in their work. Ten Y. M. C. A. secretaries are now employed on students' work, having nearly 600 associations under their supervision. The Railroad Department has increased its force to six secretaries. The railroad corporations during the past year have given $150,000 to this work among their men. The Y. M. C. A. sustains a colored and an Indian secretary. There are now nearly 50 Indian associations. In the Educational Department good progress has been made. The committee now supports 12 secretaries in Foreign Mission lands, where considerable progress has also been made. It is said that thousands of young men in missionary lands devote the first half hour of each morning to prayer and Bible study, and many have volunteered for missionary work among their own people. In no previous year has this work been so helpful and received the support of missionaries as during the past year.

The Student Volunteer Movement is in organic relation with this committee. It has now over 3,000 students pledged to go as missionaries, as the denominational boards find opportunity to use them. Twelve hundred missionaries have already gone to the foreign field as a result of these efforts. The committee is also closely allied with the student movements in Great Britain and the Continent, through which some 1,600 students have volunteered for missionary work, nearly half of whom are now on the field. One of its secretaries is the secretary of this Worldwide Student Movement.

The latest and most interesting feature of the work of the committee is that of its Army and Navy Christian Commission, which was organized immediately after the declaration of war. It had at one time some seventy tents with one hundred and fifty secretaries in charge, located in all the camps in this country, Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippine Islands. Each tent is a Young Men's Christian Association for soldiers. This work has added very materially to the comfort of our soldiers and the cost of this extended work for 1898 will be about $80,000 for the general work, and for the Army and Navy work not less than $70,000, a total of $150,000. The latter has already cost over $50,000 during the four months of the war. Generous contributions will be absolutly necessary if it is to be continued during the balance of the year as successfully as it has been already. The Army and Navy work is just as important now as it was while the war was in active progress. Contributions are earnestly asked and may be sent to F. B. Schenck, Treasurer, 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, New York.

Our Budget.

—Some men know too much to be useful.

—Some men know too little to be called men.

—The spiritual barometer is highest over Chattanooga, Tenn., this week.

—The cooler weather and white frosts of last week will stop the invasion of the yellow fever in the South.

—Now that church conventions and city festivities are over for a season the churches should settle down to an active, aggressive campaign against sin.

—It is not too late for Endeavor Societies that have not yet enlisted in the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses to do so, but the sooner the better now that the second year has begun.

—The last quarter of each year is probably the best season of the year for recruiting Bible-school classes and every teacher should improve the opportunity. Now is the time to increase the attendance.

—The usual article on Christian Endeavor topic by Bro. Jenkins failed to reach us this week. We mention this to explain its non-appearance in this paper.

—We have a report of the district convention held at Mondamin, Iowa, September 16-17 to which the writer's signature is not attached.

—Some men have ceased learning, hence are not growing. Their past knowledge is their working capital.

—We acknowledge the receipt of an excellent picture (11x14) of Commodore W. S. Schley, from Keeler and Kirkpatrick, Philadelphia, Pa.

—The 23rd day of October is Forefathers' Day this year. If that is not convenient, then take the earliest convenient date. The day is being widely planned; it gives promise of being the best Endeavor day of the year. It is going to be helpful in starting the new mission in Puerto Rico. Don't fail to observe it. Write to Benj. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O., for help on programs. Remit all money collected on Forefathers' Day to the same address.

—If a preacher would occasionally lead his audience in the worship of God instead of always entertaining them with a sermon the effect might be more satisfactory to the church and to the Lord.

—The Y. M. C. A. is doing a great and good work in their night-schools. Schools under the auspices of the association are now conducted in 350 cities in which 1,250 teachers are giving instruction to about 26,000 young men. These students, it is said, are on an average twenty-three years old, are employed in the day time and in the majority of places but for these facilities would be denied the educational opportunities they thus have and need. These schools supplementing as they do the work of public schools are rapidly increasing in popularity and efficiency. Through the system of standard courses maintained by international examinations, students in these schools can prepare for college without further examinations. Sixty leading colleges and universities now accept international certificates. Last year 750 certificates were won.

—Word has come to the rooms of the Foreign Society that Dr. Harry N. Biddle, of Africa, died last Saturday. He had fever a number of times. When he wrote last he was not well, but was improving rapidly. He was visiting with some friends. He wrote about their kindness and goodness. No particulars are at hand. It will be remembered that Dr. Biddle went out with E. E. Faris in March, 1897. They have been on the Congo for more than a year. In this time they have been trying to find a place and get consent to begin operations. They have found a number of places, but the officials are Catholic and try in every possible way to exclude Protestants from that part of the world. What they do is done diplomatically. They are courteous in their bearing toward the missionaries, but it is quite clear that they do not wish the pure gospel preached in that part of the country. Some one will have to be sent right way to take Dr. Biddle's place. A competent medical missionary ought to be started for the Congo within a few weeks at the farthest. It will not do to permit E. E. Faris to remain there alone.

—In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Sept. 8th J. M. Lowe, of Winterset, Ia , in his "One in Christ," says, "That the burial of the body in water brings a man into spiritual relation with Christ is the acme of absurdity." I think not one claims the burial alone does this. However, Peter says, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." Sometimes in the argumentative spirit we over state ourselves. I think this point is unfortunately overstated in both directions at times. Bro. Lowe is a successful minister and an old colaborer.

Fraternally,

F. H. LEMON.

Lake City, Ia., Sept. 10, 1898.

—On last Friday this city was honored with a visit by the nation's Chief Magistrate and other high government officials, and gave to them a most cordial and royal welcome. Throughout the entire day the streets were thronged with people anxious for a sight of the President of the United States. The President is making some model speeches on his tour, which are loudly applauded wherever delivered. They are noteworthy for brevity, broad patriotism, grasp of facts, high moral tone and religious bearing, and will greatly increase his popularity as a broad-minded, impartial magistrate. Some of his allusions to industrial conditions may appear to be somewhat previous to some, but perhaps he speaks in the light of his anticipations for the immediate future. At all events, he has given satisfaction as a war President, and is not without the high appreciation of a united people.

—Of the closing years of the century and of the relative position of the United States in the world's procession of nations, Dr. Vance in a recent sermon at Nashville, Tenn., said:

The last years of the century are going out in a blaze of events as startling in their character as they must be widespread in their influence. The great Chinese Empire, after more than 3,000 years of national continuity, seems on the brink of dismemberment. Russia is forging across Siberia for the Eastern Sea and has reached her goal at Port Arthur. The last vestige of Spanish power has been swept from the Western Hemisphere, and her hold weakened, if not entirely broken, in the Pacific. Great Britain has conquered Khalifa and acquired the Soudan. English-speaking people have learned that they are friends, and must confederate for the world's good. The powers have at last spoken out, and ordered the Sultan to withdraw every Moslem soldier from Crete. The Czar of Russia has asked for a conference lookidg to the disarmament of nations, and the arranging of terms for universal peace. What does all this mean but that God is building here on the summit of the century a throne of unsurpassed privilege and unexampled power? It is a great time in which to live. It is a royal era for national greatness and opportunity. Whatever the outlook may be to the citizens of other countries, the vision which breaks upon American citizenship, as it looks backward and forward from the top of the century, is as fair a picture as the lavish hand of a generous God ever painted on the sky of a nation's hope.

—The Emperor and Empress of Germany are on their way to the Holy Land via Constantinople, and the trip is exciting much comment in various parts of the world. His own people have objected to this visit because of the unsettled state of international relations and the unnecessary exposure of his life at the hands of anarchists. The Roman Catholics are objecting because of the influence it will give to Protestantism in his own country and in the Holy Land. And some, we are told, are objecting because of the expense his by-the-way call at Constantinople will be to the Sultan of Turkey, while the superstitious are predicting evil results because of the fact that he is accompanied by the Empress. But, withal, the Emperor has a mind of his own and is pushing ahead according to program. What will come of the trip we shall see by and by, but at present we are inclined to think that his call at Constantinople will neutralize any influence that he can exert for Protestantism by going on to Jerusalem.

Health, Voice, Appetite and Strength Failed—Completely Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last year my health failed entirely. My limbs were so weak that I could scarcely walk. I had no appetite and suffered with constipation. My voice failed me in the pulpit. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and very soon I saw a great improvement. In the winter I was attacked with the grip which left me weak and prostrated. I went back to my old friend, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which seems to be the thing for me." REV. C. S. BEAULIEU, pastor Christian church, Lowellville, Ohio. Remember.

—One of the results of the work of the American Relief Committee in Armenia, in behalf of the Armenian orphans, will be the enlistment and education of many of them in a purer Christianity. The sympathies of many have already been enlisted by the interest of Protestant churches in America in their welfare, and their influence will hereafter be on the side of evangelical Christianity. Many of them will become missionaries among their own people. In an address by Geo. P. Knapp, of Barre, Mass., a former missionary, and secretary of the American Relief Committee on this subject, he says:

About 4,000 of these orphans, or something less than 10 per cent., have been rescued by foreign agencies. The greater part of them are under the care of our missionaries, and the funds for supporting half of them have gone from America. But while Europeans are extending their work, it is with difficulty that we are able to continue the support of those whom we have rescued. The Germans have recently taken 100 orphans from the city of Diarbekir, where there are 5,400 widows and orphans, 400 of the latter having neither father nor mother. They have just opened a fifth orphanage in Oorfa, making the total number of children, with those supported by us, less than 450 in a city where there are 12,000 widows and orphans. In Hajin our missionaries have rescued 140 orphans out of a district containing about 1,000, and rather than turn any of these children back into darkness and degradation, they are struggling for another year with an increasing debt of $1,500. When it costs on an average but $25 a year to support one of these orphans, when he gets a Christian education and learns a trade, is it not a great pity to place our missionaries under the burden of a debt for carrying on such promising work?

Here, then, is a great opportunity for doing good that should not be overlooked, but it requires money to do this work. This committee, therefore, again appeals to the liberality of a great nation of great churches for funds to carry forward this work. Money should be sent directly to Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co., 59 Wall St., New York City.

—The Register-Review thinks we erred in placing Wellington in the Southwestern part of Kansas. Well, perhaps we did; but when we visited that city fifteen years ago it seemed to us to be in that part of the state, and if it was not according to geography it was according to population.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

FOUNDED A.D. 1728

Mailed to any address on trial, every week from now to January 1, 1899, on receipt of only Ten Cents

(Silver or Stamps)

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST has been published weekly since 1728—170 years—and is unique in illustration and literary excellence.

AMERICAN KINGS AND THEIR KINGDOMS

Will tell the stories of the several greatest money-monarchs of our country—how they acquired and how they retain their power.

THE POST'S SERIES OF PRACTICAL SERMONS

By the great preachers of the world; it gives real, personal non-sectarian help toward better living.

A page bearing this title gives an entertaining collection of short bits of that sort of reading that one does not care to miss—anecdotes, information, the strange and the wonderful are all touched upon interestingly.

THE PASSING OF THE OLD NAVY

Two charming articles on the romance, antique customs and duties of the old trading-vessels, the progress of modern naval science, and how invention has killed much of the poetry of sea life. One of the best American illustrators of marine life is now painting pictures that will accompany this series.

THE PERSONAL SIDE OF AMERICA'S GREATEST ACTORS A series of articles portraying our best-known actors in their home life, and showing its relation to their struggles and successes. The series will open in an early number with the "Personal Side of Sol. Smith Russell," to be followed by four others, profusely illustrated by photographs and original drawings.

The regular subscription price of the POST is $2.50 per year. It is offered on trial for so small a sum simply to introduce it.

There are 16 pages every week, the same size as THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, and as handsomely illustrated and printed.

THE BOOK OF THE WEEK

Will deal with the week's foremost offering from American publishers—an extensive review will be given in many cases, a reading from the book itself, a brief story of the author's life—all fully illustrated.

—The annual report of the Foreign Missionary Society appears in this paper at much length, but of special interest. It is sufficiently ample in detail to give the reader a substantial comprehension of the foreign work as carried on by the Disciples of Christ through the foreign board. The report also gives substantial ground for rejoicing and for hopefulness in Christian missions in foreign lands as well as much data for the reflective student. We hope the report will be carefully read as it ought to be by every Disciple of Christ. The material of this report well read and digested will supply substantial strength for your faith in the gospel of Christ and stimulate the love of God in your heart for humanity.

—The Morning Herald, Lexington, Ky., contains an account by a correspondent of the observance of a Jewish anniversary in the Central Christian Church of that city. The services were conducted by Rabbi Cohen, of Cincinnati. Such neighborly acts, the correspondent thinks, marks the dawn of a new era in religious history. We are glad to note that such acts of brotherly kindness are becoming more frequent in the religious world, but that such liberality should be shown by the Disciples of Christ is not strange. It is not in their nature, neither in their religion, to shun contact, contrast or comparison with other religions or religious bodies.

—J. S. Hughes, Station O., Chicago, Ill., writes that his new book on The Revelation of St. John is now ready and will be sent to the proper address of each advance subscriber on receipt of the $1.00, postage prepaid, as offered.

Special Dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

The Chattanooga Convention.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., OCT. 17.

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis, Mo.:

The city of Chattanooga has been stormed, not by yellow jack, but by the gathering clans of our missionary hosts, to whom the city has surrendered. Over twelve hundred delegates have already arrived at this writing, and it is believed the number will reach fifteen hundred before the day closes. The weather has been all that could be desired—clear, cool and bracing. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has closed a successful and harmonious convention. Total receipts for past year $78,-364,32, with a balance instead of a deficit. This amount is an increase over all previous years. Mrs. A. M. Atkinson presided in the absence of Mrs. Burgess, whose illness prevented her presence. Yesterday (Lord's day) was a glorious day. Pulpits of the city and suburbs were filled by our preachers, morning and evening, while a great audience, of about 2,500 people, joined in the communion service at the Auditorium in the afternoon. Both the Foreign and Home Boards have held their meetings, heard and approved of the reports of their secretaries, and the conventions follow this week. Both societies report decided gains. All things considered, this is one of the most remarkable annual gatherings in our history. The feeling of the convention is displayed in a canvas motto: "Jubilee Convention '99, Cincinnati, 10,000 delegates and a Million for Missions."

—For a full report of the American Christian Missionary Society's work for the year just closed send to B. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O., for a copy of the American Home Missionary for October. A copy of this report should be secured and read by every Disciple of Christ. It is the record of success and the prophecy of a grand work for the coming year. The Home Society is beginning to get under headway and will soon accomplish marvelous things.

—Announcement is made this week in the Christian Oracle of the reorganization of the Oracle Publishing Co., of Chicago, Ill., by which J. H. Garrison, of St. Louis, Mo.; W. F. Black, of Chicago, Ill.; W. S. Broadhurst, of Louisville, Ky., and A. O. Garrison, of San Francisco, Cal., were constituted a new board of directors. W. S. Broadhurst, who has purchased an interest in the Oracle Publishing Co., and who was elected business manager of the reorganized company, will soon remove his entire business from Louisville, Ky., to Chicago, but the company will retain a branch office at 163 and 165 Fourth Ave., Louisville, Ky. A. O. Garrison has become the managing editor of the Oracle, but no change in its appearance, make up, or plans, will be announced until the close of the present year.

—The tendency of the times toward liberality in civil and religious laws and customs has received renewed and additional strength in the new marriage and divorce law recently passed by the General Conference of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The law proposed for adoption absolutely forbade the remarriage of any divorced person during the lifetime of the other party. But this law was rejected, and by a majority of one vote a law permitting the remarriage of the innocent party divorced for the cause of adultery and the innocent party of a cause arising before marriage was enacted in its stead. This measure is probably more in harmony with the teaching of Jesus on this subject, but there is danger at both ends of the line. The almost wide-open door to divorce and remarriage in many states is a sufficient warning to any religious body or community of the dangers of too great liberality. On the other hand the commitment of all regulations of marriage and divorce to ecclesiastical authorities would not be without its dangers. We do not believe, therefore, that the Protestant Episcopal Church has lowered its standard on this question by this act, while it has certainly better adjusted itself to the state and to enlightened public sentiment on this question. If the state would now come forward with a more stringent and uniform law on this question we would be doubly assured of a forward movement of our civilization and its general religious caste.

PERSONAL MENTION.

J. S. Hughes, of Chicago, will hear a limited number of engagements to hold protracted meetings, devoting the first week to the Revelation, which draws a hearing from all quarters by its newness, and then follow it up with a call for recruits.

J. L. Smith, of Algonac, Mich., will close his second year's work there Dec. 25th He says that the church there has had a rapid growth at regular services during his ministry. He now desires another field, and churches in need of a pastor are requested to address him at Box 198, Algonac, Mich.

N. S. Haynes, of Chicago, will succeed J. G. Waggoner as minister of the gospel for the church at Eureka, Ill.

The Miami County Record has this to say of Bro. Fillmore's work, Peru, Ind.: "Last Sunday Rev. C. M. Fillmore began his sixth year as pastor of the Central Church in Peru. When he came here there was no organization of his people, and his first enrollment was 13 members. During the five years the number has amounted to 293. They have an excellent piece of property, as well located as any church in the city, and almost free from debt. The membership includes some of the most substantial people of the town."

W. H. Bagby, of Salt Lake City, Utah; N. M. Ragland, of Fayetteville, Ark.; S. M. Martin, from Dallas, Texas; J. B. Corwine, of New London, Mo.; G. A. Hoffmann, of Columbia, Mo.; Knox P. Taylor, of Bloomington, Ill., and Sumner T. Martin, of Mason City, Ia., are some of the preachers who, passing by way of St. Louis to Chattanooga, honored this office with a call. There were others whose names have escaped our memory at this moment, but whose presence was equally appreciated.

W. A. Meloan has closed his work for the church at Blandinsville, Ill., and announces his desire to hold protracted meetings for a season. Write him as above.

R. B. Havener has resigned his work for the church at Rolla, Mo., to take effect Nov. 1st. After that date his address will be Windsor, Mo. While at Rolla eighteen months, the membership of the church was raised from 40 to 100. He asks for correspondence with churches in view of a future field of labor.

W. E. Spicer closes his work for the church at Lewiston, Ill., Jan. 1st. J. P. Lichtenberger, of Canton, Ill., recommends him to any church needing a live, energetic pastor. Write to him at Lewiston.

N. Rolla Davis, who was four years with the church at Skidmore, has moved to Maryville, Mo., that he may have the benefit of her schools for his children and would like to work for churches within reach of that city. Churches wanting a preacher should note this opportunity.

From one of our city papers we learn of the sad death of Chaplain T. S. Freeman. On Sept. 1st, in a fit of despondency and delirium from a fever, he jumped from the transport Zealandia, at Nagaskia, into the sea. He was chaplain on the Baltimore of Dewey's fleet. He was a Nova Scotian, born 30 years ago. He graduated from Bethany College, and after preaching in Texas for a year went to Logansport as pastor of the Christian Church. Mrs. Freeman has arrived there from Yokohama and the body of her husband will be shipped home for interment, although it has not yet reached San Francisco.

James Small and his wife are again at DesMoines, Ia., for a permanent home. The churches and people of DesMoines and of Iowa have extended them a hearty welcome back to their city and state.

M. Pittman, for two years minister of the church at Washington, N. C., has resigned. During his ministry $2,220 was raised and a church mortgage for the same burned. His pastorate at Washington is pronounced one of the most successful in the history of the church. He was also state superintendant of the Christian Endeavor Societies of the Christian Church and raised them to the second place on the list in the state. He is now engaged in a protracted meeting at Elizabeth City, N C, with crowded audiences. The meetings are being held in the courthouse. The church there we understand will try to secure him for regular work after the meeting.

Henry A. Major has changed from Purcell, I. T, to Ballinger, Tex. This change was mentioned last week, but by error the name was given as "Henry A. Morgan" instead of Henry A. Major. He says that the church at Ballinger numbers only about 30 names, but that several copies of the CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST are taken and the work is in a prosperous condition. They hope soon to double their numerical strength.

L. W. Kemker, of Peabody, Kan, is assisting C. E. Pomeroy in a protracted meeting at Marion. He reports the church at Peabody in a more prosperous state than formerly.

Jas. S. Helm, singing evangelist, is assisting the pastor of the church at Hennessay, Okla., C. W. Van Dolah, in a protracted meeting held in a tabernacle.

Bro. Louis Jaggard, of Howard, Kan., filled the pulpit of the church at that place acceptably during the absence of the pastor, R. E. Rosenstein, at Tyler, Tex., in September.

The Apostles' Doctrine.

"They continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine."

This was the action of the whole church at its birth in Jerusalem; nor did trouble enter until a departure from the "apostles' doctrine" had entered the congregations some years later. If, therefore, in our day, when so little is known of the "apostles' doctrine," our preachers would study and present that doctrine to their congregations, would there not be a steadfast continuance in it by those who would gladly receive it? A failure to teach the apostles' doctrine is at the bottom of the so-called religious trouble. No one can teach what he does not know, and he cannot know the apostles' doctrine until he has learned it from the same fountain head from which it came to them at Jerusalem. Their doctrine was contained and found in the Father's revelations to his former servants, the prophets, and expounded by his Son and brought to the apostles' mind at Pentecost by the Spirit. What, therefore, God had revealed concerning his purposes through Moses and the prophets Jesus and the Spirit impressed on the minds of the apostles, which became their doctrine, the belief of which gladdened the hearts of the multitudes on that great day for the church. Let us all return to the study of the apostles doctrine if we desire to have such congregations as the old Jerusalem church. There is salvation in no other church on earth, nor in any other name than that of his Son Jesus.

CHRISTIAN UNION.

JOHN. G. FEE.

All Christians see and feel the importance and necessity of such union.

The question is, What is the basis for this union?

The basis of this union is professed faith in Christ, sealed by baptism in his name, and the Bible as our guide.

This was proclaimed by our Lord in his great commission, "Go disciple all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

The divine plan is to express faith by works—spiritual conditions by overt acts. Thus the faith of Abel by the bloody sacrifice. The faith of Abraham by circumcision. The faith of the true believer in Christ by baptism in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Baptism is the act of discipleship and sustains to the actual disciple the relation that signing the national constitution does to the enfranchised citizen—it is the completing act. However loyal in heart the citizen may be, however orderly as a member of civil society, he is yet not an actual citizen—has not all the immunities and privileges of the citizen—cannot have the ballot or privileges or responsibilities of office until he shall have performed the completing act,—signed the constitution. So in the gospel plan.

Also this overt act must not be of man's devising, such as he may choose or such as a presumptuous church may decree; but that which our Lord has commanded.

Calvin said, "The word 'baptize' means immerse entirely, and it is certain that the custom of thus entirely immersing was anciently observed in the church;" and yet after this concession he affirms the papal dogma, "The church has reserved to herself the right to change the form somewhat."

We have no right to change the form, for the form is the overt act commanded, and is not a mere consecration in any way we believe sufficient, but implying the consecration. Baptism is a definite, specific act. Positive commands are enjoined by the use of specific words enjoining specific acts, like "eat," "drink," as used in the Lord's supper.

This overt act, chosen by the divine mind, is such as fitly symbolizes the designs of Christian baptism—a symbol of the washing away of sin (Acts 22:16); a symbol of our "death to sin and our resurrection to a newness to life" (Rom. 6:4); an emblem of the burial and resurrection of our Lord (Rom. 6:4; Col. 2:12); also an emblem of our own resurrection (1 Cor. 15:29). Nothing, then, short of immersion in water can be Christian baptism, can set forth in symbol these cardinal features of the gospel plan; and thus, aside from the import of the original word the very designs of baptism, as a symbol, show what Christian baptism is and must be as long as the gospel shall be proclaimed.

The inspired Word teaches by symbols as well as by words, and with this advantage: Symbols never change in import, whilst words often do. God has, therefore, set forth the facts of the gospel by symbols. To ignore or subvert these symbols is treason to the gospel plan.

Under the old dispensation God kept the symbols intact—the spotless lamb, the holy incense, the hallowed fire. These external symbols were the unchanging language of what the inward, the spiritual, should be. So under the new. We may suffer diversity of opinions, "doctrines," and maintain unity; but in faithfulness to God's plan we may not suffer the rejection of the very seal of discipleship, the symbol of the fundamental facts on which the gospel rests.

No plan of union, therefore, can be entertained that thus ignores or supplants the very seal of discipleship, the divinely appointed symbol of the facts on which the gospel stands. (See 1 Cor. 15:4.)

Further, there is no need of chisms over this ordinance. All men admit that the immersion of a true believer in water in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit is valid baptism. They can adopt this and not sin. Also, they may not ask that others co-operate with them whilst they are ignoring or subverting the very seal of discipleship, the symbol of Christian experience and the burial and resurrection of our Lord—the great fact on which the gospel stands. Further, what we in close fellowship, organized relationship, do through others, we do ourselves—we are part and parcel of the body doing the deeds.

Then, as a basis of union we must have that which was first ordained—faith in a person—Christ; baptism in his name and the Bible as our guide in matters of instruction and discipline. To this no man can object. Here all can unite.

THE MORMON-CHRISTIAN WAR.

R. B. NEAL.

The Mormons keep a standing heading to their "ad" in the Florida Philosopher; I reproduce it:

"THE MORMONS."

Have you heard about the "Mormons?" If so, through whom did you hear: from them or their enemies? The Apostle Paul said, "Prove all things, hold fast that which is good." Solomon, the wise man, said: "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him." After hearing from our enemies and learning that their arguments consist of "mob violence," "slander" and "persecution," will you listen to our side of the argument? In the days of Christ and his apostles they were everywhere spoken evil of, and Paul said: "Yea, and all that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Therefore, if you are looking for Christ's gospel do not go searching for a fashionable church. The following are a few of the many publications we keep, and they are post free upon receipt of price.

The Kinsman, of Salt Lake City, a valiant, intelligent and fearless anti-Mormon paper, that "beards the lion in his den," keeps the following standing ad free in its columns:

"DON'T BELIEVE THE GENTILES!"

No need of it. Read the the Mormon works; get your facts first-hand.

Pearl of Great Price	50
Catechism	20
Key to Theology	50
The Gospel	75
Book of Mormon	1 00

New Witness for God	1 50
Mormon Doctrine	25
Why we practice Plural Marriage, by a Mormon wife and mother	25

The very best weapons to use against this great religious fraud of the nineteenth century are their own books. I am preparing a list of them to advertise in my next tract. The tracts, leaflets and pamphlets they circulate free with such a liberal hand do not reveal the real inwardness of the system.

While the "ism" may shrink, yet it cannot refuse to be measured by yardsticks.

Joseph Smith, Jr., was brimful of "revelations," so called. He could revelate about most anything or anybody on shortest notice. He was a great "translator;" translated the Book of Mormon, the Book of Abraham and "translated and corrected" the Bible, our Bible. In my tract No. 2, "Smithianity, or Mormonism Refuted by Mormons," I give some rare and rich facts about that work. In his "translating and correcting" of the Bible he did not tinker with the Apocrypha. He explains this singular omission by a "revelation;" received the revelation March 9, 1833, at Kirtland, O. Here it is:

1. Verily, thus saith the Lord unto you concerning the Apocrypha, There are many things contained therein that are true, and it is mostly translated correctly.
2. There are many things contained therein that are not true, which are interpolations by the hands of men.
3. Verily, I say unto you, that it is not needful that the Apocrypha should be translated.
4. Therefore, whoso readeth it, let him understand, for the spirit manifesteth truth.
5. And whoso is enlightened by the Spirit shall obtain benefit therefrom.
6. And whoso receiveth not by the Spirit cannot be benefited, therefore it is not needful that it should be translated. Amen.—Doctrine and Covenant, Sec. 91, page 327, 1891 edition, published at Liverpool by Brigham Young.

They have had so many editions and made so many changes in this so-claimed inspired book, that a critic has to be careful to give date, page, section, etc., or some feeble-minded Mormon will claim that the book is misrepresented.

In an edition published at Lamoni, Ia., 1880, by the "Josephite Church," I find the same words, Sec. 88, page 248. Both wings agree that this was a genuine revelation by Joseph and give the reason why the Apocrypha was not translated by Joseph, and of course why it should not be by any one.

Reread this precious revelation. Make the first verse the major premise and the second the minor premise, and the conclusion in the third verse couldn't be reached by the longest pole of logic ever invented!

More, the reason given for translating the Old and the New Testaments is that there were "many things not true" in them.

Note the attempt to give a crippled logic a crutch in the fourth verse. Why not "the Spirit manifest the true from the false," when a man reads the Bible as well as when he reads the Apocrypha?

Ponder the cyclone logic of the last verse. If the reader would permit himself to be enlightened by the Spirit when reading the book he would obtain benefit—know the true from the false. If he would not permit himslf to be enlightened by the Spirit, if it was altogether translated correctly, he "cannot be benefited, therefore it is not needful that it should be translated!"

There is something akin to this logic in the reply of the Caliph when Alexandria was captured and he was asked what disposition should be made of the great and valuable library? His answer was, "If the books are like the Koran we don't need them, if they are not like it we don't want them, therefore burn them."

Now for a list of this revelation. Will a Mormon elder step forth and claim that he knows the true and the false in the Apocrypha? Did one ever make such a claim? If not, why not? Will one of them make the attempt to point out some of the "many things" in it "not true?"—to put his finger on one or more "interpolations" in it? If those of them who have read the Apocrypha, or any part of it, can not do this, they must face the inevitable conclusion that Joseph Smith was a pretender revelator.

If you know anything of Mormonism you know that they are great on "keys;" have so many religious "keys" that it takes a great big "ring" to hold them! It was, and no doubt is, quite a problem with the Mormons to tell the true from the false messengers and revelators. So many wanted to revelate that all, even Oliver Cowdery, were given a back seat with the statement, "Thou shalt not command him (J. Smith) who is at thy head and at the head of the church, for I have given him the KEYS of the mysteries and the revelations which are sealed, until I shall appoint unto them another in his stead." Doctrine and Covenant, page 114. In other words, Joseph had a revelation that he only held the keys and only he could revelate. Now it is very important to be able to distinguish between good and bad angels and good and bad spirits. Mormonism gives us—

"THREE GRAND KEYS,"

Sec. 129, page 459, Book of Doctrine and Covenant:

Three grand keys by which good or bad angels or spirits may be known. Revealed to Joseph, the Prophet, at Nauvoo, Ill., Feb. 9, 1843.

1. There are two kinds of beings in heaven, viz., angels who are resurrected personages, having bodies of flesh and bones.
2. For instance, Jesus said, "Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have."
3. The spirits of just men made perfect —they who are not resurrected, but inherit the same glory.
4. When a messenger comes saying he has a message from God, offer him your hand and request him to shake hands with you.
5. If he be an angel he will do so, and you will feel his hand.
6. If he be the spirit of a just man made perfect, he will come in his glory, for that is the only way he can appear.
7. Ask him to shake hands with you, but he will not move, because it is contrary to the order of heaven for a just man to deceive; but he will still deliver his message.
8. If it be the devil as an angel of light, when you ask him to shake hands he will offer you his hand and you will not feel anything, you may therefere detect him.
9. These are three grand keys whereby you may know whether any administration is from God.

Reader, what think you of the "three grand keys?"

Suppose the devil had sense enough to refuse to shake hands—and if he hasn't that much sense he hasn't sense enough to be the devil—what then?

He comes as "an angel of light," and how is he to be told from "the spirit of a just man made perfect?"

Of course, Mormons have tried these keys. If useless, unused, they are in no sense "grand keys." It was a useless revelation. What elder will step forth and tell us that he has felt the hand of an angel? What elder will step forth and tell us that he has shaken hands with the devil, and how he knew it?

These are keys and three grand ones, to unlock Joseph Smith's pretentions and expose the folly and falsity of Mormonism! I have more along this line if our readers want it.

OUR NEGLECTED MINISTRY.

T. H. KUHN.

There is a class of men in our ministry who stand close to the throne and have power with God, but not with man, who on account of age and gray hairs are not sought by the churches. For want of a more systematic ministry among the churches of the Christian brotherhood, the accumulated knowledge and religious influence of these spiritual worthies are practically lost to the church. Besides, many of these noble men who have spent their lives in self-sacrificing study and toil, are absolutely dependent upon their service in their chosen calling as a means of support in their old age. They have fought bravely and well many of the hard battles of life, agitating and defending in puldit and public debate the great principles of the Reformation. Living on meagre salaries, toiling with their hands by day, they burned the midnight oil in biblical research, that they might preach in wisdom and power the gospel of Jesus to a dying race. Having left in the background secular interests, these princely knights purchased for themselves a rugged intellectual character and undying fame. These are now the only gifts they have to place upon the altar of churches which have now entered into the fruit of their labors. It was impossible under such circumstances for them to accumulate wealth had they possessed such a disposition.

But it has been imputed to the ministry that a preacher has no financial sense. Let it be so. Men usually excel in but one point. I have known men in the possession of gaeat financial ability who had no preaching sense, who, if their lives depended upon it, could not preach a sermon. Why condemn the minister for lack of financial sense and acquit with innocence the financier utterly devoid of preaching sense? The one is just as consistent as the other. The man who, during forty years, has given his entire time and talent to the study and work of the ministerial profession, bearing the burdens and the cares of human hearts with their groanings and tears, patiently and meekly enduring the godless indifference and heartless criticisms of formal church members and a mocking world, at the same time toiling and struggling to instruct ignorant humanity and give them a higher conception of life, duty and destiny, can no more expect to succeed in financial undertakings than the man who during the same number of years has given his time and talents to business can hope to succeed in the ministry.

But in the Christian dispensation, where the children of God should meet on acommon level, it is the duty of the one to bear the burdens of the other. The minister should labor to impart spiritual instruction to the financier, and the financier should so manage his possessions as to impart financial support to the ministry. In this way the progress of human society is made possible.

One of the grave questions confronting the Church of Christ to-day is, How shall these heroes who, with bent forms and minds enriched from God's battlefield, be employed regularly to the advantage of the ministry and the church, so long as they are able for active service. They do not want charity thrust upon them; "they cannot dig; to beg they are ashamed," and the church would be disgraced. They want active service, by which they can maintain themselves. It were indeed unkind for a great church to thrust upon these bent forms the troublesome, busy, active cares of pastoral life; yet, because unable to bear these burdens they are practically retired from the ministry without the means of support in their declining years.

Some of the sectarian churches, as they are denominated, have what the Christian Church has not—a fund for the relief of superannuated ministers, whereby they are enabled to keep their aged men in employment profitable to both church and ministry so long as they are able to do active service. After this they are placed upon a salary and spend their last days on earth in ease and comfort.

We have been taught to despise ecclesiasticism and religious hierarchy and to contend earnestly for simplicity of faith and church management. Yet, a system of faith and religious principles so simple that it will not accomplish the good and reach all the conditions intended to be regulated through the divine economy of the kingdom of heaven does not fulfill the divine standard. Many of these churches, through a system which may seem to partake of religious hierarchy, are accomplishing some good things, which the Christian Church, through simplicity of faith, is not accomplishing. Now a question: Which is the greater sin before God, reaching and overcoming evil conditions in human society and doing good to humanity under what may seem to you to be a religious hierarchy, or failing to reach and overcome these evil conditions? Both may be wrong, but of the two evils give me the former. But, brethren, are we not great enough, broad enough and possessed of sufficient mental and spiritual culture to take hold of this question as children of God and solve it in the interest of humanity and the church?

"Young men for war, but old men for counsel." All of our young men, many of whom in this age of opportunities are in the possession of college degrees, may profitably sit at the feet of these aged fathers in Israel and imbibe heavenly wisdom.

The churches in the states, for the most part, are divided into groups. Could not these ministers be sent to each of the churches in their respective districts once or twice each year at a great advantage to the churches and the ministry in the district? These churches individually could readily pay for their services, thus ndered, which probably would not exceed ıe or two Sundays per church each year.

this way these preachers might be kept profitable employment and supported by e churches for whom they have spent eir lives. The churches and the younger inisters would in turn be blessed, edified ıd built up. What say you, brethren?

THE POWER OF LITTLES.

JAMES M. CAMPBELL.

"If the prophet had bid thee do some eat thing, wouldest thou not have done
" asked the servants of Naaman of their tulant master. No doubt he would! We e all ready for the great things. We ght the ordinary for the extraordinary.
›wadays no work is accounted worthy of tice that does not assume large dimen›ns. Many are unwilling to be "a lamp the chamber," if they cannot "be a star the sky." The smallest man wants the rgest platform upon which to perform.

Fain would he make the world his pedestal, Mankind the gazers, the sole figure he."

Let us to-day bring down our thoughts
›m the lofty and imposing aspects of ıristian life to a consideration of the rvice of God in little things.

I. Life is made up of little things. The eat events of life are few. Take any ıgle year. How few things stand out as ›untain peaks against the sky! In ret-spect it seems a long, level highway.
ı and on we go, through the same round daily duties. Sometimes we wish that mething would happen to break up the aseless monotony of things. It is, doubt-ss, the best kind of a life for us. In ture God attends to details. He finishes e insect's wing; he polishes the crystals the snowflake; he rounds a dew drop as refully as he does a world. The life of ırist was made up of the performance of e common duties that fall to the lot of an. Thirty years were spent in the quiet me and workshop of Nazareth, and only ree years in public life. He made no splay of his power. He performed miraes sparingly. His kingdom came not th observation. Let us learn from him t to wait for the great occasion, but to rform with fidelity the humble duties at come to us day by day.

II. The moral value of things depends ›on what is expressed by them. The ents and actions of life are not to be esti-ated by outside measurement. A seem-gly trivial event may involve important inciples and interests; the simplest act ay oe informed with spiritual qualities ıich make it great. We measure an tion by the motive, the purpose, the irit that fills it. Some actions, apparent-great, mean little; some actions, aprently small, mean much. The widow's ›o mites were a small gift, but they meant ıch. They meant sacrifice, they meant ıst in God for the morrow. The woman ıo had been a sinner and who washed the ıvior's feet with her tears and wiped em with her tresses, gave a gift as ecious as that other woman who bought ı alabaster cruse of costly ointment, which ıe poured upon the Master's head. God ›tices little things and puts upon them eir true value. A cup of cold water ven in the name of a disciple shall not se its reward.

III. Little things are great in their sum-total. According to an eminent French naturalist, were all the insects collected together they would, as to bulk, outmeasure the rest of the animal creation. Though small individually they would, in virtue of their astounding numbers, prove greater than all the birds, beasts and fishes combined. From this we learn the power of littles.

The immense cables that support the bridge that stretches between New York and Brooklyn are made up of hundreds of single wires twisted together. Singly, they are weak; unitedly, they are strong. "Holland would probably be washed away were it not for the creeping roots of certain trees that bind the coast together."

Nature is content to work little by little. The plant grows not by leaps, but by slow and imperceptible degrees. Education is obtained little by little, step by step. The mind is like a vase with a narrow neck: pour upon it little or much, you will never get a great deal in it at a time. It is by line upon line, precept upon precept, that knowledge is increased. Everything great is made up of littles.

IV. Little things supply the truest test of character. You cannot judge a man by what he does on great occasions, for then he is on the watch, knowing that he has a part to sustain. Little, unconscious acts tell what the real man is. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much." But the reverse is not always true.

It was easy for Peter to flourish his sword; it was hard for him to keep his temper before the mocking tongue of a servant maid. It is easier for a martyr to burn at the stake than to be roasted day by day in the slow fire of ingratitude, jealousy or hate.

A servant girl, in furnishing evidence of her conversion, said that she now swept in the corners under the sofa, whereas before she had not. A satisfactory testimony! Perfection comes from attention to little things. It is in little things that we are all apt to come short. Be watchful of the little things and the big things will take care of themselves.

The Religious World.

The new German Church in Jerusalem, just now receiving its finishing touches, will be dedicated on October 31, and the ceremony will be the central event in the visit of the German Emperor to the Holy Land. The visit is expected to be attended with much pomp and circumstance, the German Princes and other notables having been invited to attend. The date fixed is historic and appropriate, being the anniversary of the event which began the Reformation—the nailing of his famous theses by Luther to the church door in Wittenburg.

The church is, as far as possible, a restoration of the Church of St. Mary the Great. The richly ornamented doorway, with its round arch composed of twelve stones carved to represent the months, was found standing and in good preservation, and has been raised and built into the new structure. The foundations of the old church were found to rest on the debris of former overthrows, and, at great expense, the rock-bed was at last reached at a depth of about 50 feet for the new foundations. The new building is about 120 feet in length by 80 in breadth, while the massive stone tower, of some 150 feet high, overtops all surrounding domes and minarets, and is now perhaps the most conspicuous object seen in a bird's-eye view of the city. Behind the church is the old cloister in good preservation. Behind that again is a space to be occupied with a new hospice for pilgrims, and beneath this are vast subterranean chambers.

The entire plot of ground forms the east half of the celebrated Muristan, or Hospital of the Knights of St. John, and was the center of that famous order. It was presented by the Sultan to the German Emperor, William I., and taken possession of by the Crown Prince Frederick William when he visited Jerusalem on the occasion of the opening of the Suez Canal in 1869.

[The above account of the new German Church at Jerusalem was clipped from one of the daily papers of this city.—EDITOR.]

The following announcement of an interesting meeting to be held in this city, this month, was made in a recent issue of the St. Louis Republic:

The western section of the Pan-Presbyterian Executive Committe, which includes the United States and Canada, will meet in St. Louis, Oct. 27. It will be in session one day. A banquet at the Southern Hotel will conclude the session. This committee represents ten brahches of the Presbyterian faith. Of these ten branches of the Presbyterian faith, the same authority says:

"The Canadian Presbyterian Church, one of those represented, dates from about the middle of the eighteenth century, and is the leading denomination in the Dominion. Its first minister was Rev. George Henry, chaplain of a Scottish regiment, stationed at Quebec in 1765, and its first congregation was organized in 1787 by Rev. Alexander Spark, sent over from the Kirk of Scotland. The first Presbyterian Church in Montreal was erected in 1790, and in 1803 the first Presbytery was organized. In 1831 the 'Synod of the presbyterian Church of Canada' was formed, and in 1875 there was a general union formed of the four great divisions of the Presbyterian family in Canada. The standards of the Canadian church are the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Catechisms. At present it has 919 churches, 1,077 ministers and a membership of 740,000.

"The first Presbyterian church organized in America, according to the best authorities, was that of the Reformed Dutch Church of New Amsterdam, N. Y., in 1828. Probably the first English-speaking Presbyterian Church was that founded at Rehoboth, Md., by Rev. Francis Makemie in 1683. The first Presbytery was held in Philadelphia in 1705, and the first Synod in 1718. After dissensions the Presbyterian Churches were reunited in 1758, and steps taken to extend the organization in the United States.

"The first General Assembly met at Philadelphia, May, 1789, at which time the Westminster Confession of Faith was readopted, with three slight alterations, and the Larger and Shorter Cathechisms with but one change. This Assembly included 17 Presbyteries, 419 congregations and 180 ministers. In 1834 the Associate Reformed Church was merged into the Presbyterian Church. In 1838 this was divided into the Old and New School Presbyterians, but in 1871 they were reunited. During the separation both churches grew rapidly in numbers and educational interests, so that their union constituted the strongest Presbyterian organization in the United States, having 7,631 churches, 7,129 ministers and a membership of over 950,000.

Correspondence.

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The number of delegates and visitors in attendance upon the twenty-first annual convention of the Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia Missionary Society at the Ninth St. Christian Church, Washington, D. C , Oct. 5-7, was nearly double the number present at any previous convention. This is an evidence, not only of the growth of the Disciples of Christ, but of an increasing interest in co-operative missionary work.

J. A. Hopkins presided at the first day's session, which is known as Preachers' Day. The programme included the following: "A Working Church," by P. O. Cave; "Men for the Ministry," Peter Ainslie; "Soul-winning," D. M. Austin; "The Preacher as Pastor," W. J. Wright; "Doctrinal and Practical Preaching," H. J. Dudley; "Systematic Study of the Bible," B. A. Abbott, and the "Education of Preachers," F. D. Power.

The report of the churches given on Thursday morning showed a gratifying increase numerically and spiritually. The spiritual condition was not s ated, but as the offerings, especially for missions, show that the churches are being liberalized, we take it as an indication that they are being spiritualized.

The twenty-six churches report a membership of 4,050, with 513 additions during the year and contributions for Foreign Missions, $1,221.69; for General Home Missions, $824.96; for state missions, $1,505.37; for local missions, $1,596; for all purposes $32,818.75; value of church property, $200,000.

That our Western churches may have the opportunity of comparison with our Eastern churches I give a table of statistics containing the reports of seven of our best churches for the past year:

Church	Membership	Additions	Contributed all purposes
Baltimore
Harlem Ave ...	523	34	$5,859
Calhoun St.	443	23	2,984
Beaver Creek..	253	33	1,632
Hagerstown 1st.	405	43	2,520
Washington
Vermont Ave...	627	60	5,990
Ninth St ..	621	74	8,001
Third Church..	210	124	1,543

The delegates were much encouraged at the results of their missionary work. W. J. Wright, the evangelist, had confined his labors for the greater part of the year with the Third Church, Washington, where there is now a congregation of two hundred and ten members. He held meetings at three new points, Herndon, Southeast Washington, and North Baltimore. He delivered two hundred and one sermons and addresses and added one hundred and forty persons to the churches. H. J. Dudley had been employed as evangelist for the eastern shore of Maryland, strengthening the weak congregations and planting the cause in new places. The report of the board says, "About the first of July a new mission work was begun in Baltimore. A tent was pitched and for six weeks W. J. Wright and Hezekiah Trail conducted gospel meetings. The brethren in Baltimore greatly assisted in the work. As a result the Fourth Christian Church will be dedicated in November. The Harlem Avenue Church has secured the lot on North Fulton Avenue and ground has been broken for a new house of worship to cost about $2,000. The field is a good one and the indications are that in a few years it will be a strong church."

The Third Church, Washington, hopes soon to begin building operations. Upon October 4, 1898, their second birthday, the Church Extension board remembered them with the handsome loan of $4,000 for the purchase of house and lot provided this sum was not more than two-thirds cost of the same.

The treasurer's report showed receipts from churches, $1,520.56; from the American Christian Missionary Society, $250; from collections in the field, $430.73; total from all sources, $2,232 29. All bills were paid and a balance of $50 remains in the treasury. The convention decided to continue their support next year to the Third Church, Washington; Eastern Shore, Maryland; Mission in Baltimore, and in addition put an evangelist in the field. It is expected that the Home board will assist us to the extent of $500. The educational committee reported $314 received and two young men assisted at college. Though the churches have put at the committee's disposal only $1,380, by wise management and plan of loaning this money to students, nine young men have been prepared for the ministry.

The one great shadow that fell upon this convention was the retirement of F. D. Power, who for twenty-one years has faithfully served the society as president. The delegetes would never have consented to releasing him had it not been known to them that by relieving Bro. Power of some of his duties he would be the longer spared to us for active service.

Hardly second to the loss of Bro. Power from the presidency was the retirement of W. S. Haye, of Beaver Creek, Md., from the office of corresponding secretary. The present success of our convention work is due in no small measure to the untiring, self-sacrificing labors of this good brother. B. A. Abbott, of Baltimore, and J. A. Hopkins, of Harford County fills the vacancies. Bros. Power and Haye are continued as advising members of the board.

Space will not permit me to tell of the delightful sessions of the C. W. B. M., Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor Societies, nor of the great camp meeting we are going to establish on the Maryland shore of the Atlantic, which is destined to be a rival of Ocean Grove, of the magnificent addresses of S. R. Maxwell, C. C. Smith, A. McLean and Z. T. Sweeney, etc.

The Sunday-school at Jerusalem, Harford County, Md., secured the prize banner. The convention meets next year at Beaver Creek, Maryland. W. R. Watkins, an undenominational evangelist, was received into our fellowship.

EDWARD B. BAGBY.

New York Letter.

On Tuesday evening, Oct. the 4th, Bro. J. S. Myers, the new pastor of the First Christian Church, Philadelphia, was appropriately installed in the presence of a large congregation. The attendance represented not only the Disciples of Christ in Philadelphia, but also those of Washington, Indianapolis and New York. F. D. Power, the good Bishop of the National Capital, came over to deliver the charge to the congregation. A. B. Philputt, for ten years the faithful pastor of the Philadelphia flock, but now of the Central Church, Indianapolis, was present to charge the new pastor, his successor. S. T. Willis went over from New York to preach the sermon. G. P. Rutledge, pastor of the Third Church, Philadelphia, conducted the devotional service and Chas. Bond, of the Christian League, of the same city, pronounced the benediction. Dr. E. E. Montgomery, one of the deacons of the congregation presided, and the choir discoursed sweet music. Toward the close of the service Dr. Montgomery read letters of commendation from the First Church and the City Board of Trade, of Sedalia, Mo., expressing most fittingly the high esteem in which Bro. J. S. Myers is held by Christians and non-Christians alike, in Sedalia, where he has labored for eight years. Samuel Troth, senior elder, made a few beautiful remarks, and followed by the other elders, extended the hand of fellowship to Bro. Myers and his family. The church at Sedalia enjoyed a remarkable degree of prosperity under the leadership of J. S. Myers. During the eight years of his ministry there the church grew to a membership of eleven hundred and a mission church of five hundred was planted and substantially housed. He baptized one thousand people in that city. We sincerely hope a similar growth may result from his ministry in Philadelphia. It is his purpose to inaugurate a strong forward movement in the city of Brotherly Love. He has a splendid church, well located in a large field to back him in this enterprise and it is sincerely desired that a vigorous, aggressive campaign may be inaugurated. Success to the cause of Christ in Philadelphia, our neighboring city!

We heard only good reported of Geo. P. Rutledge, the new pastor in West Philadelphia, who a few months since succeeded Wallace C. Payne in that field. Chas. Bond, a preacher of good ability among the Disciples of Christ, as secretary of the Christian League, is waging a good warefare against many of the evils of social corruption in that city.

New York Disciples have just been favored by a visit from our beloved missionary, Bro. C. E. Randall, of Kingston, Jamaica. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions, under whose auspices he has labored in that island for twelve years, granted him a richly merited vacation last summer, which enabled him to visit once more his old home in England, and his only living sister there. On the return trip he came via New York. We had the pleasure of a few days' visit from him in our own home, through which he was endeared to us very much. Evidently he is a man who walks with God. His conversation is such as becometh the gospel of Christ. On Lord's day morning, the 9th, he preached a good discourse at the 169th Street Church and gave us many interesting facts relating to the Island of Jamaica. He said one of the greatest needs of our work there just now is a small printing press with which to issue a monthly paper, as a means of intercommunication among the Jamaican churches. The 169th Street Church was the first appealed to and responded gladly. He spoke at 56th Street Church in the evening and there received help aslo. No doubt the work in Jamaica would be greatly assisted by such a journal as is proposed. We should provide the press at once.

The Disciples' Club, of New York, is planning for the fall and winter meetings with the hope of doing a larger, broader work than last year. The program committee is making out a good bill of fare, which we hope to give in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST soon. The papers will not be quite so "churchy" as they were last season, but will deal more with literary, sociological and critical questions. It was decided at the last meeting to file in the archives of the club a copy of every paper read before the association. Bro. R. C. McWane's on "Barton W. Stone" being the first so honored. The club also decided to hold all regular meetings in the future at the 56th Street Church, because it is more central in the Greater New York than any other of our churches.

Dr. H. L. Willett and family, of Chicago, were in the city a few days recently, prior to sailing (on the 12th) for Germany, where he goes to prosecute certain advanced studies along his chosen line of work. We trust the scholarly professor may be so enlarged and strengthened by this extended course of study that he may be even an abler expounder of the divine truth as it is in Jesus than he is now. He occupied the pulpit of the 56th Street Church last Lord's day morning where, since he supplied there three months in the summer of '97, he is heard gladly. We have him booked for a sermon at 169th Street Church on his return from Europe

The Boux Burough Sunday-school Association held a large meeting at our church on the evening of the 6th and organized a Primary Teachers Union, which will hold weekly meetings to teach the lessons to their classes, also the best methods of teaching songs to the little ones. Mrs. H. E. Foster, state organizer o primary Sunday-school work organized the Union and will conduct the weekly meetings for the present. This is one of the most important branches of the Bible-school, and should receive much closer attention than is given it in most schools. I have often thought of the great need of better pedagogical methods in our Bible-school work. Would it not be a good thing for many of our stronger churches to open a teachers' and workers' training class for the purpose of developing the talents of many who with the improvement such a course would give them, could do a far more effective service? We should see to it that the lambs of the fold are fed, and with the best of food at that. S. T. WILLIS.

Texas Letter.

Our eighth anniversary as pastor and people of the Central Church was appropriately observed on the last Sunday in September, and Bro. Homan, in the Christian Courier, thus speaks of it:

M. M. Davis preached his eighth anniversary sermon as pastor of the Central Christian Church in Dallas on last Lord's day to a very large audience. He has preached 125 sermons at home and nine abroad during the past twelve months, and there have been during that time 110 additions to the church. Bro. Davis has had no time for play. He has made in the year past 1,214 pastoral visits, has helped largely in editing the Courier, has been the regular correspondent of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and has written a book, soon to come from the press, entitled "Queen Esther." The Central Church has raised and expended within these twelve months, for all purposes, $6,401.15. In three years the church debt has been reduced from $31,000 to $15,500. During the eight years of Bro. Davis' service with this church he has preached 1,101 sermons, made 9,302 pastoral visits, officiated at 180 marriages and 197 funerals; there have been 1,495 additions to the membership, and the church has raised and expended the large sum of $117,407.90.

The things which appear on paper by no means tell the whole of the life and work of the pastor of a large church in a city. The details of his work are innumerable and constantly varying. Changing conditions require frequent changes of plans. Perplexing problems face the pastor almost daily, requiring great skill and greater patience for their successful solution. He must have his hands constantly upon the pulse of the church. He must keep informed of the state of the members, and the condition of the field of labor, and be diligent and wise in discovering and meeting unfavorable symptoms. Withal the man who serves such a church year after year must be a student; otherwise his decline and that of the church are almost certain. The successful preachers have all been diligent students and unceasing workers.

Miss Mae Moss, of Denison, is the heroine of Texas just now, and well may she be. In a fearful wreck on the Central road recently, this school-girl of 18, on her way to the University of Austin, was one of a large number hurled through a bridge into Chambers Creek. Fortunately, she was neither injured nor frightened, and at once set to work to save the wounded. Wading about in the water waist-deep, she ministered to many, and saved some from drowning. All honor to this brave, young heroine!

Frank Lanehart, of Clarendon, ex-state evangelist of Louisiana, is introduced to our people in a most hearty manner by Claude Jones, and we hope the reception from the people will be as hearty.

W. B. Carnes has resigned at Cleburne, and is open to another engagement. He is one of our best preachers and pastors, and should not be allowed to lose a single service.

Henry A. Major has resigned at Purcell, I. T., and returned to Texas, locating at Ballinger. We welcome you most cordially back to Texas, my brother, and hope you will never leave us again.

J. W. Holsapple is booming the work in the Central Church at Sherman. He has been there but a short time, and yet there have been 11 additions, and the balance of their Church Extension debt paid, and the people are happy and hopeful.

B. F. Wilson, of Plano, is doing much the same in his new field. Audiences growing, additions multiplying and $3,600 raised for a new house.

J. B. Boen is assisting G. D. Smith in a meeting at Oak Cliff. The hearing is good, with about 20 additions. The little church is encouraged, and one result of the meeting will be a new house or an enlargement of the old one.

Bros. Bradley, Miller and Reynolds, three of the boy-preachers of Add Ran University, have held a good meeting at a mission point in Waco, with 16 additions.

J. C. Eubank, of Denison, has been doing some work at Pottsboro, resulting in the organization of a church of 35 members. They have a "spirit to work," and will build a house at once Edward C. Boynton, after a three years' service at Plano, returns to his old home, Hamilton, and will devote his time to the churches there and at Comanche.

Miss Fannie Malone is now in the employ of the Central Church as my assistant.

"The Possession and Use of Property."

Bro. B. B. Tyler wrote an article on the above subject, which to my mind does not exactly suit present conditions, for which reason I would like to add a little to what he says:

"There is not even an intimation that the mere possession of worldly goods—even to the point of great wealth—is in itself sinful." Over against the above quotation from Bro. Tyler's article, I want to call attention to Matt. 6:19, where the disciples were forbidden to lay up treasures on earth. This is a direct command forbidding the storing of wealth; the whole tenor of the remainder of the chapter is to the same effect. "Property and wealth are alike from God." They may be, and they may not.

Men often steal themselves rich, and likewise they are often robbed poor. The poverty mentioned in Scripture is generally spoken of in connection with oppression. The soothing words about giving alms to the poor may fit some cases, but they come with a bad grace at this time. If Bro. Tyler had defined property we could tell his meaning better and would be better able to judge whether he is right or wrong. I think property has been well defined as the result of labor. A man can own no property that has not been produced by labor. Land is not property, or if it is, it is God's property. So far as I am acquainted with the current thought on riches and poverty, the question is not so much as to the use of property, as it is on the honesty of getting wealth.

Solomon says, "The profit of the earth is for all;" in modern language: Land rent belongs to the community. If this be true, and I believe it to be so, then the landlords by taking $1,600,000,000 per year rent for the land of the United States simply rob the people of that much.

I have never seen a man who could tell of any service the landlord performs corresponding to the rent he collects, either to the tenant or to the community. Landlordism is a violation of the law of love as given by Christ.

The problem that must be solved is the relation of wages, interest and land rent. If we do not go to the bottom of the matter we may do more harm than good, as I believe Bro. Tyler's article does. The prophets and apostles said a great deal on such snbjects and I think we can well follow their example.

The danger, so far as my observation goes, is not that preachers will say too much, but rather too little. The quality of talk is apt to be poor. We are continually regaled with platitudes about harmony between capital and labor, with absolute silence on the question of the land.

The amount of wages is fixed by accessibility of land, which is determined by the tax system. The labor question is really the land question. When the land question is settled, the use of property will be easily determined.

"Who made the land?" God.

"For whom?" "For all the people."

"Who collect the land rents?" The landlords.

"What service do they perform that corresponds to this rent?" They perform no services.

I use the term land as it is used in economics, as the bare land, excluding all improvements. The great question of the age is that of economics, and the great question of economics is that of land rent.

When we get a Christian conscience on this subject it will be thrashed out and we will get the golden grains of truth.

When the church gets hold of the solution of the land question we will have a reformation that will eclipse that of Luther and Campbell.

I need hardly add, that in my opinion, Henry George is the religious reformer of the 19th century, the John the Baptist of the age of economic justice.

It has also been well said, the age of justice must precede the age of benevolence.

Cotner University.

There is no work being pushed with more vigor among the Churches of Christ just now than the work of education. The time is at hand for a great people to awaken to their duty. Our leaders in education with the aid of the press and ministry are urging with great persistence this imperative need. A few are being aroused to give liberally to this great cause. But how many thousands of the Master's wealth are being withheld? Every college we have should be endowed. To this end our educational leaders are working with untiring zeal to place our colleges upon permanent foundations financially. This God demands. The greatest work now claiming the attention of our people in the Northwest is the securing to the cause of Christian education the beautiful and substantial property of Cotner University. The trust fund now growing is being increased every week and is being pushed constantly forward by my field work. The claims against the property are held principally by four banks in Lincoln. Some years ago they offered to give us the property if we would pay the one-half of their claim $2,500. At the close of college in June, 1898, the committee appointed by the church visited the banks and received a proposition from them in writing that was a surprise to all. Their present demands are as follows:

Amount required by banks including ins		$ 26,000
Contributed by the banks		12,000
Amount required now including ins		14,000
Amount raised in cash and pledges 1897 vacation	4,000
Amount raised in cash and pledges since July, 1898	1,444,	5,444
Amount needed to obtain clear title		8,556

We earnestly ask our brethren to contribute to the trust fund that is to be held in trust to cover this demand. Money is already laid away in a safety deposit vault in Lincoln for this purpose, and contributions are now coming in quite frequently for the fund. In addition to the above there are claims to the amount of $3,000 that have already been arranged in part, without a cash demand. When we consider that for this sum a property consisting of one of the finest college buildings in the whole Northwest, a twenty-acre campus, dormitory and one hundred and thirty-four resident lots can be secured, without remaining debt, does it not appeal to you as a sacred duty to assist in the present effort.

The school has opened with atudents gathered from five states and a consecrated faculty of eleven members who are conducting the institution upon strictly a cash basis.

Our work and workers are appreciated by one of the best state universities in the land. Upon urgent invitation Pres. Aylesworth has taken the Hebrew in the State University of Nebraska, and recently members from the classes of '96, '97 and '98, after submitting their courses taken in Cotner University to examination, entered for the Master's degree without additional requirement.

Some new families have purchased homes here and others are arranging to come later.

The prospects are very promising for a good increase of students in the winter term.

Brethren, pray for this grand work in one of the most strategic fields of our country, and send me directly your pledges and cash to increase the growing trust fund. This work must be accomplished this school year. Act quickly. Ask for any information desired.

Constantinople Letter.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I write from our Eastern home, we having arrived ten days ago. The journey from the Blue Grass Region to the Levant, although long, was a pleasant one. At different points on the way during the first half of the trip we worshiped with God's people in Washington, New York and Liverpool, besides a delightful day at that ancient and most picturesque city, Chester, on the River Dee, and at Eaton Hall, a country residence—but a whole city in itself—of the Duke of Westminster, whose ancestor came over with William the Conqueror, and who is said by some to be the richest man in England. We were in company with Bro. and Sister Wholley's family and a few of their friends, ending the day with tea in their hospitable home in Chester. The last Disciple to bid us Godspeed was Sister Wholley, standing in the front of her own door—such a happy, cheerful spirit that we carried away some of with us. We regretted that we could not make a brief visit to Southport to see the families of Bros. Joe and Frank Coop, who are so well known and beloved by hosts of Christians, at whose lovely homes we were so nicely entertained when on our way to the United States last fall, and also to see other members of the church there. But time was pressing us onward and we were becoming more eager each day to reach the end of our journey. We had had almost a year's recreation in the home land with relatives and friends. Had the privilege of seeing and appreciating the growth of the churches, and had made the acquaintance of many earnest, whole-souled workers for the Master and had been strengthened and encouraged thereby. Had enjoyed Kentucky, Indiana and Missouri hospitality to such an extent as to wonder if we ever would be content again to live in a foreign land.

The parting with dear ones is too sacred to dwell upon. As I write many a sweet face appears between the lines, and there is for each one the kindest, most grateful and loving remembrance.

Crossing the English Channel from Dover to Calais we had a bird's-eye view of Northern and Eastern France, also of Switzerland, our train stopping long enough for us to see something of the city of Bale. Then again at Zurich, and the ride along the Lake of Zurich, then the Alpine scenery on through the Tyrol as far as Innspruck surpassed anything we had seen. We wanted to look out of the window without saying or hearing a word, or to go from side to side for fear of losing some of the lovely sights. It was such a piece of good fortune that we were passing this most interesting part by day light, entering Austrian territory at evening and arriving at Vienna next morning. We had been on the train since Sunday morning; then it was Tuesday. There being yet two days travel before us, it was decided to stop over a day, send a telegram to Johnie Shishmanian at Sophia, Bulgaria, to be ready to join us at that place; also send a postcard ahead to Constantinople, that we were coming.

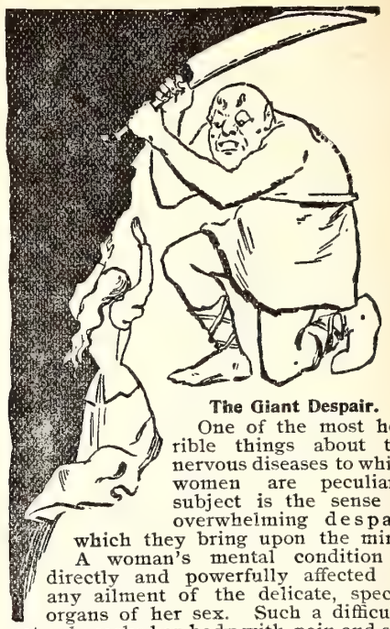
The way from Vienna lay through Budapest, Hungary, thence through Belgrade, the capital of Servia, and was without interest except the River Danube and the Francis Joseph Canal, it was also without incident, unless it was that the call for passports began at Belgrade. We had come from the United States, passed through England, France, Switzerland and Austria and not a word had been said about "passports," but to pass through these petty kingdoms passports had to be ready at a moment's warning, and on entering and leaving the country.

We recognized our approach to Sophia by seeing the form of our son on the platform of the station. With a bound he was on the train and in our car, and the year's separation was forgotten. His companion and schoolmate, accompanied by his mother, followed, and there was a joyful meeting. Mrs. Djibaroff requested me to allow Johnie to remain a few days longer, as he and her son had just returned from a long trip to the Balkans, and she added: "They are tired; Johnie's things are not ready also." We could not refuse the request altogether, she had been so kind to him and made him feel so welcome during his visit to Bulgaria, and now spoke as if she was asking a special favor of us. She agreed to send him on next day.

Leaving Sophia, then Bulgaria, behind, the entrance into Turkey was forcibly impressed upon us by the remark of a Jewish lady who was also bound for Constantinople. The stations all along the route had been lighted by electric or other bright lights, but those of Turkey had the old oil lamps and very few at that. Looking out she exclaimed, "See, see, darkness begins; we are in Turkey!" There seemed to be perceptible change, the train ran slower, the stops were longer and more frequent. There was no longer any water in the dressing-room where one could wash off the dust from blackened faces. Men in red fezzes and soldiers in big boots walked up and down, looking in and staring at us once in a while. A German consul came in with his wife and a Karass. Officers with lanterns came to look at the passport. Custom officers came to examine (carefully) each handbag, a piece of United States bunting attracting special scrutiny in one of our valises. The second night passed and morning's light revealed the welcome sight—the clear waters of the sea of Marmora. We began to name the towns as we passed: "St. Stephans," "Makri Kevy," "Samtia"—then we passed two small stations within the city limits, both equal distances from our house. But we did not see any one we knew. Then we rounded Seralio Point, a place rich in historic memories, the site of Byzantium, afterwards Constantinople, more than two thousand years.

As we steamed into the central station, we were all alert to see some one to meet us. It was still early and we drove through the streets, and to our door without meeting any one of our people; evidently they had not received our post-card. Thus we took them by surprise, though they were expecting us sometime during the week.

The house was in order, Miss Isgohi, one of the teachers, her mother and sister, with other assistance, had been busy for sometime "cleaning house," and there was a feeling of grateful contentment to find everything as it was left a year before. In a short time breakfast was ready and we had not left the table when callers began to welcome us back. They inquired of our relatives and friends, many of whose names are familiar to them, of the condition of the churches, then of the war with Spain.



One or two brought flowers, another sent two ars of "sweets" of her own make. On the wall in the hall were the words in green, "Welcome Home." In my bedroom is a piece of handwork, the industry of the schoolgirls under the direction of Isgohi. We walked over the house, the yard, then the school and playground, quite satisfied to be home again.

Some of the children came in that first day, saying they were impatient for the school to begin. When the school opened, Sept. 5th, there were 68 names; others are being recorded daily.

We are somewhat disappointed that there are as yet no new desks for the repaired rooms. The desks which Mr. Shishmanian made fifteen years ago are old and dingy; also, the seats are without backs. They are so few and out of place, and look so badly to us, fresh from the United States. Beside, we were anxious to have the rooms look tidy and inviting to Bro. and Sister Chapman when they arrive.

There were no empty seats on Lord's day and the sermons in Armenian sounded well in my ears. But the wily priests still are at work to keep the people away from school and services. Yesterday a neighbor was telling me of their doings. We will put renewed energy into our efforts. For we are encouraged by the return of children that had been taken away, and the words of an old lady patron of the school who was present at Sunday-school for the first time. She said at the close, "The Lord bless every word that has been taught these children, and may you continue to so teach them until it is so rooted in their hearts as to bear much fruit to the Lord."

The Giant Despair.

One of the most horrible things about the nervous diseases to which women are peculiarly subject is the sense of overwhelming despair which they bring upon the mind. A woman's mental condition is directly and powerfully affected by any ailment of the delicate, special organs of her sex. Such a difficulty not only racks her body with pain and suffering but burdens her with mental anguish which words can hardly describe.

Thousands of women have had a similar experience to that of Mrs. Eurath A. Williams, of Westport, Oldham Co., Ky., in which the use of Dr. Pierce's wonderful "Favorite Prescription," by imparting health and strength to the feminine organism, has not only restored complete vigor and capacity to the bodily powers but has also given renewed brightness and buoyancy of spirit.

"I suffered for over a year," says Mrs. Williams, "with indigestion and nervous prostration. I was unable to eat or sleep. I tried several physicians, but they only helped me for a short time. A friend advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pellets,' I commenced taking the medicines last May. Took three bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription,' three of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and three vials of the 'Pellets,' and am now feeling better than I have for two years. Have a good appetite, sleep well, and do not suffer from indigestion or nervousness. I have gained seven and a half pounds since taking these medicines. I have recommended Dr. Pierce's medicine to several ladies, one of whom is now taking it and is being greatly benefited."

Hiram's Jubilee Endowment.

AN APPEAL TO THE DISCIPLES OF CHRIST.

The Hiram College Jubilee is approaching. The fiftieth year of Hiram College will be completed in June, 1900. It is perhaps safe to say that no institution has ever accomplished more with the means at its command than Hiram College. With an income from endowment at no time amounting to $6,000 per year, it has done a work that has commanded not only the profoundest respect, but has won the highest admiration from all who have been familiar with its history. Of course this magnificent work could never have been done if the institution had been compelled to rely solely upon its meagre endowment. It has always had a considerable income from tuitions, and its funds have been so supplemented by the gifts of individuals and churches that it has been enabled to go forward with its gradually enlarging work to the present time, and it is to-day free from debt. To accomplish its grand work the sacrifice on the part of a few has been very great, and it has always had to depend for a large part of its income on special gifts and donations, that at best are spasmodic and uncertain. Surely, the period has now arrived when this honored institution should be placed on a solid financial basis. The addition of $250,000 to its present endowment would relieve the friends of the institution from all anxiety as to its future and enable it to enter upon a new era of usefulness with brightest prospects and well-nigh boundless possibilities for good. Will not the friends of the institution rally as one man to this work and say, "It shall be done?" Shall we not stand shoulder-to-shoulder and make the Jubilee Commencement an occasion when the old college on the hill shall be remembered in gifts by thousands of Disciples in a way to assure its perpetuity and launch it upon a career of greatly enlarged usefulness? The following considerations surely justify us in calling upon the friends of the institution to unite in one supreme effort for an adequate endowment:

1. Hiram College is pre-eminently a college of the Disciples. It was born of the churches in the early days of our great movement. It was called into being, not as a private enterprise, but to meet a want that was deeply felt by a young but rapidly growing people, and nobly it has done the work for which it was created. Its beneficent influences have been felt far and wide.

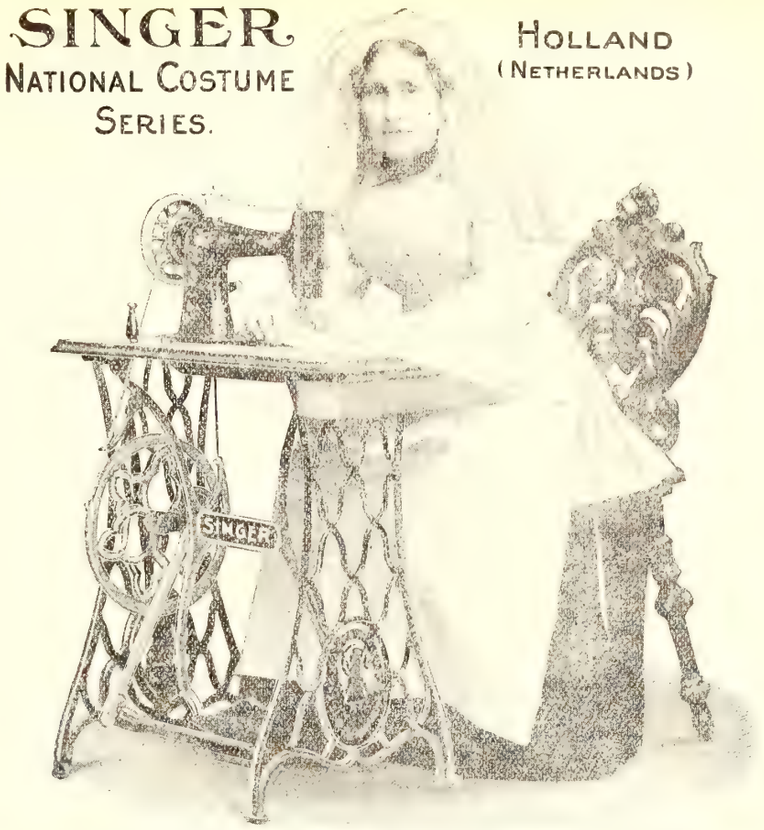
2. It has made a most honorable record. It has no unsavory history to apologize for and no mistaken policies to explain away. From the first it has been a college of the people, and right well has it performed its duty to the people who have created and fostered it. Perhaps 10,000 different students have received instruction within its walls.

3. It has an alumni numbering over 300. Its graduates have taken high rank in the ministry, in law, in medicine and in various other honorable and useful callings. Hiram trained men are always in demand, and they are reflecting honor upon their Alma Mater wherever they are found.

4. Its business management has been careful and conservative. The most rigid economy has been practiced. It has never wasted money in unwise expenditures, and it has made the people's money do the largest possible service for the people. It has never lost any money by unwise investment.

5. It occupies a place in the front rank of colleges. It maintains a high standard of work. Its courses of instruction are numerous and thorough. It meets the wants of all classes of young people in a most liberal way.

6. It has constantly sought to make a collegiate education possible to young men and women in very limited circumstances by keeping expenses down to the lowest possible limit. It has truly been the young people's friend by bringing a liberal collegiate education within the reach of young people who have to make their own way in life.



7. It has shown wonderful vitality. For years its patronage has been steadily increasing, and it occupies a continually growing place in the affections of the people.

8. It is characterized by a liberal, catholic spirit of such peculiar strength and power that the phrase, "The Hiram spirit," has come to be the synonym for genuine earnestness, liberal mindedness and freedom from cant, hypocrisy and sectarian bigotry.

9. It has always drawn the highest class of patronage. Its students are a well-natured, earnest and brainy class of young people; self-reliant, industrious and persevering. They know why they are in college. Most of them have a distinct purpose in view. They are not simply sent to college, they go to college. The moral and intellectual quality of the Hiram student body cannot be too highly spoken of. Some of the best platform speakers in the United States after standing before the Hiram student body have declared it to be remarkable for maturity and intellectual acuteness as manifested in its ability to grasp and appreciate the best thoughts presented.

Need anything more be said? If ever an institution by hard work, faithful management and unwearying devotion to the interests of the people has won the right to be heard, Hiram is that institution. We confidently expect 50,000 people at least to speak out now and declare that Hiram shall be endowed. Let the commencement in June, 1900, see this work done. Then we can turn our attention to other great interests. Do not say there will be plenty to do this without you. You are needed. Enroll your name at once among those who are moving forward in this last and supreme effort for the endowment of one of the most honored and worthy institutions of our great brotherhood. Praying for the blessing of God upon this effort, I remain

Virginia Letter.

During the next three months we shall give the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers a bi-weekly letter from the "Old Dominion." Our first intention was to write an Atlantic Seaboard letter, but quickly calling to mind our most worthy correspondent from New York City, Washington, D. C., and elsewhere we concluded 'twere better to be modest and head our letter with the caption "Virginia Letter" while located at Charlottesville, Va., the seat of the University of Virginia, and a "Georgia Letter" during the months we shall teach at Athens, the seat of the University of Georgia. We hope preachers, laymen and all Christian workers will send us items of interest from Virginia and Georgia especially for these letters.

Just before leaving Chicago I attended a most important meeting of the workers interested in the Chicago City Mission work of the Disciples of Christ. A special committee had been appointed by the American Christian Missionary Society to attend this meeting. The committee consisted of J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard, B. L. Smith, Secretary of the Home Board, and S. M. Cooper, one of our successful business men who is deeply interested in the city evangelization of Cincinnati. The meeting was a representative one and the city mission work was frankly and thoroughly discussed. All present rejoiced over the great work which has been accomplished during the last three years under the leadership of E. W. Darst, our superintendent of Chicago city missions.

Nearly every church in Chicago was represented in the meeting mentioned in the last paragraph. Bro. George A. Campbell and others felt that we had planted so many new churches in Chicago during the past three years (eight in all) that we should wait until the new organizations were housed before organizing any more through the direction of the City Mission Board. He was willing for the churches individually to plant new missions. Indeed, the City Mission Board has developed such a missionary spirit in Chicago that we cannot prevent new missions from starting up.

But he thought the funds which pass through the hands of the treasurer of the City Mission Board could be expended wisest in supporting pastors who would house the new missions; i. e., "strengthen the stakes" rather than "lengthen the cords."

There were others in this meeting especially representatives of the latest and perhaps most successful mission which has been planted by the superintendent of city missions, who felt that the wisest thing to do was to keep the superintendent of city missions constantly employed in selecting locations and wisely planting new missions. There were some, among whom was the writer, who believed in the via media—both lengthening the cords and strengthening the stakes. We were all agreed that no more important work is now before our Home Board than city evangelization, and that the work in the city of Chicago deserves and must have the hearty co-operation of our entire brotherhood.

We think it worthy of mention that the Hyde Park in Chicago has declared its intention of relieving the Home Board of any further financial responsibility. Bro. Errett Gates, who succeeded Dr. Willett, and has builded on the fine foundation for Christian work he laid, has more than doubled the financial strength of the congregation during his first year's ministry. He possesses fine organizing ability. The Hyde Park Church has not only declared itself self-supporting, but will before long purchase a lot and build. The example this congregation has set under the leadership of Bro. Gates is worthy of emulation by other mission churches. Until we have a local habitation the Hyde Park Church will be our home. The work in Chicago is advancing nobly under great difficulties. The preachers' meetings under the leadership of brethren Brandt, Oesgcher and Campbell are the best in the history of our Chicago churches.

Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Wakeley, with whom we had recently been making our home, and Mr. Hitchcock, saw Mrs. Young, Helen and myself to the train. We took the B. & O. for Wheeling, West Virginia, where Mrs. Young and Helen visited Mr. and Mrs. Clement and their two daughters, Eva and Elsie. Bro. and Sister Clement were faithful workers in our Ann Arbor church. They were some of the fruits of the C. W. B. M. work in that city. After a brief stay with our friends in Wheeling I visited Bethany, of which noble institution I shall have some things to say in my next letter. One day was spent in Pittsburg, one in Washington, where we met Bishop Power. My wife is a most excellent judge of preachers and she says Bro. Power is "the right man in the right place." We are now at the University of Virginia. Its noble dome, beautiful lawns, long arcades and the new buildings which cost a quarter of a million dollars, make it one of the noblest and most attractive universities in America from the architectural standpoint. In my next letter I shall give a brief report of the Virginia state convention at Charlottesville, which the limits of this letter will not permit me to do. I must, however, mention the crowning success of the C. W. B. M. state convention. Miss Ellen Kent, the State President, arranged a rare treat for the fine audience. Several of the leading professors of the University of Virginia made speeches endorsing our Bible work, and Dr. Charles W Kent announced that that the University of Virginia Bible Lectureship, founded by Col. Jno. B. Cary, would have a foundation of at least $10,000. This splendid announcement which filled all our hearts with joy, was followed by a most thoughtful and spiritually uplifting address, "The Divine Enterprise," by Mrs. Helen E. Moses. The outlook in Virginia is most promising for the work of the Disciples or Christ.

The Moberly Educational Conference.

As already reported in our papers, the recent Missouri convention, at Nevada, ordered an educational conference to be called at Moberly, beginning Tuesday evening, Nov. 1st, to which all who are interested in the cause of Christian education in Missouri are invited, and in the deliberations of which they are asked to take a part. As this conference is the direct result of the annual report of Christian University to the convention, it is proper to make the facts known.

For four years a few men and women in the faculty of Christian University have carried the burden of its work and met its expenses, giving out of what would be called very meager salaries about $1,000 a year. A few people in Canton, generous above their ability, have given some help, donating in the past few years probably not less than $15,000 to endowment, buildings and expenses.

The results are an attendance last year of 125, of whom 47 were ministerial students; a correspondence Bible class of more than 100, of whom about 40 were preachers—a class of students so useful to the cause that during the year 1897, although attending college, they added over 600 to their churches, and an increased attendance the present year, with prospects of unlimited usefulness if the work be continued.

Each year our people in Missouri keep in college about 100 young men preparing for the ministry. Of these about one-half are here, many in Kentucky, some in Iowa and a very few in state institutions. Our sacrifices here have been made that this very fact might be tested. It now seems demonstrated that the young people most valuable to the cause will attend colleges of our own church, if not in this state, they will go to another. This proves that we must maintain a university of our own

The growth and power of Christian University, although with too meager faculty and no money, establishes the fact that it can be made a great university, in every way worthy of this great Missouri brotherhood. To prove this beyond question has been another object of our labors here. The old objection that this location is off in a corner of the state is proved vain by the fact that students either come here or go entirely out of the state to find what they want. In this age of cheap and rapid transit, students disdain distance in their search for disirable instruction. As regards the natural features of the site, there is certainly no finer in the whole state. Every weakness can be obviated and every element of strength secured for a university here by ample endowment.

We have here four buildings and grounds that are so well adapted to university purposes that they might be reasonably estimated at $40,000, against which there are no mortgages. The endowment is now nearly $17,000 of which $8,000 are loaned on real estate, as safe as investments can be made. The rest is in the form of uncollected notes, the greater part of which bears interest collectible every year. Nearly all of these notes can be collected when due. This is a foundation for a university, not imaginary, not on paper, but real and unincumbered. The Christian people of Missouri are numerous and wealthy enough to put on this foundation an endowment of $500,000. In due time this would grow into a million dollars, and would from the first be the strongest university among our people. It does not seem worth while to call for pittances for such a work, when only thousands will maintain our self-respect. Indeed, there is little doubt that our people are ready to give thousands more promptly than fives and tens.

If in this matter we have been behind our brethren in other states, we can by prompt, hearty and united action sweep quickly to the ront. Whatever is to be done ought to be done at once. The present faculty cannot reasonably be asked to continue their work unsupported. Indifference of the brotherhood toward the work already done would give them no encouragement to go on; and they would regard their task accomplished at the end of this session. They would feel constrained to accept work where permanent results could be achieved, and it is not probable that another faculty would find encouragement to take up this work. If there has ever been an opportune time to act in this matter, it is now. How would posterity explain our destructive delay?

Sulphume, is different from all other noted specifics in not being a "patent" medicine or secret compound. It is simply and confessedly liquid sulphur, the mode of its conversion alone being withheld by the Sulphume Co., Chicago. The fact that it is a pure sulphur, however, is all sufficient to explain its immediate popularity, as the medicinal virtues of sulphur are familiar to all.

Notes and News.

E. R. Rollins, of Ardmore, I. T., says that they now have a deed for a church lot and are ready to receive money for the erection of a church building.

A PROSPERING CHURCH.—The Christian Church, Des Moines, Iowa, has given for expenses the past year, $5,114.50; missions, $3,170; for man's work $234.00; S. S., $317.00; making a grand total of nearly $9,000.00. One hundred and forty-one have been added to the church during the year, 74 by baptism.—Christian Index.

The Church of Christ at Watson, Mich., will celebrate its first anniversary Oct. 20-23, with appropriate service. A good program has been prepared.

A New Church Building.

A faithful little band here of only thirteen brethren, ten of whom are sisters, built a beautiful modern house, the finest in the town. We dedicated it yesterday clear of debt. We raised every cent of the money and dedicated clear of any incumbrance. Many shed tears for joy. This was the day of their triumph. Bro. Richardson, of Ridgeway, Bro. Gillett, of Bethany, and Bro. Bryant, of Cainsville, were here and assisted us. We will follow in a short meeting.

MORGAN MORGANS AND DAUGHTER.

Mt. Moriah, Mo., Oct. 3, 1898.

Another Dedication.

On Sept. 25th the new house of worship at Wilson, N. C., was dedicated. B. A. Abbott, Baltimore, Md., was the chief speaker of the day. B. H. Melton is the pastor of the newly homed church. The day was ideal, the audience immense, the services impressive and the offerings liberal. The church cost $9,000; of this the citizens of town gave $800, the congregation contributing the $8,200.

Kansas District Convention.

Report of the convention of the Church of Christ of the 9th district of Kansas, held at Atwood, Kansas, Sept. 27-29, 1898. The president being absent, O. L. Cook presided. Number of counties in the 9th district, twelve; number of counties represented, seven; number of delegates present, fourteen; number of ministers present, five.

We had a splendid convention, much enthusiasm. Six of the deligates drove across the prairie 110 miles that they might be present.

Many interesting papers were read and discussed, especially the paper on "Christian Endeavor Work: Its Place and Importance," by Mrs. Kate Marshall, of Colby. The paper, "The Duty, Manner and Purpose of Giving," by Rev. Walter Menzies, of Dresden, and the paper, "The W. C. T. U. and Its Work," by Mrs. C. T. Price, of Atwood, were of great interest.

On the call of committees they all responded with reports laden with suggestions for the upbuilding of the Master's cause. The committee on district work recommended: 1st. The need of county organization; 2nd. The need of a district evangelist; 3rd. A county mission fund to be used by the county committee.

A gain of 248 members over last year was reported.

The convention was spiritually alive as all could testify who attended. Much business was brought before the different committees and disposed of with energy and ability.

The convention closed by tendering a vote of thanks to the citizens of Atwood, who so royally and hospitably entertained the delegates while in their city and hoping to meet them all at the convention in Hill City next year.

More Success.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—Am right in it; building a meeting house for our congregation; here will almost complete it next week. I found a struggling little band here about ready to give up. We have bought the finest church site in the city and will soon have a comfortable place to meet it. God has helped me in this work, for which I feel very grateful. They did not think it could be done. Immersed one here last week. A. B. MOORE.

Progress at Sloan, Ia.

W. B. Clemmer, pastor of the church at Sloan, Iowa, 11 additions, $42.96 for missions, one Junior C. E. and one C. W. B. M. organized and many improvements of a substantial nature, including the building of a parsonage, during the year. They will observe Forefathers' Day and are organizing a Bethany C. E. Reading Circle. Six graduates in the Iowa State Normal Course. Diplomas conferred in public graduating exercises.

Indiana District Convention.

The annual session of the 12th Indiana district of the Christian Endeavor Society, Christian Woman's Board of Missions, Indiana Christian Missionary Society and District Sunday-school Convention, will be held at Odon, Oct. 26-28. A fine program for each has been prepared and every minister, Sunday-school superintendent and church worker in the district is especially requested to be present. Each church is expected to send reports from church, Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor and Woman's Board of Missions. A rate of one and one-third fare will be given over all railroads, when single fare is 75 cents or more. Certificates will be furnished by railway agent on purchase of tickets and must be endorsed by T. A. Cox, secretary, at convention before return. You will reach Odon over the Southern Indiana Railway, making close connection with all trains from North and South at Elnora and points east of Odon.

Christian Church, Connellsville, Pa.

The Church of Christ was organized in Connellsville about the year 1830, under the leadership of Lester L. Norton, Abram Shallenberger, Joseph Herbert and others, its nucleus being formed by a few persons previously Baptists, but who had become dissenters from the doctrines of that church and adopted the views and teachings of Alexander Campbell, who often preached in Connellsville. Services were first held in private houses, with preaching by James Darsie, J. B. Pratt, —— Young, and others. A stone church building was erected about 1840. It was sold to the Lutherans in 1874, and a church edifice was built on Pittsburg St., at a cost of $10,000. This church was sold and the present magnificent house was dedicated June 26, 1898. Among the preachers who have ministered for the church have been A. Campbell, G. D. Benedict and others. The present minister is W. R. Warren who with his people gave the convention a warm welcome.—Lighthouse Supplement.

A Voice from Arizona.

Please give prayerful attention to the following reasons, why the Christian Church should give special attention to Arizona at this time.

1. The work in Arizona has been overlooked by our people in the past, while other religious bodies have been wide awake and active in its interest.

2. It is a new field and has all the advantages that usually belong to a new field.

3. Arizona is a rich country and is growing richer every year. Whoever commands its wealth will be able to command many good things—to build meeting houses, asylums, orphan schools, orphan homes, etc., and to send the gospel to the destitute at home and abroad.

4. Arizona is not only a rich country, but a large country—as large as all the Philippine Islands together. To come nearer home, it would make fifty-five states as large as Delaware and have 270 square miles left, or ninety states as large as Rhode Island and 520 square miles left. In all this vast rich region we have but three small churches and but one small, indifferent house of worship and but one feeble preacher.

5. This is to be the home of many of the enterprising sons and daughters of the East. In helping Arizona, then, you will be helping your own sons and daughters, and will be providing them church homes that will prevent many of them from falling away and being lost, and many others it will save to the work of the Christian Church.

6. Tempe is the strategic point of the territory. The Territorial Normal School is here and is always to be here, and with its tuition free it will always be full. The large, fine brick building was not completed till this year, and there were 168 matriculations (not counting the small children) and 17 graduates this session. The number, no doubt, will increase from year to year.

7. Last, but not least, by any means, Providence seems to be leading in the work and richly blessing the efforts that are being made at this time. This is the golden opportunity. Some say the only opportunity they ever had. By the aid of a benevolent man we have a lot paid for in a fine location, but we are not able to build upon it without aid from abroad. Who will come to the help of the Lord? Who will help us in our time of need?

Our Father in heaven, bless this paper, bless the eye that reads it, the ear that hears it, the heart that feels its power and the hand that helps in the glorious work. I ask in Jesus' name. Amen! R. A. HOPPER.

State Mission Notes.

It was my great misfortune not to be able to attend the convention at Nevada, and I have been trying to get an insight into all that was done, and I find some things that I must at once bring to your attention. For instance: it was recommended by the committee on Ways and Means that State Mision Day be changed from the first Sunday in January to the first Lord's day in November. I must say that this meets my most hearty approval. The month of January is usually so cold and bleak that the country church very often fails to meet at all. It is just after the holidays when the people have spent a great deal in the festivities and are feeling uncommonly poor. But the month of November is a good-weather month, and it is the month of thanksgiving and praise. It is exceedingly fitting, therefore, that we make it the state mission month of the year.

The only thing I fear is that it will take us some time to get used to the change, and especially this year, because it will seem like taking two collections for state missions in one year. This is not true, however, as our convention year ends in September. It, however, will take heroic efforts on our part to get ready for it; the time is so short. But the greater the need of energetic work the more we ought to be ready to undertake it. For Missouri Disciples to back out from anything because it was hard to accomplish would be a new thing under the sun.

But in order to make the matter a success we must have the co-operation of all. I must ask first of all, the hearty co-operation of the county superintendents. Won't you please at once, either make a canvas of the churches in person, or address a circular letter to the churches and preachers in the county and endeavor to get them to bring this matter to the attention of the people? Can you not call for a conference of the preachers of your county and discuss the matter till they shall be full of interest in this matter? I believe that the ministry of Missouri can make this a success if they will. I have that much confidence in our people, if the need of this work is properly placed before them. I have not a single instance among all our churches where they refused to contribute at all when they were told of the need.

Therefore, I ask for the hearty co-operation of the ministry. Our money now must come from the churches as never before. I am sure that not one of our preachers in the state wants that the church should take second place in the list of Protestant Churches in the state. Yet, there are two other churches who are perilously near to us. And it will only be by the exercise of the greatest diligence that we shall be able to keep the place of honor which the providence of God has bestowed upon us. The destiny of our people in Missouri is wonderful if we but have the courage to persue it to the end. Our history is one full of inspiration; it should incite us to deeds of heroism that will hesitate at no sacrifice if only thereby the destitute places of our state are entered and captured for our King. As long as there is a place where we can plant a Church of Christ; as long as the divided condition of the church is before us; till the prayer of the Master for a united church is realized, we can't afford to lay our armor by.

I ask you, therefore, that you make Missouri Day a great day among us. Put your heart, your soul, your mind, your strength in it and our God shall give us the victory. Remember Missouri Day, the first Lords' day in November or as soon thereafter as possible.

Yours in his name. T. A. ABBOTT.

Hope for the Sick.

A few days since I got a letter from the president of a large college in which he said he was very sick and had been for months hardly able to be out of bed. He was so thoroughly tired of medicine that he quit all medicine and drugs. He also quit drinking tea and coffee; ate meat only once a day; quit using pepper, vinegar and mustard; drank large quantities of hot water between meals and took an ordinary bath twice a week. He immediately began to recover rapidly, and is now strong. He tells his students that if they get sick not to take medicine, but to quit eating for a day or two, take a hot bath to make them sweat, and rest, and they will soon be well. His college has over two thousand students.

The president of another college which has about three hundred students wrote me recently that he was suffering from obesity, nervousness and kidney troubles. I told him to do as the other college president did. He did so and in one month wrote me he had greatly improved and had lost ten pounds of his excessive fat.

Nine cases of every ten of sick headaches are cured by doing as the above college presidents did. Don't laugh at the remedy, but try it.

When I was in London, England, the celebrated Dr. T. R. Allinson told me that any disease could be cured, was cured, by very simple hygiene rules.

Most cases of constipation are cured by drinking a glass of cold water half an hour before each meal, eating plenty of fruit and eating graham bread instead of white. Medicine alone never cures constipation.

The sore throat and tender throat of preachers and orators are cured by wearing a cold wet towel around the throat at night and gargling hot water in the throat.

I am sure that half the sickness in the world comes from the use of tea, coffee, condiments, rich foods and excessive use of meats. Sleeping in bedrooms without ventilation is a great evil. For further information address the writer.

The Relation of Prayer and Results.

Last night.—I heard Prof. W. E. Newell remark to an audience of 1,500 or more (the initial session of his Monday evening fall and winter Bible class in Englewood) that the secret of the phenomenal success last season and the promising greater success during the coming months of these five classes conducted by himself in various parts of our city is that two years ago he was led to address—and secured the sought-for co-operation—about 300 Christians in our own land and in the old world, known to be mighty in prayer, and requested them to pray for this special effort, then first entered upon, to enlist the people of Chicago in Bible reading and study.

This Morning.—I read in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, from the pen of its editor, these lines concerning the Chattanooga Convention: "Many of the delegates who go there will wish to visit Lookout Mountain. Why not hold a prayer-meeting up there, and in another 'battle above the clouds,' with the invisible forces of Satan and under the leadership of Jesus Christ win a decisive victory." Why not, indeed! Do it brethren—and as farther suggested, "let each man and woman of faith among us pray for the convention."

WEST VIRGINIA.

Huntington, Oct. 10.—Two added yesterday. Three on the three previous Lord's days.—G. M. WEIMER.

NEBRASKA.

Nebraska City, Oct. 12.—Our tent meeting closed the 9th with 30 additions to the church. Good interest manifested. A. B. Hurkins, the great temperance singer, led the music.—F. C. WING, preacher.

UTAH.

W. H. Bagby reports one confession at Salt Lake City since last report. On his way to the Chattanooga convention he preached at Colorado Springs, Col., Oct. 9th and had one confession.

TEXAS.

Austin, Oct. 8.—There were five additions last Lord's day and five two weeks before. We are baptizing right along and additions every Lord's day.—J. W. LOWBER.

KANSAS.

Howard, Oct. 12.—One confession Sunday evening.—R. E. ROSENSTEIN.

Pawnee Rock, Oct. 15.—Our meeting is now five days old with six additions. My brother in flesh and in Christ, from Princeton, Ill., is doing the preaching and I am leading the song service. Audiences are splendid despite the fact that our M. E. brethren are running a meeting at the same time in a town of 300 inhabitants. But the Word will prevail.—C. D. AND ELLIS PURLEE.

Udall, Oct. 13.—I closed my work at above place last Lord's day with two additions. There have been 19 additions during the year at regular services, increasing the congregation over one-third in membership.—C. HENDERSON.

Galena, Oct. 10.—Just closed a meeting of two weeks four and one-half miles south of here. Had four additions; three by baptism and one reclaimed. The congregation was truly a mixed multitude. Many were astonished at the doctrine. So good was the attention that no one left the room during the two weeks' meeting. Would like for any church in Southeastern Kansas to correspond with me at Galena, Kas.—H. C. MCNABB.

Lansing, Oct. 15.—Since last report we have baptized three at Walula and two at Little Stranger.—H. C. BALLOU.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Perry, Oct., 10.—Just closed a 10 days' meeting at Lawson with three additions by baptism. I go next to Polk, O. T., to hold a two or three weeks' meeting.—WM. DUNKLEBERGER.

Marshall, Oct., 9.—We have just closed a tent meeting four and a half miles from Marshall; 16 were added, two reclaimed, seven from the denominations and seven by primary obedience. Money, grounds and work were donated for a church building. The brethren expect to have the house built by Christmas. We begin a meeting next Saturday at Medford, O. T.—W. S. REHORN.

Cloud Chief, Oct. 8.—I have just closed a three weeks' meeting at Oak Dale, of this county. The results were a good Sunday-school started and a church of 51 members organized: one from the Baptists and 11 by primitive obedience. I expect to give them part of my time.—A. L. TAYLOR.

MINNESOTA.

Cleveland.—Our meeting is one week old, with nine additions; one a former U. B. preacher of high standing. F. H. Sweetman is ably leading the song service. We go to Le Sueur at close of meeting here.—SAMUEL GREGG.

KENTUCKY.

Jeffersontown, Oct. 12.—We have just closed a good meeting at Fairview. There was but one addition, but much good was done in other lines of church work. Bro. Shouse, of Lexington, Ky., did the preaching. It was strong and helpful.—J. W. ROGERS

Lexington, Oct. 14.—Bro. B. B. Tyler has been with us at Broadway for three weeks. His visit has been very enjoyable and helpful to the congregation. Two services a day were held. The afternoon Bible readings were on such subjects as The Mission of the Holy Spirit, Prayer, The Books of the Bible, etc. They were the most instructive services we ever had in our church. Some great gospel theme was discussed each night, the speaker injecting his own personality in a most delightful manner into a most lucid and scriptural presentation of his subjects. The meeting will be long remembered by our people. There were 35 additions.—MARK COLLIS.

ARKANSAS.

Fayetteville, Oct. 11.—There were four conversions at the First Church on last Sunday.—N. M. RHGLAND.

MISSOURI.

Marceline, Oct. 10.—Just closed a 12 days' meeting at Twinn Grove, Ill., with six additions.—ISOM ROBERTS.

Mexico, Oct. 11.—I recently closed a short meeting at Boydsville, with eight additions to the church. Will begin a meeting at Friendship, Boone County, the 12th inst.—J. D. GREER.

Monroe City, Oct. 10.—Our meeting with the church in McPherson, Kan., closed with 28 additions. These are an excellent people and Bro. Lorton is a pastor worthy of all confidence. I am now in Monroe City, Mo. Fine audiences both A. M. and P. M. Sunday. Bro. Nicoson, the pastor, has everything in readiness for a good meeting.—D. D. BOYLE.

Maryville, Oct. 7.—Our meeting, which began Sept. 6 and closed the 29 of the month with the church at Skidmore, resulted in 20 additions; 14 new converts, two from the Cumberland Presbyterians, one from the Missionary Baptists, two by statement and one by letter. The writer did the preaching for the first week and Bro. W. H. Harris, of Grant City, Mo., the remainder of the time. He did splendid preaching and is a fine evangelist. We enjoyed his help very much indeed. This is my fourth year with the Skidmore congregation, and the church board sometime since extended me an invitation to stay with them another year. We were very sorry to leave them, but we have moved to Maryville that our children may have the advantage her superior schools. I would like to say to any congregation in reach of Maryville by team or rail which will be needing a minister for 1899, that I will be glad to serve them if suitable arrangements can be made.—N. ROLLA DAVIS.

Liberty, Oct. 15.—We have had four additions the first week of our meeting.—V. E. RIDENOUR, assisting Pastor J. M. Vawter.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Dixonville, Oct. 11.—Have just closed a meeting at Roundtree with 26 additions; 21 by confession and immersion and five otherwise. Also added 29 new members to the Y. P. S. C. E. Also held a meeting in September at St. Clans Creek with three additions.—R. W. STANCIL.

INDIANA.

Franklin, Oct. 11.—Eleven added, nine at Fillmore; eight by confession and one from the Baptists. Two were baptized at Christian Chapel. The old soldiers of Mooresville and vicinity were addressed by me on Lord's day Sept. 25, at 3 P. M.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

Milroy, Oct. 10.—Bro. C. H. De Vae has just closed an excelent three weeks' meeting here with 10 accessions. His preaching was plain but forcible, and much good seed has been sown.—W. F. FOLKS, pastor.

Jeffersonville, Oct. 14th.—We are in a successful meeting here with C. C. Cline singing for us, and many additions. Our next meeting will be at Georgetown and New Washington.—T. M. MYERS.

Muncie, Oct. 15.—Have just closed at Fairview, Ia., with 13 additions. Begin to-day at Spartansburg, Ind., and at Mt. Vernon, Ind., in November. Any church wanting me in December should write at once.—A. MARTIN.

IOWA.

Oelarin, Oct. 10.—Ten baptisms, four by statement and two confessions not yet baptized since last report. Our prospects are better and our working force increasing. May God bless the workers in all the field.—SAM B. ROSS.

Lehigh, Oct. 10.—I began a meeting here on August the 17th, assisted by G. A. Butler, of Mound City, Mo., as singing evangelist. There had once been quite a flourishing church at this place, but like all things human it has had its adversities. As is usual when a church gets stranded, a few faithful women kept the ship afloat until it could be floated off the rocks. They needed help, sympathy and encouragement. We did not receive much encouragement in undertaking to "set things in order." After the meeting had been in progress three weeks it was decided to disband, and reorganize at the close of the meeting. From the day the church disbanded the interest grew; 75 have come forward to take up the work in the new organization; among them a number of confessions. The church has taken on new life, and is well equipped for good work. We will reorganize the church, with all its auxiliaries, and close the meeting on Oct. 16th. The church will need a good pastor. We will raise his salary and get all things ready for him.—L. F. MCCRAY AND C. A. BUTLER.

M. R. Shanks reports 14 confessions at regular services, Oct. 2, at Monticello. Bro. Shanks has closed his work there that he may take a course of study in Drury College, Springfield, Mo.

CALIFORNIA.

Fortuna, Oct. 4.—Accompanied by Mrs. Markle and Sister C. P. Cone, of Hanford, we took the vacation proffered us by our congregation, by going back into the mountains 60 miles. While there we held a meeting resulting in a little organization of 18 members, 10 by confession and baptism, four from the Baptists and four who were formerly Christians. We also organized a Y. P. S. C. E. and Ladies' Aid Society. We will return the 17th to arrange the purchase of a church building from the United Brethren. Our camp was on the banks of Eel River and we spent the day casting the fly for trout and climbing the hills for deer, of which we had an abundance during our four weeks' stay, and a fine "spike buck" to carry home with us.—A. B. MARKLE.

ILLINOIS.

Stronghurst, Oct. 9.—Meeting will close next Tuesday evening. There have been 20 additions.—A. V. LINDSEY, Canton, Mo.

Stronghurst, Oct. 12.—Elder A. N. Lindsey, of Canton, Mo., closed a two weeks' meeting at this place last evening evening with 22 additions to the church.—L. A. WILSON.

Pittsfield, Oct. 10.—Seven more added yesterday. Have a Bible class for the study of the Life of Christ numbering 65; meet on Monday evenings.—R. F. THRAPP.

Blandinsville, Oct. 10.—Have just closed a two weeks' meeting at New Harmony, Pike Co., Mo., with 10 additions; nine by confession and one restored. Am now in a meeting at Jonesburg, Mo.—W. A. MELOAN.

A. O. Swartwood reports a 19 days' meeting at Walnut Corner, by W. H. Barker, with 12 additions; 11 baptisms. A. O. Swartwood was song leader.

C. E. SYMPOSIUM.

[The following symposium on our Christian Endeavor Societies was read at the National Convention at Chattanooga, on Monday afternoon of this week.—EDITOR.]

What Others are Doing for their Young People, and How they are Doing it.

There are five ways of solving the problem of the young people:

1. Do nothing for them.
2. The strict denominational society.
3. The open denominational society that gives free fellowship to other organizations.
4. The general Y. P. S. C. E. without any organization within the denomination.
5. The Y. P. S. C. E. with special organization within the denomination for oversight of the work of the Endeavor Societies.

Of ten denominations, of which information has been gathered, three have the strict denominational society; four have the open denominational society; two have the general organization of Y. P. S. C. E. with special denominational organization for oversight.

Only two of the ten have no organized method of oversight. These two rely upon addresses in conventions and conferences.

Aside from this work of guidance churches do two things for their young people:

1. They instruct them.

Seven of the ten denominations have reading courses which cover some three of the following subjects: The Bible, Missions, Denominational History and Polity, Science, Literature and History.

Of the seven denominations who have distinctively denominational organizations, either open or close, six give financial support to a man who superintends the young people's work.

Of the three who have simply Endeavor Societies, not one gives support to a leader in the work.

2. They use them.

Every one of the ten takes collections from the young people assiduously. This is right. But he that soweth bountifully shall also reap bountifully.

We should do great things for our young people. The church of God has fallen upon great times. It is an era of gigantic enterprises; in commerce, trusts and monopolies that touch every inhabitant of the land; in mechanics, achievements of stupendous power, whose very conception is dazzling; in war, tons of steel are hurled every minute, ceasing not until the enemy is utterly overwhelmed.

The church must partake of this spirit. We would stultify ourselves to do less than the greatest for our young people. Give them the best. Give it abundantly. Give it freely. Let them be full, rounded, large-hearted, broad-minded Christians whose spirits shall be stirred within them as they see the world given to iniquity and who will find no rest till this great wide world shall be wholly turned to the Lord Jesus Christ. I. J. CAHILL.

How may we best Increase the Religious Intelligence of the Christian Endeavor Societies?

One of the most blighting curses of the world is ignorance. It has filled more hearts with hatred, it has crimsoned more hands with blood, it has closed more eyes to the gleams of beauty and stopped more ears to the appeals of wisdom; it has done more to retard the progress of the race, and has contributed more largely to the misery of man than any other one thing of which I know. He is, indeed, a benefactor who contributes ever so slightly to banishing this withering curse from the world.

The church's progress has been retarded by nothing so mush as by ignorance. "When by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God." Christ has often been "crucified anew" through ignorance. Long ago Christ should have triumphed through the wisdom of his people, and yet even now he must suffer partial defeat because of their inexcusable ignorance.

Blessings of incalculable worth will come to the world where ignorance is supplanted by knowledge. Solomon says of wisdom:

"She shall give to thine head a chaplet of grace;
A crown of glory shall she deliver unto thee."

And a greater than Solomon has said: "If ye know these things, blessed are ye if ye do them;" and again, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." The people of God shall be one again; the world shall believe that Christ was sent of God; "the wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad, the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose," the "knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall fill the earth as the waters cover the sea."

To tell how a result so necessary and so beneficent as is the increasing of religious intelligence and the consequent diminishing of ignorance is to be attained is not so difficult a task; but the doing of these things—"Aye, there's the rub." "Every one of us knows better than he practices, and recognizes a better law than he obeys."

Having only hinted at the pressing necessity of increasing religious intelligence, and having but pointed to a few of the beneficent results of so doing, I shall wholly omit the mention of the many means by which we may help increase the religious knowledge of the young people, and address myself to telling how, as it seems to me, we may best increase their religious intelligence, and thus prepare them for the doing of those duties which shall soon devolve upon them. That you may remember what I say just here I shall revert to the question as stated in my subject. It is, "How May We Best Increase the Religious Intelligence of the Christian Endeavor Societies?" I answer unhesitatingly, "By the widespread, persistent and thorough use of the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses."

If I have correctly diagnosed the case, and if I value at its true worth the remedy just mentioned, I should give the prescription to every Christian Endeavor Society, and the direction should read, "To be taken every day until the patient is dead." Here is a field of untold richness in which to sow "the good seed of the kingdom." In the classes of these Reading Courses the preacher becomes a teacher, and the listener becomes a learner.

This method is best because it is the most systematic. It is a difficult task to preach systematically—to preach so that each sermon leads up to its successor, and each successor leads back to its predecessor. And even if the preacher do this systematic preaching he must contend with the systematic forgetfulness of his hearers. It is quite time that he who learns all he knows of the Bible from the sermons he hears gets almost no systematic knowledge of the sacred Scriptures. In the classroom, however, the preacher teaches and the listener learns systematically.

Again, the method is best because it is thorough. "Precept upon precept, line upon line, here a little, there a little," is a splendid motto for the teacher, but the preacher must work in a more general way. Here one can be as painstaking as the importance of the truth he is teaching demands. Here the preacher can teach more thoroughly than he can from the pulpit, and here also the pupil can learn more thoroughly than he can from the pew.

Surely, that preacher is "blind and cannot see afar off," who does not see in the Bethany Reading Courses his golden opportunity for increasing the religious intelligence of the young people of the church to which he ministers. Thousands of young people are praying—

"Open thou our eyes, that we may behold Wondrous things out of thy law;"

and it seems to me that the preacher can help answer their prayers in no way so well as by gathering them into these classes, and "teaching them the way of the Lord more perfectly."

How may we best Develop and Utilize our Christian Endeavor Forces?

1. We must cultivate a feeling of responsibility and sympathy. The church is always reponsible for the wise training of the young. Their welfare and the church's future are involved. The Lord is saying to the church as Pharaoh's daughter said to the mother of Moses, "Take this child and nurse it for me and I will give thee thy wages." The extent of the church's responsibility and power in the nurture of the young is indicated by the old proverb, "Youth and white paper take any impression" and by the fact of common observation, that youth is the formative period of life, when most is done to determine destiny. You cannot put the oak back into the acorn, the eagle back into the shell. Like a fond mother, the church must brood over her young until Christ be formed in them.

Her responsibility is in no wise diminished, but rather increased by the coming of the Y. P. S. C. E. It has aroused the latent force among the young, organized it and brought them into new and sometimes trying relations. How shall this new engine be directed? What works shall it perform? Who shall guide it? We can do nothing without sympathy. Happy, indeed, is the man who though furrows wrinkle his brow and snow crowns his temples remembers that he was young, and knows well what it is to be young, because he has sympathy. A well-known minister in a crowded omnibus expostulated with some wags who were making sport of a drunken Scotchman. The tipsy fellow appreciated it, and said in a loud voice as he finally left the omnibus: "I see ye ken what it is to be drunk yersel!"

2. We must see to it that the young people get to doing things. The talking machine has passed through a wonderful evolution in our time, but we do not want the Christian Endeavor Society to be one of its stages. The danger with the Society is that it will become a school for talkers, rather than a camp for doers, and so find its best description in Romeo's sneer to Mercutio, "A gentleman nurse, that loves to hear himself talk, and will speak more in a minute than he will stand to in a month." Let us engage hands as well as tongues. Give the young disciple a taste of actual service. When emotion all evaporates at the mouth, it leaves the soul limp and powerless. There can be too much talk; we want enough for stimulus, but beware how you allow any one to become spendthrift with his tongue.

Visit the sick, the absent, the indifferent. Carry flowers and music to the hospital and to the prison. Distribute judiciously food to the hungry and clothing to the naked. Scatter good literature until the community is sown ankle deep with its white leaves of healing. "Sampson is fighting, not talking," said the secretary.

3. We should also try to see the possibilities of Christian Endeavor. Said our tireless national superintendent, "I believe in Christian Endeavor, not for what it is, but for what it may become." It has boundless possibilities for good. May we not look upon it as the beginning of a time when the world shall be blessed with a higher type of Christian character? "Not more Christians," wrote the contemplative and philosophic Drummond, "but better Christians!" Surely the proper fruitage of Christian Endeavor will be greater delicacy of moral insight and greater conscientiousness.

The church must become more beautiful and glorious. This high tide of youthful devotion and enthusiasm will float any old hulk off the shoals into the deep water of Christian enterprise. Christian Endeavor puts the emphasis in the right place, and will eventually produce a church which will not spend so much on its own shepherding. It will inscribe upon helmet and brow, "Ich dien" (I serve), and grope its way into the crowded court and along the dark alley and down the winding stair. It will stand by the wretched and the unfriended, and speak of love and mercy and forgiveness. Wherever population is denest, wherever shadows are darkest and the need is the sorest, there the church will go, bearing balm and sympathy and succor. Then will the church be "the union of all who love in the service of all who suffer." Even Buddha declared, "Never will I seek or receive private salvation, never enter into final peace alone; but forever and everywhere will I live and strive for the univeral redemption of every creature."

Among the magnificent possibilities of Christian Endeavor in its influence direct and reflex upon the church is the accomplishment of much of its work. The time is coming when there shall be no more wars to drench the earth with blood; when there shall be no more shadows of ignorance and phantoms of superstition; when the red carnations of sinful passion shall pale into the lilies of celestial purity, and the world will be Eden-clad again. Armies shall flee away and shepherds shall tune their lutes. Every stagnant pool of corruption shall be dried up and fountains shall murmur and rivers sing. The nations shall bring their diadems and twist them into one magnificent crown for the luminous brow of Immanuel, and the universe, redeemed from sin and thrall, multitudinous and innumerable will rise like a mighty congregation and sing—

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall!
Bring forth the royal diadem
And crown him Lord of all."

Home Missions.

AMERICA FOR CHRIST.

When the books of the American Christian Missionary Society closed Sept. 30, 1898, the receipts during the year for Home Missions amounted to $39,016.05, adding to this amount the collection in November for the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization, $2,329 62, we have a total of $41,345.67, which shows a gain over the combined collection of last year of $3,446.40. We have gained 316 in the number of contributing churches and $6,352.30 in the offerings of the churches. The gain in the number of contributing Christian Endeavor Societies is 190, many having sent in offerings to the "Romig Tabernacle Fund." The year shows a loss of $2,872.55 in bequests and a loss of 340 in the number of contributing individuals.

We believe our offering from the churches would have been much larger but for the waves of war excitement which was sweeping over the country when the offering was taken. War was declared against Spain the 23rd day of April; our offering came the 1st day of May, and our ministers found it hard to get the attention and interest of the people to Home Missions in that great time of war excitement.

Great advances have been made in the work of Home Missions, many new fields have been entered, and now the board has decided to follow the flag and preach the gospel of the New Testament in Porto Rico.

Next year is the jubilee year of the American Christian Missisnary Society, and we should make it the greatest year in the history of our Home Mission work. The Home Board proposes $100,000 for Home Missions. This is the least we should plan for the jubilee year. We earnestly appeal to our brethren everywhere to help us in this holy crusade. Help us to come to the jubilee of the American Christian Missionary Society with $100,000 for Home Missions.

Started on the New Year.

Comparing the receipts for Foreign Missions for the first ten days of October with the corresponding time 1897 shows the following:

	1897	1898		Gain
Contributing Churches	10	11		1
Sunday-schools	9	8	Loss	1
Individual offerings	11	8	Loss	3
Amount	$607.52	$6,373.57		$5,766.05

Of the above amount received $5,951.76 came from a bequest.

Church Extension Receipts.

For completing chapels for week ending Oct. 8, 1898:

From churches	$399.89
From individuals	410.53
Total	$810.42
Last year, churches	$682.15
Individuals	400.25
Loss	$271.98

NOTE.—A further analysis of our receipts shows that we gained $10.28 in individual receipts, while we lost $282.26 from the churches. We also gained two in the number of contributing churches, 59 having sent during the week ending Oct. 8th this year, while 57 sent in the same time last year.

Collections should be pressed vigorously by the churches all through October. Remittances should be made to Memory Notes for Home Missions.

The Home Field is the reservoir from which the stream of beneficence must flow to all our future work. We must not let that reservoir grow smaller, but rather enlarge it.

The best expenditure of means that our brotherhood could make would be to put one hundred thousand dollars in Home Missions next year. All our enterprises would feel the stimulus at once.

"I believe it is fully in the hands of Christians in the United States, during the next twenty years, to hasten or retard the coming of Christ's kingdom hundreds of years."

The better day is dawning for Home Missions. The largest growth of the next few years will take place in this department of our work, because we have neglected it and it has fallen behind, and because there is no more fruitful field of effort, and because every mark of divine leading calls upon us to push Home Missions to the front.

The Home Board organized the work in many states; as, for instance, Nebraska, where D. R. Dungan and R. C. Barrow under the direction of the American Christian Misssonary Society, began the work and organized 122 churches. The missionaries of the Home Board have organized more than 2,100 churches in the United States.

Both good and evil have a longer leverage in the United States than anywhere else in the world. . . . He does the most to Christianize the world and to hasten the coming of the kingdom who does the most to make thoroughly Christian the United States. I do not imagine that an Anglo-Saxon is any dearer to God than a Mongolian or an African. My plea is not, save America for America's sake, but save America for the world's sake.—Josiah Strong.

God led Israel to Kadesh-Barnea and their spies came back and reported a land of milk and honey, but they feared the giants and refused to enter into the promised land. God leads us to view the great land of America; in our marvelous growth, in our successful evangelization, in our simple gospel of the New Testament, God is saying, "You are able to win this land." There are giants of sectarianism and sin, but if true to our Lord Jesus we can win.

Forefathers' Day.

Our Christan Endeavor Societies will celebrate Forefathers' Day on Oct. 23rd, 1898.

It should be a red-letter day for the study of the lives and works of the fathers of the Restoration movement.

Attractive programs have been prepared and will be sent on application. Let all Endeavor Societies prepare and plan for a great day. Begin now.

On the Rock OR,
Truth Stranger Than Fiction.
THE STORY OF A STRUGGLE AFTER THE TRUTH AS IT IS FOUND IN CHRIST.
By D. R. Dungan.

Many editions of this book have been sold and the demand increases. It is the most popular book on FIRST PRINCIPLES ever published by our people.

This volume discusses no new themes, nor does it present novel ideas upon the old theme of Christianity. Its novelty is found in protesting against novelties in religion, and insisting upon the usages of the primitive Church. It adopts a method for the discussion of salvation from sin which is, it is hoped, adapted to the popular education on the religious issues of the day. It was written for the benefit of, and is dedicated to, the People, with the prayer and hope that it will be widely read, and that it will do them good.

The author has carefully avoided technical expressions and obscure phrases, in order that it might meet their wants. He has endeavored to take these questions from the exclusive hands of the theologians, and place them in the hands of the people for their own adjudication. Will they, like the Bereans, examine the Scriptures to see whether these things be so?

Annual Report Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

The past year has been the best in the history of the society. There has been a decided gain in the amount contributed and in the number of contributors. Several new stations have been opened. Reinforcements have been sent out into four fields. The workers report that God has dealt graciously with them.

Finances.—The receipts for the year amount to $130,925.70. This is a gain over last year of $24,703.60. The contributing churches number 2,907. This is a gain over last year of 321. The churches as churches gave $45,650.20. This was a gain of $6,031.92. 960 churches contributed this year that did not do so last. 667 churches that gave last year gave nothing this. Churches that raised their full apportionment or more, 752. The Sunday-schools gave $34,334.97, a gain over last year of $4,307.75. The contributing schools amount to 3,180, a gain of 370. Schools that raised their full apportionment, 926. Churches that either gave or raised as much as $1.00, 5,868. Schools that now use the Birthday Box, 1,221. The Endeavor Societies did not do as well this year as last. The amount received from them is $2,127.76, a loss of $1,270.57. From bequests only $975.60 was received this year. As compared with last year this is a loss of $7,615.55. On the Annuity plan the society received $32,390. Last year the watchword was $100,000 for Foreign Missions by collections only. It was proposed to raise this amount from annuities and bequests. The sum was not quite reached. The receipts aside from annuities and bequests amounted to $97,363.10. This is an increase over regular receipts of $6,529.15. In five years the number of contributing churches, Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies has been more than doubled. The receipts also have been more than doubled. The missionary force in the field has been greatly increased.

The Missionaries.—At the time of the last convention Miss Hattie L. Judson died. She had been in India for five years. In May last A. F. H. Saw, of China, died of typhus fever. Gulali, a native evangelist, and Amiabai, the wife of Sampson Power, a helper in the hospital in Hurda and Jagannath, an Indian evangelist, went to their reward. Miss Oldham and Miss Rioch, of Japan; E. M. Gordon, of India; Dr. Butchart and W. R. Hunt and family, of China, came home on furlough. Dr. C. S. Durand and wife felt compelled to sever their connection with the society, on account of Mrs. Durand's health. John Johnson, of Smyrna, was married to Miss Ellen Allen. E. E. Faris and Dr. H. N. Biddle have spent most of the year in searching for a place to begin work in Africa. It is possible that Bolengi, on the Congo, will be their first station. The missionaries have enjoyed as good health as usual. They have done everything in their power for the furtherance of the gospel.

New Buildings.—In the past year the society has appropriated $22,492 for buildings. Two homes have been erected in Japan. Money was granted to help to build two small chapels, one at Innai, the other at Akozu. The believers at those places propose to pay back the money when they are able. Money was granted for a home for the young ladies in Nankin, China, and for a chapel in the same city. Also for a second home in Chu Cheo. The committee granted money for a lot and building in Shanghai, for a school and chapel, and also enough to put up two homes in that city. Money was granted for a hospital in Lu Cheo fu and also for a home. The Municipality of Hurda, India, gave a piece of ground to the mission for a girls' school. A building is in course of erection for a home for young ladies of that place. This money has been taken from the Annuity funds. Had it not been for the money received on the Annuity plan, these buildings could not possibly have been erected.

New Missionaries.—Since the last convention the following have been appointed: Dr. E. I. Osgood and wife and Dr. H. G. Welpton, to China; Miss Mildred Franklin and David and Dr. Minnie Rioch, to India. Miss Franklin will take up the work laid down by Miss Judson. Mr. and Dr. Rioch will probably open a new station. A. L. Chapman and and wife have gone to Constantinople. They will be associated with G. N. Shishmanian and family. Miss Bertha Clawson went to Japan. W. D. Cunningham and wife have been appointed to labor in Japan. On account of sickness they have not yet started for the field. Teizo Kawai has gone back to work at Akita, Japan. W. E. Gordon and S. McMullen have been appointed to aid in the work at Bilaspur, India. F. E. Stubbin has been sent from Queensland, Australia, to help in the Industrial Work at Damoh, India. He will be supported by the churches in Australia.

REPORTS FROM THE FIELD.

India.—At Hurda and the stations round about, there were forty-two added in the year; present membership, 104. In the Sunday-school there are 360 enrolled; in the day schools, 140. The number of baptisms is much larger than in any previous year. This is due, in a measure, to the relief given to the people in the famine. The gospel has been preached far and near by Mr. Wharton and his associates. Dr. Drummond reports 6,976 patients treated. In the hospital at Timarni there were 2,128 patients. G. W. Coffman has taken charge of the education of the boys. He is teaching the common branches and the Bible. Fourteen lepers were baptized during the year. Nathoo Lall has preached in 42 villages. He reports 24 baptisms at Charwa. M. J. Shah teaches two Sunday-schools, one in Timarni, the other in Rahatgaon. There are 70 children enrolled. Dr. John Panna preaches the gospel and heals the sick. A hospital and a dispensary have been built in the year. Also the bungalow in which he and his wife live. He has a Sunday-school of 25 amomg the lower caste of people.

Bilaspur.—M. S. Adams reports 24 baptisms in the year. The present membership is 66. Sunday-school attendance 80. The church has made very substantial progress. The house is usually well filled at the services. The Sunday-school is encouraging. Mrs. Adams has had charge of the food and clothing of the orphan boys at that point. S. McMullen has served as an evangelist. He has spoken at home and in the surrounding villages. The people say while listening to him, "Our deities are only stone." W. E. Gordon has worked among the boys. He is the headmaster of the school. Part of every day is given up to scriptural lessons.

Mungeli.—E. M. Gordon states that the membership at Mungeli has been almost doubled. The pupils in the day-school numbered 30; in the Sunday-school, 176. Dr. Anna Gordon has treated 6,265 patients. There are 20 lepers in the aslyum at this point. Dr. Gordon has prepared a number of women to help in the mission.

Damoh.—John G. McGavran's time has been largely given to orphanage, famine and building work. In the year about 730 children passed through the orphanage. At the present time there are about 225 boys and 93 girls. He supplied seed to the farmers of about 75 villages. He reports that the missionaries in Damoh have built a school and church costing about $400. There were 13 baptisms in the year. The church now has 34 members. A site has been secured for the ladies' bungalow. It will be finished about the close of the present year. The people are open to the gospel as never before. There is more reason than ever to hope for the conversion of many. W. E. Rambo has had charge of the orphanage since his return. He is teaching the larger boys trades. Some are taught dairying, some poultry culture, some gardening, a few tailoring. The Industrial School is conducted in the belief that a training in improved methods will contribute to a sturdier Christian character. The boys are being prepared to support themselves, and not only so, but to introduce improved methods of work among the lower people. Mrs. Rambo has given out about 800 garments. Nearly 200 of these she brought with her. She has made on her own machine most of the coats for the little boys. She visits the orphanage every morning and teaches the children Bible verses and simple songs. Miss Josepha Franklin has spent most of her time in the orphanage. She has looked after the food, clothing, bathing and general cleanliness of the girls, and has cared for the sick. She spent $1,270 in relief work during the year. She has now oversight of the girls' school. She spends five hours daily in the schoolroom, and knows every child. A half hour daily is given to the study of the Bible. The children are required to learn a few verses by heart each week. Fifteen new boys have made the good confession and been baptized. On Sundays she sings hymns and teaches the people in four or five zenanas. Sometimes as many as 20 or 30 women gather in one house. She is greeted in the town by, "Come in and sing;" after singing the people say, "Now teach us wisdom from your Bible." The doors for the gospel are open. We have only to enter. Dr. Mary McGavran reports 4,624 persons treated. In the dispensary, in the girls' orphanage and other outside work, 2,030; making a grand total of 6,654. Dr. McGavran needs a hospital. Miss Stella Franklin has used $350 in famine relief work. She has helped to care for the small boys in the mission orphange. She has also taught in the schools. She has gone out with her helpers into the villages. She has visited the women in their homes. On Friday evenings she has a class for the native Christian helpers.

Japan.—C. E. Garst has preached the gospel in Tokyo and in many towns and villages throughout the empire. He has held a a number of protracted meetings for the churches that have been organized. Miss Johnson has conducted two Sunday-schools, two women's meetings, the weekly prayer-meetings and the Junior Christian Endeavor meetings. She has taught an English class for boys twice a week, and one for women two afternoons of each week, besides an English Bible class. In addition to her other duties she has acted as treasurer of the mission. Miss Mary Rioch reports a steady growth in most departments of the work. In one school it has been necessary to squeeze in four more desks. The school is crowded. The Bible is taught a half-hour daily. Some work is done among the mothers of the children. She has taught English two hours a week in the English school connected with the mission. The Sunday services, prayer-meetings, women's meetings, show a gradual increase in attendance and interest. H. H. Guy and F. H Marshall have spent most of the year in the training school. Mr. Guy has taught Old Testament history, New Testament history, life of Christ and Paul, New Testament Greek, and has given lectures. In addition to this he has preached in one of the churches and has made a number of trips into the country. Mr. Marshall has taught New Testament exegesis, church history and New Testament Greek. He has taught English four hours a week. On Sunday evenings he has conducted an English Bible class, which is well attended. Mrs. Guy reports that a house has been bought in a thickly settled neighborhood for a school. She has been working in this district ever since she came to Japan. A little band of Christians has been gathered there. Wherever she goes she has an opportunity o talking the gospel to people. E. S. Stevens has preached and taugh regularly. Five men are taking a course in general history, Old Testament and New Testament history, miracles, parables, geography and church history. He has taught some classes in English to break down prejudice and to form friendships among the people. Dr. Stevens reports 1,715 patients treated. She reports lessons taught in the home and Sunday-school with an average attendance of 70. There are four women's meetings. All the women attend to their household duties, but they visit the sick and care for the needy. M. B. Madden reports a goodly number of baptisms at Fukushima; many saw a Christian baptism for the first time. He has the oversight of the work at Akozu and vicinity. He has made two trips to these places. He has been helped by several Japanese Christians. At the annual convention 26 young men came forward and expressed their desire to learn more about Christianity. Mrs. Madden reports two Sunday-schools held; one near their home, the other across the city. She has made over 100 calls at the homes of the people. In 35 of these she has been welcomed. The work among the women is quite difficult. No woman ever comes to the mission unless she has first been called upon. R. L. Pruett closes the year with good results. The gospel has had free course. A number turned to the Lord, and now preach the faith they once destroyed. He visits the people in their homes and in their workshops, talks to them on the streets and entertains them in his home. He has visited a number of surrounding towns, and distributed many Bibles and tracts. Mrs. Pruett reports a Sunday-school with 44 enrolled. Her memories of the little ones are pleasant. In Japan there are nine organized churches and 41 places in which meetings are held. In the year there were 129 additions. The scholars in the Sunday-schools number 702. Six young men are studying for the ministry, and 16 others are making a special study of the Bible.

China.—W. P. Bentley reports a lot purchased in the center of the American Settlement. On this lot there is a two-storied Chinese building. This will serve as a school and chapel and as a home for some of the evangelists. Mrs. Bentley has taught English and has attended the women's meetings. James Ware has preached in Shanghai, also in Tungchow and in Tsungming. He has been treasurer of the mission most of the year. In his spare hours he has helped to translate the Bible into the Shanghai dialect. C. E. Molland reports the past year the best in his missionary experience. It has not been without its difficulties, but God has used these to prove his own loving-kindness. There are at present 42 members in the church at Wuhu, and 33 pupils in the day schools. F. E. Meigs has been occupied most of the year in school work. Besides, he has continued preaching regularly in the chapel and has devoted as much time to pastoral work as he could. The school has been full. The interest has not flagged. Dr. Macklin reports 16,787 patients at the dispensaries and 760 in-patients. The medical work represents only a part of what he does. Every day he holds a short Bible class with the in-patients, and preaches to the out-patients.

On Sunday he preaches twice. Three afternoons in the week he goes out into the country to a number of out-stations. Over 6,000 portions of Scripture have been sold or given to the patients in the hospital. He has prepared several tracts. Frank Garrett has taken charge of the work at Pukeo. He has taught a class in English in the college. In the hospital he has had Bible reading every day with the patients. It has been his privilege to baptize five men. Mrs. Garrett has gone to the girls' school when she was able and talked to the women and girls there and visited some in their homes. She has taught English some in the boys' school. Miss Emma Lyon states that there has been a steady growth in spiritual life in the school. The Christian girls have shown themselves willing to do whatever they could. Some have taught Sunday-school classes, others have talked to the women who came, and others still have gone out to the homes of the people. She has also a day school at the gate-house. The pupils know a great deal about the Bible. They say they will not worship idols. Miss Lyon has charge of the women's meetings, Christian Endeavor Society, and superintends the Sunday-schools. Dr. Daisy Macklin has acted as a nurse and as a physician. She has held prayers in the wards. Some of those who came to the clinic were treated by her. She has attended others in their homes and has assisted her brother in his operations and performed some herself. Miss Kelly has spent the year working among the women. She has visited Chu Cheo and Yu Ho Tze and some other places. W. R. Hunt has preached in the market place, in the chapel, dispensary, villages, cities and homes. He baptized five persons in the year. Mrs. Hunt has accompanied her husband at times on his tours. She has gone to the homes of Christians and inquired and talked with them. Mrs. Saw made a number of trips to Lu Hoh and to the north-gate and one to Yu Ho Tze. Dr. Butchart opened work in Lu Cheo fu. He treated 2,550 patients in all. The in-patients numbered 96. A church of 12 members has been organized. Mr. and Mr. Titus have gone to Lu Cheo fu and have established themselves there. Thus far most of their time has been given to the study of the language. They address the people through an interpreter. They have assisted Dr. Butchart in his operations and in caring for the sick.

It will be of interest to know that the increase in the three great heathen fields is as follows: India, 60 per cent., Japan, 34 per cent.; China, 46 per cent.

Scandinavia.—Dr. Holck reports 15 added in Copenhagen and the present membership is 175. The church has lost several by death and by emigration. The work is moving along smoothly and is in good condition. In the church in Sweden there has been a net gain of 15. The present membership is 25. The Swedes are open to conviction and religiously inclined. The present membership in Norway is 886; scholars in the Sunday-school, 102, preaching stations, 26; contributed for self-support, $977. The reports from Norway are incomplete. On their face they show an apparent decrease. This is owing to the fact that it has been difficult to get full statistics from all the churches. Had all the additions been reported, there would have been an increase instead of a decrease.

Turkey.—Dr. Kevorkian reports for six places. The aggregate membership for these is 199. The churches have lost members by death, by emigration and by various other causes. In the Sunday-schools there are 135 children and in the day schools 96. Turkey, like Scandinavia, greatly needs more qualified men. G. N. Shishmanian reports for eight points. There are four unordained men preaching the gospel; two male teachers and three female. In the eight organized churches there are 387 members. In the day schools there are 121 boys and 79 girls.

England.—The churches report 395 baptisms and 112 other additions. There are 15 churches in all. For self-support and benevolent purposes these churches paid $15,820; for missions, $1,460. In the Sunday-schools there are 2,641 enrolled. In the Christian Endeavor Societies there are 306 members. The Cheltenham church has bought a property of its own, and, though heavily encumbered with debt, this building is a great advantage. Aside from indebtedness the buildings in England owned by the society are worth $98,307. The reports from the several churches are very enconraging.

CONCLUSION.

We record with gratitude that the churches are growing from year to year in interest and liberality More men and women are volunteering for this high service. More money is given for their support, and more prayers on their behalf are offered. The missionary spirit is extending itself in ever-deepening and ever-widening circles. More and more is there urgent need of recognizing that all that we have and all that we are belong to our Redeemer, and must be used for his honor and glory. In our churches and colleges and in our literature this cause must have a larger place than it has had hitherto. Its claims must be pressed home to the hearts and consciences until the knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

STARVING

in the Midst of Plenty.

That's what people with poor digestion are doing every day. They have no appetite, or if they do have an appetite and eat what they require, it does them no good, because the stomach does not digest it, and the fermenting mass of food becomes a source of disease, of headache, sleeplessness, languor and the thousand and one symptoms of disordered digestion. Mr. Judson A. Stanion, the great Church and Sunday-school worker, and president Christian Endeavor Union, St. Louis, Mo., says:

"I have had to be extremely careful what I ate. Many things were indigestible, and after a hearty dinner I could scarcely keep awake. I never have been sick in bed, but have had a great deal of inconvenience from indigestion. Since I learned of the merits of Stuart's Tablets I keep them in my desk or carry them in my pocket, and find that I can eat anything at all without discomfort. They were recommended to me by a friend who is enthusiastic in their praise. I cannot afford to be drowsy after lunch, and find these tablets just the thing to assist digestion and keep all my faculties wide-awake." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets promptly relieve and cure all forms of indigestion. They have done it in thousands of cases and will do it in yours. The reason is simple. They digest the food whether the stomach works or not, and that's the whole secret. At all druggists, 50 cents a box. For book on stomach diseases giving valuable advice, address F. A. As a bird that is wounded,
Dear Lord, would I fly
To thy care and protection—
Thy covert so nigh.

And in peace and contentment
With thee would I rest;
While with blessed assurance
I lean on thy breast.

For the way oft seems dreary,
The path seems so long;
And a night dark and starless
Comes down without song.

But beyond all the darkness
And pain and distress,
Is a brightness more glorious
Than tongue can confess.

So on thee all my burdens
In trust I will lay;
And will live for thee ever
Till dawns that bright day.

The Gospel Message to Childhood, and Ways of Presenting it.

LESLIE W. MORGAN.

If there is a gospel message for children it goes without saying that we should know what it is and how to present it. For in proportion as there is such a message, and in proportion to its faithful presentation, will there be live, healthy Christianity to-morrow. President David Starr Jordan says: "Our greatest duty may not be to save the parent, but to see that the child does not walk in the parent's footsteps." It is, indeed, true that if we can take care of the coming generation, time will attend to the present one. It is surprising to think how simple would be the solution of the problems of crime and intemperance if only we could stop the supply. The children occupy the field for operation, and the gospel is the power of God unto their salvation. That the gospel has a message for children, and that in some measure at least it has been presented, is evident from a comparison of the condition of children in Christian and non-Christian lands. The heritage of the majority of children in heathen lands is degradation, misery and want. Victor Hugo says: "He who has seen the misery of a woman has seen nothing; he must see the misery of a child." The three plainest footprints of Christianity are those that mark its influence on the three closely related realms of womanhood, childhood and the home.

The first question that we will consider is—

WHO SHALL PRESENT THE MESSAGE?

The message must be presented to the child through the medium of the parent, the teacher and the minister of the gospel.

1. The parent has a part because of what must be done before the child is born. When Ezekiel denied the proverb, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge," he was not denying the scientific facts of heredity, but the unreasonable doctrine that God would arbitrarily punish the innocent for the guilty. The influence of heredity is beyond dispute, and he who fails to reckon with this influence has left out of his calculations one of the prime factors in the determining of human destiny.

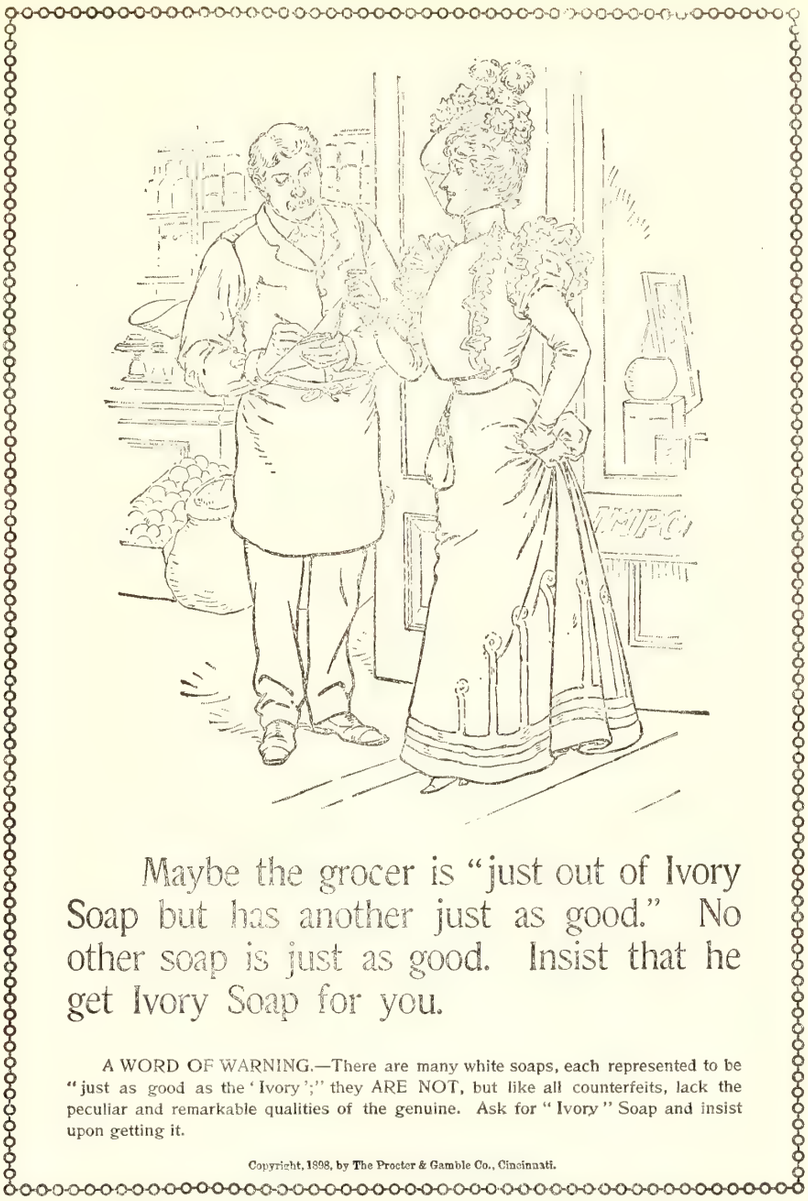
But a child may be ever so well born and yet its character, like the seed sown broadcast, will depend upon the soil and the nourishment given it. If heredity is the first factor in determining human destiny, environment is the second. If the color of a bird's feathers may be determined by the kind of food it eats, what of the coloring of the child's soul by its moral diet? For the nature of this diet the parent is largely responsible. The world never forgets that the mother rocks the cradle, whether it receives from her hands a Jesse James or a James A. Garfield. This is responsibility. The scepter must be assumed early. The hand that rocks the cradle will not rule the world unless it first rules the cradle. An iron hand may not be necessary, but a pure atmosphere is indispensable.

2. In one sense the parent is becoming less responsible for the early environment of the child. For if even the first eight years of a child's life may determine its course, there is another, besides the parent, who has an important mission to fill, even during these early years. The public school-teacher and kindergarten instructor have charge of the child three and in some cases five years of this time. The mother's work is to get the child up in the morning, give him his breakfast and send him to school; receive him at night, give him his supper and put him to bed. The teacher is the child's patron saint. There can scarcely be an over emphasis of the teacher's responsibility. She may supplement or even overcome the influence of the home, whether for good or evil. As one has said: "To study in Paris is to be born in Paris." Such is the influence of the school. There is some truth in the claim of Victor Hugo that, "there are no bad plants or bad men, but only bad cultivators." The new education is not making a mistake in laying emphasis on the fact that the real business of education is to teach men to live. In proportion as this is realized is the standard for teachers raised. The time was when the slave who was good for nothing else was given charge of the child. We have passed far beyond this point. But we have yet to learn, with Matthew Arnold, that "conduct is three-fourths of life," and contrary to him, that religion is morality touched, not simply by emotion, but by God. The state needs to realize more fully that the teacher is training citizens, and that the true citizen must have moral stamina as well as intellectual power and an active conscience as well as an active brain, and that otherwise his education will prove a curse rather than a blessing to his nation and his fellowmen. We have no sympathy with that law which banishes the Bible from the public schools, and much less with that rigid interpretation of it, as was recently the case in the capital city of the state of Missouri, where it was held that the children should not even be allowed to join their voices in saying, "Our Father." And this, too, in view of the fact that in the recent World's Congress of Religions, Catholic and Protestant, Jew, Mohammedan and Pagan, joined their voices daily in that universal prayer, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done." And all assembled in the spirit of the motto: "Have we not all one Father? Hath not one God created us?" It should not be thought for a moment, however, that the teacher cannot convey a gospel message because the Bible is taken from her desk. There are many ways left in which moral and spiritual truths may be impressed on the child-mind. And such lessons, more or less desirable, are being impressed; hence the necessity of care in the selection of teachers: that they be faithful, cultured and moral.

3. It goes without saying that the minister of the gospel has an important part in the presenting of this gospel message. He not only has a direct relation to the child, but also an indirect one through the parent and teacher, especially the teacher in the Sunday-school. He is the teacher of both parents and teachers in spiritual things. This is a difficult position to fill. It is often more difficult to invent machinery for the manufacture of tools to be used in the manufacture of other machinery, which has already been invented, than it was to make the original invention. So of the teacher of teachers—he is a rare and difficult product.

(1) The minister should be in touch with the home life of the parent, and hence with that of the child. The parents' responsibility should be impressed from the time of the child's birth. The minister should be a comparatively early caller in the home where a young life has been ushered into the world.

The question of infant dedication suggests itself here, and is open for fruitful discussion. While it is almost as much as one's ministerial head is worth for a minister among the Disciples to champion such an innovation, some are doing so. If a solemn pledge and a beautiful and impressive service would increase the parents' feeling of responsibility, and if it would not, by counter influence, decrease the natural responsibility that is felt by the parents, then welcome to the dedication service. Under any circumstances it should be impressed on Christian parents that it is their duty to raise their children for God. And the child should be impressed with the fact that this is the parents' desire and the chief burden of their prayers. It is not desirable, however, to establish any system that will cause the child to regard itself as a member of the church without any act on its own part, as is largely the case in the Roman Catholic and Episcopal Churches. Jesus taught that men are not sons of Abraham by virtue of birth, but by virtue of choice; nor sons of God by virtue of his Fatherhood, but by virtue of loving, childlike obedience to his will. The child should grow up, not in the church, but into the church. Its membership being conditioned, not on birth, but on rebirth. It should be borne in mind, however, that the child that is well born the first time, and that is well trained, will be more readily "born again." It is folly to suppose that it is necessary for a child to wander into sin in order that the work of regeneration may be made possible or complete.



(2) Sunday-school teachers should be carefully selected and trained. In the education of children the state utilizes five days of the week, and the church one twenty-fourth of one; and too often this one hour is worse than wasted by untrained teachers in an attempt to pan off a "wishy-washy" sentimentalism for religious instruction. The state is far ahead of the church in its demand for efficient teachers. In the church any pious person with a desire to "do something" is all that is often required for what is considered an efficient teacher. If the author of the Hebrew letter were superintendent of a modern Sunday-school he certainly would say to some of his teachers: "When by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that some one teach you." Like the superintendent of a public school, the minister is responsible for the methods used and the subject-matter taught by his under-teachers.

(3) But the minister has a direct relation to the child as well as that through the parent and teacher. We will consider only his relation from the pulpit.

Effort should be made to secure the attendance of the children at the Sunday morning services of the church. Various methods have been adopted to accomplish this result, and with varying success. The least preferable is to compel, through the medium of the parent; the most desirable, and in general the most successful, is to draw through the medium of the gospel. Mothers brought their children to Jesus to be blessed; doubtless children sought his presence to be taught; he commissioned his ministers to feed his lambs. Lambs are small; the fodder must not be placed too high.

As to methods it may be possible to make each sermon so simple that even the child can understand; or some portion may be specially adapted to their need and understanding; or a five or ten-minute sermonette may precede each discourse; or special services may be held at stated intervals with a sermon specially designed for the children. Object-lessons or blackboard illustrations are helpful in impressing the truth, as they appeal to both ear and eye. In general the more senses that are engaged the greater will be the interest. Object-lesson teaching was common among the prophets of old. Ezekiel at one time shaved his hair and beard, divided them into three equal parts, cast the one-third into the fire, cut up another third with his knife and cast the other third to the winds. So should it be done, he said, to Israel. Jeremiah once took a potter's vessel and going to a prominent place near the east gate of Jerusalem he preached a warning sermon, and then breaking the potter's vessel in the presence of the assembled people he cried: "Thus sayeth the Lord of hosts, Even so will I break this people and this city as one breaketh a potter's vessel." Nor are the prophets alone in the use of these methods of instruction. The very coming of Jesus to the world is an object-lesson of God to men. And this is in accord also with the methods which he used in his teaching. Witness the child set in the disciples' midst in order to teach the lesson of humility; or Jesus washing his disciples' feet in order to impress the same lesson. His lessons were from life and from the common objects of nature about him; a fisherman's net, a passing sower, a lost coin, lump of leaven, a measure of meal, a mite cast into the treasury; a sightless eye and a deaf ear; a wandering boy and a lost sheep; a patched garment and a bursting bottle—all yield lessons to Him who spake as never man spake. So may the minister of to-day draw lessons of wondrous beauty and impressiveness from the common objects of nature and the every-day occurrences of life.

The ordinances of the church—baptism and the Lord's supper—are suggestive of the same methods being used of God to keep before the mind gospel truths to impress their significance.

But by whatever means the truth may be brought before the child's mind there must be observed certain—

PRINCIPLES OF INSTRUCTION.

1. The appeal should be made, not to the memory simply, but to the reason as well; and the acceptance of any principle should not depend alone upon the authority of the teacher, but upon the reason and experience of the pupil. The mind of the child should not be looked upon as a waxen tablet upon which the teacher is to write, but as an aggregation of gray matter capable of development. Passages of Scripture should not be committed to memory without regard to the pupil's understanding, nor the catechism learned by rote as so many "firstlies, secondlies and thirdlies" in a catalogue of truths. The child should be taught the relation of truth to life. Experiments should be encouraged. Emphasis should be given to the fact that "if any man willeth to do his will he shall know of the teaching." There is no more powerful branch of Christian evidence than that of experience. One class of religious teachers seeks to produce an abiding faith by teaching the pupil to believe. Another class, on the other hand, seeks to keep the pupil on the side of truth by teaching him to think. The true position is between these two and is found by recognizing the true aim of the true teacher, viz., to teach how to live. One who believes either because of authority or because he has "thought it out," that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," may be easily moved from his position, but one who knows it from experience cannot be moved. One who recognizes this principle will not seek to force the creeds and traditions of the past on the rising generation, simply because they are hoary with age, but will rather first seek to determine whether they find sanction in the reason according to the spirit and experience of the times. Unless right methods of instruction are employed the teaching of children religious doctrines may be open to the objection that undue advantage is being taken in seeking to fasten a belief upon them which they are not capable of undertaking.

2. The child should be taught that he is free—free to think and free to act for himself; that he is not bound in thought by the traditions in the past, except they find sanction in his reason and experience; nor in action by heredity or environment, except as he voluntarily yields his will to their influence. Liberty is one of the great messages which the gospel brings to the world. And it is a message which needs emphasis in dealing with the childhood of to-day.

The theological doctrine of predestination has lost its influence, but its counterpart, the philosophy of fatalism, is very much alive indeed. This, as Dr. Van Dyke calls it, is "Calvinism with the bottom knocked out." The influence of heredity should undoubtedly be taught to the parent and that of environment to both parent and child, but not in such a way as to discourage personal effort. As Dr. Van Dyke asks, in his "Gospel for an Age of Doubt": "What could be more dispiriting than to doubt the reality of all effort, to deny the possibility of self-conquest and triumph over circumstances, to find heroism a delusion and virtue a dream? What could break the spring of life more completely than to feel that our feet are entangled in a net whose meshes were woven for us by our ancestors, and for them by tailless apes and for them by gilled amphibians, and for them by gliding worms and for them by ciliated larvæ, and for them by amœbæ, and for them God does not know what? It does not help the case in the least to do as some theologians have tried to do and bring back into the theory, by the aid of certain misconstrued and very much overworked passages of Scripture, the aid of a supreme Deity who has constructed the loom and devised the pattern of the net and decreed the weaving of every loop. The chain of fate is not made less heavy by fastening one end of it to the distant throne of an omnipotent and impassive Creator. . . . To baptize fatalism with a Christian name does not change its nature" (p. 216).

No teacher of children can fulfill his mission who believes in total depravity or predestination, or who champions the false philosophy of fatalism. To succeed he must have an overpowering faith in the possibilities in human nature. And he must inspire his pupils with the same thought. But few children are born either on the mountain peak or in the valley below, but on the mountain side, from whence they may either ascend to the summit and there build a tower or descend to the valley and there dig a pit. Each is the arbiter of his own destiny. The human will is the greatest factor in the determining of human destiny. It is the mission of the gospel to strengthen this will and inspire with hope. There is no message so well calculated to do this as the message of the gospel. It raises up an ideal before the mind, encourages to effort and insures victory. Ian Maclaren says, "Possess the soul with an ideal and one need not trouble himself about action."

There is one word more to add to what has already been said viz.:

TEACH THE TRUTH.

This may seem axiomatic, and therefore unnecessary of mention. Nevertheless, it is not only not axiomatic, but some may even deny that the truth ought to be taught in the sense that is meant.

1. The child should be taught the truth in regard to his own being. This is often withheld, and even falsehoods told in order to escape telling the truth. As if the truth would not come out in the end—and yet, perhaps, too late to save from error and possible sin. Better that the child should hear the truth from the pure lips of a discreet mother than from the foul breath of an older companion in the street or back alley.

2. Again, the child should be taught the truth concerning God and his revelation. No false impressions should be given, either by direct statement or by implication. The gospel teacher, above all others, need not be afraid of the truth. And above all others he ought to be afraid of falsehood. All that is taught that is not strictly true will either have to be unlearned, thus endangering the faith that is dependent on the falsehood, or it will remain as a part of the foundation and weaken the superstructure by so much. The child, therefore, should be taught an up-to-date theology, or perhaps it would be better to say, an up-to-date gospel. Old creeds and theories should not be forced upon the child simply because they are old or because it is feared that the child is not capable of receiving the new. What is good for the man is good for the child as far as the truth is concerned. Do not misunderstand me. I am not making a plea to have the mere speculations of the critics presented to the child, but that whatever has been established as truth should be faithfully taught. True, men do not agree as to what has been established as the truth. But for what we plead is that the truth shall not be withheld from the child simply because he is a child, and that the teacher teach the truth as he is led to see it, that the rising generation may have the full benefit of the truth discovered by the passing one.

It would be unwise, perhaps, to cite many examples where this principle should be applied, for as I have said, we do not agree as to what is the truth. But perhaps we can agree on this: That the world will be long enough in getting over the delusion of a huge black devil with black horns and a long tail, and an eternal hell burning with literal fire and brimstone, without our making use of these in order to frighten the children, and older people, too, for that matter, into the kingdom of heaven. The child should be fed, certainly, on mild, not on strong meat, but it should be the "sincere milk of the Word," pure and unadulterated.

Sunday-School Literature

THE matter of Sunday-school Literature is one of very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no importance, or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

THE GOLDEN AGE.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

With most nations the "golden age" is in the distant past, and to it men look back with regret as a time never to come again. The Hebrews, however, looked to the future with longing and hope. It was the dream of prophets and sages that in the future, more or less distant, there should be a time of victory and peace, when God should be near his people. The present lesson affords a graphic sketch of this coming age by Israel's greatest prophet. But this vision of the future was not unrelated to the present out of which it came. The prophets were not rhapsodists, who dreamed in solitude and left their thoughts for future generations to discover written on parchments in some secret place. They were men of affairs, who struggled with unhappy religious and social conditions, who attempted reforms in their own age, and who denounced impending divine wrath on the heads of offenders, or encouraged the faithful with pictures of the glory yet to be. Of such prophets, whose story has been told, Isaiah occupies the foremost place. His call to service we studied a week ago. That was in the year that King Uzziah died (737 B. C.). Nearly forty years have passed, and during that time Jotham and Ahaz have ruled over Judah, and Hezekiah is on the throne. Many things have transpired to change the current of events. The Assyrian Empire, which began its career of conquest about the time Isaiah received his call, pressed steadily westward toward the Mediterranean coastlands, those coveted territories lying on the highway between the rival powers, Egypt and Assyria. These coast kingdoms included Syria, with its capital at Damascus; Israel, with Samaria as its chief city, and Judah with its chief center at Jerusalem. In 739 B. C. the Assyrians took Hamath and Arpad, two strong cities on the eastern frontier of Syria. In 732 B. C. Damascus fell into their hands, and the independence of Syria ceased. In 722 B. C., ten years later, Samaria was destroyed, and the northern kingdom came to an end. By these events were fulfilled the prophecies of Isaiah regarding the speedy downfall of the two allied states which combined against the terror-stricken Ahaz in 733 (see Isa. 7). Still later, in 711, the Philistine territories were subdued, and in 701 the Assyrians under Sennacherib were thundering at the gates of Jerusalem.

It was just before the siege of the city began that Isaiah preached the series of sermons to which the present lesson belongs. For forty years he had foreseen the distress of the sacred city under the Assyrian invasion, and had warned his fellow-citizens to escape the danger by dependence on God and a thorough reformation in morals and politics. But they had paid little heed to his words, and were half inclined to doubt whether Assyria would ever molest them, and if she did they believed it would be no difficult enterprise to secure the help of Egypt and drive back her armies. So Isaiah tried to impress the people with the certainty of the coming trouble, which he regarded as a divine chastisement upon the sinful nation. In less than a year Ariel (Jerusalem) would be brought low (ch. 29). They were foolish enough to believe an embassy to Egypt would bring the needed help (ch. 30). Egypt never helped any one; what they needed for a defense was righteousness, not arms; their moral life was corrupt, even the women being vain and luxurious (chs. 31, 32). Then comes the great sermon of which the lesson is a part (10:5; 12:6). The Assyrian is only the divine instrument, though quietly unconscious of the fact (10:5-11). When God has used him as a means of discipline for Israel, but himself shall be humiliated (12-19). Israel shall not be destroyed, but purged; a remnant shall remain (20-23). Therefore do not fear, Israel, for your oppressor will depart (24-27). But now he is near. He is coming swiftly across the mountains of central Palestine. The cities in his path fly at his approach, or are crushed by a blow of his enormous hand (25-32). But his destruction shall be sudden and without remedy (33, 34). Thus Isaiah preaches that the enemy shall come to the very gates, but shall be overthrown, and after this there shall be a time of peace and glory. The description of that happy time, to follow soon upon the departure of the Assyrian, is in strict keeping with Isaiah's whole ministry as a prophet. He had four ideas which he emphasized in every sermon. 1. Israel has sinned; 2. Israel shall suffer punishment, and destruction shall come upon her; 3. Not all shall be destroyed—a remnant shall remain; 4. The future will be glorious; the nation will be pure; strife will cease; God will dwell with his people.

It is the fourth of these ideas which the lesson presents. The glorious future was always associated with the reign of a great king, who was to be of the stock of David. That was the royal line, and it was believed that in its perpetuation the hope of the people lay. This king was to be an ideal ruler, wise, careful of the interests of his kingdom, blessed of God with a wise and discerning mind, incapable of rendering perverted judgment or listening to the wrong side of a case of litigation. His rule would be full of blessing for the poor and the weak, but of terror to the evil-doers. Girt with righteousness and true to his word, his reign would be a time of prosperity and glory.

But the most significant feature of this coming age of gold was to be the universal peace which should prevail. Not only were nations to be at one with each other, but the old antipathy between man and beast was to pass away. The most bloody and ravenous prowlers of the forest were to live on terms of friendship with the harmless and timid creatures of the field; children should freely play with the deadliest serpents. No harm could befall in all the land of the coming king, for the knowledge and love of God would prevail everywhere. Moreover, this king would be sought by all nations, and his land would be holy and glorious, visited by men from distant regions.

In this picture will be discovered the features of an ideal picture, never yet reached, never to be reached in literal terms. They illustrate the prophetic method of speaking in figures, which were impressive by reason of their realistic and startling character. The prophet no more expected that these events would come to pass in bald literalism than the blooming gardens and springing fountains were actually expected in the desert, along the highway of the returning exiles (Isa. 35). But in these terms were clothed the high expectations of the prophet for his nation. He was compelled to use the language which men could understand. They might be willing to labor for an ideal which they could comprehend. For one merely abstract and spiritual they would not work since they could not understand it. In literal reality the words of the prophet have not come to pass, and never will. In deeper reality, however, they have met and are continually meeting a notable fulfillment. The king whom the prophet foresaw, but of the time of whose coming he was uncertain, came not as a worldly ruler of the Davidic line, but as the spiritual ruler of the world. The era of peace, the kingdom of God, is progressively being realized. The perfect age of peace has not yet come, but such advances are being made under the power of the gospel that we can begin to see the accomplishment of that hope which can only be realized in its fullness when the "earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea."

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

Jesse's family was not conspicuous in Israel, but from it came the most wonderful life in history—that of Jesus our Lord. If we could have a perfect king, a monarchy would be an ideal government; but in the kingdom of heaven we have such a king, whose wisdom, power and holiness make his rule supreme. With such a king there can be no perversion of justice nor with those who rule in his spirit. The sway of love is not inconsistent with the severest chastisements upon sin. When the gospel becomes dominant men will forget their evil purposes, and all will live in peace. There are men to-day for whom no better characterization can be found than that they are like wolves, leopards, lions and bears. These qualities will be transformed as the will of God is done in the earth. Such a time is the desire of all nations. We all hope for the day when wars shall cease and men shall live as brothers. The leading of the child is one of the features of that golden age, and it is being realized to day when childhood is being recognized, studied, prized as never in the past.

Isaac Selby.

It may not be generally known among our churches in America that there is in this country this noted preacher and lecturer of Australia. For ten years Bro. Selby was associated with the Freethought movement in Austrialia and for seven years was an accredited lecturer and writer on Freethought topics. In 1889 he embraced Christianity, and for seven years been a preacher and lecturer on Christian subjects. For five years he has been preaching for one of our largest churches in Melbourn, succeeding J. J. Haley of that church. Bro. Selby was led to Christianity largely through a debate with one of our preachers, Bro. Green, of Australia. As he himself said a few evenings ago in one of his lectures, when in this debate he spoke of the cruelties perpetrated by Christians in the middle ages, Bro. Green replied that he was not basing his argument upon so-called Christians, but Christ. When he found fault with the creeds and opinions of men, again came the reply, that they were not debating what men had taught about the Bible, but the Bible itself. This led Mr. Selby to read the Bible with the new object to learn what the Book itself taught, and as a result of this study became a believer.

During this week Bro. Selby has been giving a course of lectures in the First Christian Church of this city on the general theme, "From Atheism to Christianity and What I Learned on the Way," and I have never listened to a finer series of lectures on any subject. Mr. Selby is thoroughly acquainted with all the arguments against Christianity, having since becoming a Christian debated with the leading secularists of Australia, such as Joseph Symes, W. W. Collins and Wallace Nelson. His argument is forceful, his thought is profound and his language beautiful. I have heard many of the great thinkers and speakers of the present, but Isaac Selby ranks with the foremost along these lines. He has done our church and this community inestimable good. He should not be idle a day while in America. If you desire your church to be established more firmly along these lines, if you have infidels in your community, if there is a current of unbelief amongst the people, send for Isaac Selby to lecture for you a week and give these Freethinkers a chance to ask questions at the close of the lecture, and if theories are not scattered to the winds, and the truths of Christianity more firmly established, it is because people will not be convinced by reason. The lectures besides being convincing are also popular and will hold a mixed audience throughout the course. His stereopticon lecture on "Picturesque Australia, or Life Under the Southern Cross," if rightly managed, will pay the expenses of the entire course. Mr. Selby is at present making his home in this city, where he can be addressed; or, address Bro. J. H. Fillmore, of Cincinnati, O., who will make engagements for him. You will not make a mistake by securing Bro. Selby. GEORGE A. MILLER.

QUEEN ESTHER. By M. M. Davis. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis.

This Company is presenting the public with a series of Bible storybooks. I believe the above book is the third one in the list. They do the work well. Bro. Davis is one of our best writers, and the book of Esther is one of the most interesting stories ever read. Its place historically is between the sixth and seventh chapters of Ezra. The story loses nothing in the hands of Bro. Davis. All will continue to the close, who begin to read it. All will be delighted and benefited. The great worth of the work would warrant twice the space given it. The deductions of the author are worth many times the price of the book. It is a story which the child can follow with delight, and from which the preacher can add many sermons to his stock. Here is philosophy, psychology and sociology illustrated. The integrity of Mordecai, the judge of the gate, shown to be the hero of the age, and Haman, the premier, is the best possible illustration of that political shrewdness which draws the line only at personal success. That descendant of Agag knew as well as Mordecai that one or the other must fall. But God, who makes the wrath of man to praise him, destroys the last of the old enemies of the Jews through the heartless cunning of one of their own number. D. R. DUNGAN.

The Netherlands.

There is much interest just now in the Netherlands, or lowlands of Europe, where Wilhelmina, a beloved girl of eighteen, has recently assumed the duties of a queen. She rules over a rich, well peopled land, saved only by watchfulness and energy from being entirely flooded by the sea.

The country was, by nature, a wide morass partly protected by sand hills on the coast. This natural embankment is now further strengthened by artificial dykes. The scenery is made charming by the many tree-lined canals crossed by picturesque bridges, the solidly constructed windmills, and the flowers and trees, for the raising of which the people have become famous.

Although generally wealthy and living well, Dutch make little display, being by nature steady and frugal. The men are usually of middle height, strong built and fair complexion. They smoke much and drink strong liquors, but intoxication is rare. The women, tall and handsome, are world-famed for their domestic virtues and scrupulous neatness. A Dutch house reaches the acme of order and completeness; it usually contains a Singer Sewing Machine, thousands of which are sold annually to the thrifty Dutch housewives. Such a one, seated at her machine, is shown in the photograph reproduced in another column.

The report of the Interstate Commerce Commission shows that last year the railways of the United States carried over 13,000,000,000 passengers one mile. They also carried 95,000,000,000 tons of freight one mile. The total amount paid in dividends on stock was $87,603,371—call it $88,000,000. Of the total earnings of the railways about 70 per cent. came from freight service and 30 per cent. from passenger service. Let us assume, then, that of the $88,000,000 paid in dividends, 70 per cent., or $61,600,000, was profit on freight service and $26,400,000 was profit on passenger service. Let us drop fractions and call it $62,000,000 from freight and $26,000,000 from passengers. By dividing the passenger profit into the number of passengers carried (13,000,000,000) we find that the railways had to carry a passenger 500 miles in order to earn one dollar of profit—or five miles to earn one cent. Their average profit, therefore, was less than two-tenths of one cent for carrying a passenger (and his baggage) one mile.

By dividing the freight profit into the freight mileage (95,000,000,000) we find that the railways had to carry one ton of freight 1,530 miles in order to earn one dollar, or over 15 miles to earn one cent. The average profit, therefore, was less than one fifteenth of a cent for carrying a ton of freight (besides loading and unloading it) one mile.

ABBOTT.

Died in St. Louis, Mo., the morning of September the 30th, 1898, Mrs. Josie B. Abbott, wife of Eld. T. A. Abbott, Corresponding Secretary of the Missouri Christian Missionary Society. Sister Abbott was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin B. DePue. She was born near Chain-of-Rocks, in Lincoln Co., Mo., September the 27th, 1850. After her mother's second marriage, which was to Mr. Chas. Forbush, the family moved to Sapaus Sris where they resided until after the Civil War. The first school that Sister Abbott attended was taught by Eld. Denis Grandfield, at Highland Prairie. Her education was obtained in public and private schools. Not far from the church of Corinth in Lincoln Co., Mo., she grew to womanhood. It was in this church and under the preaching of Bro. Abbott that she, in September, 1880, confessed her faith in Christ, and by him was baptized into Christ. On the 24th of November following she was united to Eld. T. A. Abbott in marriage by Bro. R. L. McHatton, now of California. It is a singular coincidence that at the time of her death these two brethren should be holding the same relation to the missionary work of their respective states. To those who knew Sister Abbott I need not say that she was a devoted wife, seeking as best she could to help her beloved husband in his chosen work. Shielding herself was not in her make-up, but ever disregarding her own personal ease, she saught and labored to be what God had said, "a helpmeet." Lucretia like, she lived without a shadow failing across her faithfulness. Her home and its work absorbed the energies of her quiet, industrious and Christian life. Knowing her intimately as friend and sister in Christ, I can say truthfully, the last year of her life was one of suffering, increasing in intensity as the days and weeks passed by, which she patiently bore, ever looking forward to the reward that awaits those who lovingly trust in Christ. To Bro. and Sister Abbott was born one child (a daughter named Maud Ell), on the ninth of September, 1881. To this daughter her thoughts turned with a special anexiety as she neared the "dark river." Among her last words she said, "Let me kiss my baby goodby," then calmly left earth for her home with Christ. For Bro. Abbott and his now motherless daughter many a tear of sympathy has fallen and prayer gone up to God for his blessing to rest upon them in their lonely journey through life. On the first Lord's day in October, and in the same church where she had confessed God's dear Son, and where, too, she had been united in marriage, the writer conducted her funeral in the presence of many who had known her from childhood's sunny hour; after which her body was quietly laid to rest in the church cemetery to await the call of Him who is "the resurection and the life." Thus has ended the earthly life of a devoted preacher's Christian wife. One of a noble class of Christian women that God only knows the toils, privations and sacrifices they make for Christ and his church. When the loving Father makes up his jewels, then consecrated Christian wives of preachers will brightly shine among that number. Then, my dear brother, may we meet "at the beautiful river," where sorrow and sadness our hearts shall never again know. To you, dear daughter, let me say, pluck every fragrant flower from your mother's life, and there were many, and bind them into the boquet of your own life, that your mother may ever be honored by your life.

ALLEN.

Alberta Tunis Allen, daughter of Johnson and Marie Allen, of Danville, Ky., was born May 31, 1898, and died Sept. 10, 1898. Death rests upon her as does an untimely frost upon the sweetest flower of the field. Oh, broken-hearted father and mother, let Faith, eagle-eyed and eagle-winged, bear you up, far up, until the dark veil shall in God's own sunlight become transparent, and a loving, bright face, with its soft eyes, shall reveal to you garnered immortality!

JAMES.

Mary Watson James was born in Carlton County, Ohio, in the year of 1820, and united in marriage to William H. James in the year 1837. Of this union 11 children were born, five of whom survive her. She was one of 14 children, all of whom have passed on before except one sister, Mrs. Anna Foy, of Glenwood, Iowa, who is nearing her 82nd birthday. Mother James united with the Christian Church about the year 1834, under the preaching of Alexander Campbell, and has lived an exemplary Christian life. She survived her husband about 13 years. Mary James departed this life Sept. 26, 1898, at Sheridan, Mo., being 77 years, 11 months and 27 days old. Funeral services were conducted at Powell, Neb., by Earl E. Boyd, pastor Christian Church at Belvidere, Neb.

E. E. B.

MILLER.

Diether Miller was born near Sturgeon, Mo., May 30, 1842, and died of paralysis, Aug. 25, 1898, at Excelsior Springs, Mo., where he had gone for his health. Thought to be improving, his sudden death was a great surprise to his family and friends. He was married, May 7, 1877, to Miss Nancy E. Malone, who survives him. To this union there are four sons and a daughter. This with his aged and saintly mother, four brothers and four sisters and a host of friends mourn his loss. He was a deacon in the Sturgeon Christian Church, and freely gave of his time, money and influence to promote the cause of Christ. An enterprising citizen, a kind neighbor, a loving husband and father, he will be greatly missed. He came down to death without fear, camly trusting in that Savior whom he had so faithfully served. Our grief is dispelled by the thought of his present and eternal happiness; for none who knew him doubts that his is the realization of the promise, "Be faithful unto death and I will give thee the crown of life."

"Faith can sing through days of sorrow,
All, all is well."

Publishers' Notes.

All students of the Old Bible know that it contains many romantic narratives, but even those most familiar with the ancient Scripture are unprepared for the fascinating story developed from the life of King Saul, by J. Breckenridge Ellis. This latest literary work of the author is a charming illustration of his thoroughly individual style. "King Saul" abounds in masterly description.—The Leader, Plattsburg, Mo.

The little volume, "The Wonders of the Sky," is a very pleasing and helpful little book, beautiful in thought and reverent in spirit.

A SPLENDID BOOK.

Plain Talks to Young Men on Vital Issues. By Peter Ainslie, editor of the Christian Tribune.

This is a charming little book, and one which every young man should secure and carefully read. It would make a very appropriate gift for the holidays.

In clear and forcible language, the author denounces, in successive short chapters, the evils attending (1) Gambling; (2) The Theatre; (3) Dancing; (4) Swearing and Cursing; and (5) Lying The last Chapter is entitled "Christian Service," and is alone well worth the price of the entire book.

In the following introductory words, Mr. Ainslie shows some of his reasons for writing such a book:

"Though briefly, I have spoken plainly in the pages following, and at times my words may even appear a little harsh; yet when we consider that there are seventy-five young men out of every hundred who never go to church; ninety-five out of every hundred who are not members of any church; and ninety-seven out of every hundred who make no pretensions to lead Christian lives—I say when we consider these facts, no language could be too harsh and no voice could be too loud against those alluring paths in which our young men are blindly walking and against those influences that scorch like hot breezes, withering human hearts and blasting immortal hopes."—The Youth's Instructor, Chicago, Ill., Sept. 29, 1898.

A NEW BOOK.

All the students of the Old Bible know it contains many romanctic narratives, but even those most familiar with the ancient Scriptures are unprepared for the fascinating story developed from the life of King Saul by Prof. J. B. Ellis. This latest literary work of the author of "In the Days of Jehu," is a charming illustration of his thoroughly individual style. "King Saul" abounds in masterly description, and is withal so terse in its concise simplicity. One of the secrets of this book's charm is artlessly revealed by the author in his preface, thus: "I have not suffered myself to be beguiled into laying down the burden of my narrative in order to take up the cudgels of a controversy. In the history of King Saul the road passes over several smoldering volcanoes where commentators have poured forth in times past. One of these dangerous places is found at Endor where once lived a witch. But after carefully considering the various theories which relate to different epochs in Saul's life, I have in each case chosen one and then proceeded as if the others had no existence. It may be thought I am ignorant of these conflicting theories because I do not refresh myself with the pleasures of an argument. But I will cheerfully surrender all claims of a scholarship as obscure as it is profound, if I succeed in interesting the reader, not in theories, but in the facts of the Old Bible."

"King Saul" is such an unqualified success that its many readers ars impatiently awaiting "King David," the next of the series promised by the author.—The Leader, Plattsburg, Mo.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits, than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY is sound to the core and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

Spain's Experience.

"With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again."

Spain is learning a lesson. See how retribution is visited upon a nation.

She has always been tyrannical and despotic; to-day she is subdued by a superior power.

She took gold from helpless subjects; to-day she is bankrupt.

She inflicts cruelty, and insurgents put the fear of death into her subjects.

She starves others; now her people cry for bread and die in her streets.

She forces religion upon her subjects, while to-day she is religiously dispossessed.

"With what measure ye mete."

So to-day every unjust deed, every act of religious persecution, every plan of iniquity shall receive its just recompense of reward. God hears. God sees. God knows.

"Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord."

He has declared he will break the teeth of the ungodly. Prosperity does not follow ungodliness.

It is vain to try to cover sin—to look pious and say, "Why, what have we done?"

God's law will bring retribution. God is not mocked. His judgment is as sure as it is severe, and is visited upon nations and individuals alike.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

GOSPEL MELODIES

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

First Lines of Some of the Best Songs in this Excellent Book

Praise Him! Praise Him!
I love to steal awhile away.
Delay not, D lay not.
Softly and tenderly.
If God has riches given you.
Oh, I want to be still nearer.
Where the billows roll the highest.
There is a land beyond somewhere.
Oh, would to me were only given.
The Bible reveals a glorious land.
The voice of the Savior says come.
The path is set with many a thorn.
Oh, the love of God to me.
List to the song of the reapers.
Night with ebon pinion.
In the presence of our God we meet again.
Preaching Jesus on the way.
I ask not earthly treasure.
Oh, bless the Lord, Oh my soul.
There'll be room enough in heaven.
I am going to Jesus.
Broad is the road that leads to death.
There is a home, a beautiful home.
Attend young friends while I relate.
Peacefully lay her down to rest.
In thy name, Oh, Lord, assembling.
Toiling for Jesus day by day.
How sweet 'tis to know.
When our earthly life is ended.
Just beyond the shad'wy valley.
The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide
Far beyond the rolling Jordan.
Lead me gently home, Father.
How firm a foundation.
Go on, you pilgrims.
Oh, how lovely! (Anthem.)
List to the voice of the Savior.
In our Father's home above.
There is one thought that cheers my way.
Make channels for the streams of love.
I've found a friend in Jesus.
It is the hour of prayer.
When storm-clouds arise in the sky.
I wonder if any poor sinner will come.
Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus.
See the ranks of sin approaching.
A thousand lords had gathered in the palace of Belshazzar.
Glory and praise to the Lord who died for me.
See! on the cross, the Savior bleeds.
There's a city of light 'mid the stars, we are told.
Just over the river are palaces grand.
Christians, are you growing weary?
There is a rock in a weary land.
O pilgrims, look forward to glory.
When the day is full of gladness.
There is a precious fountain.
Beyond the golden sunset sky.
Do you know a soul that's fainting?
Yes, we have a friend in Jesus.
Come now and let us reason.
When the waves are rolling high.
There is a house not made with hands.
Gone from our home.
I am on my journey to Canaan's happy land.
In thy temple, Lord, we gather.
Christ is knocking at my sad heart.
Let me sing the old song o'er again.
I will tell you an old simple story.
I'll rejoice in the love of Jesus.
There's a beautiful land far beyond the sky.
There's a hand ever ready to lift up all the fallen.
All for Jesus, all for Jesus.
There's a city that is far, far away.
When the trump of God shall sound.
Where are the ones we love fondly?
Teach me thy way.
God of our salvation.
Oh, there is joy in believing.
Praise Him, praise the name of God most high. (Anthem.)
Great is the Lord. (Anthem.)
One sweetly solemn thought.
Make a joyful noise unto the Lord. (Anthem.)
Hear the call to labor for the Lord.
Savior while my heart is tender.
Of the old time I'm thinking.
Twilight is stealing.
At home or away, in the alley or street.
Mother, tell me of the angels.

GOSPEL MELODIES contains several good easy anthems that will please choirs and singing societies. It is the only church music book of its class that does.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxv. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, October 27, 1898. No. 43

CURRENT EVENTS.

Instructions have been issued from Washington that the evacuation of Cuba by the Spanish forces must be accomplished not later than December 1. At that date the American authorities will assume control of the island and when that limit shall have been passed, Spain will be without a possession in the Western Hemisphere. The protocol said that Cuba was to be evacuated "immediately" and the Spanish can scarcely complain that this term has been construed too rigorously when they have been allowed nearly four months. One of the curiosities of diplomacy is the pretext which the Spanish commissioners have alleged for not abiding by the terms agreed to in the protocol, namely, that the agreement was made under coercion. We should say it was! The whole war was nothing more nor less than the exercise of the coercion necessary to induce Spain to agree to do certain things. If she does not do them there will be some more coercion. Every treaty of peace signed by a vanquished power is the result of coercion by the victorious power. We did not appeal to force and arms in this matter until the possibilities of moral suasion had been exhausted and no method remained but coercion. For Spain's representatives to attempt to establish an analogy between this situation and the case of a contract between individuals, in which case proofs of coercion nullifies the contract, is nonsense of the purest Castillian type.

The report of the plot to overthrow the present French Government by a military coup d'etat, which was frustrated by its timely discovery, is almost incredible by reason of its magnitude. The story is that Gen. Boisdeffre was at the head of the conspiracy and that his associates in it were Gen. Zurlinden and other officers whose interests have been adversely affected by the reversion of both public and official opinion in regard to the Dreyfus case. It is even said that there is evidence of President Faure's implication in the plot to overthrow his own ministry and perhaps destroy the republic. The gendarmerie, or provincial police, which is the most loyal part of the French army and is directly and solely subject to the demands of the Minister of the Interior, has been concentrated in Paris during the past ten days. This extraordinary action was before understood as a precaution against violence in connection with the serious strike of the building trades, but it is now believed that Minister Brisson, having information of the plot through some of the secret agents of the French Government, had summoned these forces to forestall any coup d'etat which might be attempted. In either case it has succeeded, for there was no attempt to carry the plot into execution, and there was little violence in connection with the strike, which is now happily on the way to settlement.

Emperor William and the Empress are on a tour to the Orient, the chief objective point of which is Jerusalem. Out of this simple fact have sprung a large number of discussions. The greater part of this copious stream of newspaper talk on this topic relates to the question of the Emperor's personal safety in taking such a trip at such a time as this, and to the dire posibilties if anything should happen. No regent has been appointed to direct affairs of state in the absence of the Kaiser, Prince Henry, upon whom that duty would naturaly devolve, being absent with the German squadron in Chinese waters. It would, in truth, be a very awkward time for anything to happen to the Emperor, in view of the many international complications which are now threatening the peace of Europe. The Kaiser's trip is also commented upon as being somewhat extraordinary as a Protestant pilgrimage to the ancient shrine of mediæval Catholic pilgrimages, and every effort has been made to give the trip the flavor of a religious pilgrimage. But this Protestant pilgrimage begins with a visit to the Sultan, the common and traditional foe of all Christendom, and is to be continued into the Sultan's dominions more or less definitely under his auspices. The Kaiser will be, in a sense, the guest of the Sultan at Jerusalem. An emperor's travels are expensive and it is estimated that this tour will cost Kaiser Wilhelm 5,000,000 marks for general traveling expenses and three or four million more for presents, to say nothing of the sum which the Sultan will spend for his entertainment.

Wednesday, October 19, was the day set apart for observance in schools and colleges all over the country as Lafayette Day. On that day the services of Lafayette to the colonies in the Revolutionary War were celebrated and funds raised for the erection of a monument to him to be unveiled in Paris on July 4, 1900, which is to be "American Day" at the Paris Exposition. The cause is a worthy one and in every way deserving of success. October 19 was the anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, a victory in which Lafayette rendered valuable assistance and which practically ended the War of the Revolution.

The present relations between Great Britain and France contains all the elements for procuring a first-class disturbance. True, the immediate matter in dispute, the French occupation of Fashoda, is not worth a serious dispute, but this is not the whole matter; there is the special sensitiveness of Great Britain to invasion of her rights in Egypt and the constant annoyance which France experiences in seeing Great Britain in possession of the valley of the Nile. there is the sense of humiliation which would come to France in withdrawing from Fashoda, as if confessing either error or weakness; and there is Russia, apparently standing ready to make the quarrel of France her own and the promise of alliance, encouraging her to enter upon a conflict the prospect of which would otherwise have more terror than temptation in it. The Paris Municipal Council has passed a resolution calling upon the government to make any honorable concessions rather than go to war over the possession of Fashoda, and pointing out the fact that the commercial interests of Great Britain and France are so nearly identical that their relations abroad should never be anything but friendly. The French populace, as judged from the tone of the French press, has remained fairly sane in reference to this matter until recently, but has become much excited by a speech made by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach during the past week, which is interpreted as a threat against France. In consequence of this it is reported that the feeling is much more warlike. In England there has been general approval of Lord Salisbury's firmness, but also a disposition to let France down easy and allow her to withdraw from Fashoda with as little humiliation as possible.

Heavy financial interests are involved in the relations of France and England. On the one hand Russia, who is sorely in need of a large loan to carry on the work on the Siberian railway and her other Asiatic enterprises, and who, having failed to raise money in Germany, is now trying France, discovers that French capitalists have become suspicious as to the stability of the Franco-Russian alliance. They have already invested large sums in Muscovite securities, but show no disposition to advance any more cash until there is some assurance that the alliance is something more than a Russian scheme to get hold of French capital. The Russian Ministers of Foreign Affairs and Finance are now in Paris trying to give this assurance, and the best way they can find to do it is to declare the willingness of Russia to aid France in a struggle against Great Britain for Fashoda. This makes for war. On the other hand, Egyptian bonds to the value of $800,000,000 are held by French investors. These bonds are now above par. If Egypt were to pass out of Great Britain's hands, the bonds which are not guaranteed would without question drop as low as they were in 1882, namely, 36 below par. Naturally this state of affairs imposes a restraint upon the bondholders, whose pa riotic desire to vindicate the honor of France is more than offset by anxiety about their Egyptian dividends.

OUR NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

The fear that the yellow fever scare would ruin our national conventions at Chattanooga proved to be groundless. No doubt some were kept away by the very measure designed to protect the people of Chattanooga and the state against any possible danger, namely, the quarantine regulation requiring persons going to Chattanooga to carry a certificate that they had not come from an infected region. For that reason people living in Mississippi and Louisiana were prevented from attending the convention. But in spite of these drawbacks there was a great convention—one of the greatest in our history, all things considered. At the very first meeting of the convention a resolution was passed declaring all fear of danger from yellow fever or from quarantine regulations groundless, and asking the Associated Press to publish same. We do not think it was published, however. If it had been a notice of the pulling off of a prize fight, it would have found space no doubt.

CHRISTIAN WOMAN'S BOARD OF MISSIONS.

On Thursday evening a large number of delegates assembled at the Auditorium—a spacious hall with a wide gallery extending around the building and connecting with the platform in front—where the various sessions of the convention were held. No special program was prepared, but some committees were announced, a few letters of regret read by the corresponding secretary from persons who could not be present, and the rest was social. We think it would be better to utilize this introductory evening by a social meeting of prayer and praise, closing with the announcements, and followed by a period of fraternal greetings. Every convention would thus begin with a prayer-meeting.

Mrs. A. M. Atkinson presided over the convention of the Woman's Board in the absence of Mrs. Burgess, whose detention at home on account of ill health was much regretted. Those who know Mrs. Atkinson need not be told that she presided with great ability and to the entire acceptance of the ladies. A message of sympathy was sent to Mrs. Burgess. The report of the work during the past year was quite satisfactory, showing a gain in receipts over the previous year, and a balance on hand of over $1,000 in the general fund instead of a deficit of over $8,000, as was the case at the last report. The women had a good program and some of the papers read before their convention were among the best things in any of the conventions. The address by Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds was not excelled in style or sentiment by anything we heard at Chattanooga. The motto of the women for next year is, "Ninety Thousand for Ninety-nine." This means ninety thousand women enlisted in the work, as well as $90,000. They will probably reach it, though this means a remarkable gain both in membership and contributions.

SUNDAY SERVICES.

Lord's day has come to be one of the most interesting days in our national conventions. It was an ideal day in Chattanooga, and the churches generally opened their pulpits to our ministers, and there were large audiences, the delegates dividing to hear their favorite preacher or to hear a new preacher. We heard flattering reports from a large number of these sermons. In the afternoon there was a union communion service at the Auditorium. It was not hoped to equal in numbers the communion service at Indianapolis, but a vast host, estimated at from 2,500 to 3,000, assembled at the time and place to participate in this impressive service. Bro. M. D. Clubb, of the Walnut Street Church, Chattanooga, presided, and our venerable brother, Robert Graham, of the University of Kentucky, made a brief address on the significance of the occasion and the institution. Thirty-six deacons waited upon the great congregation with the utmost order. While they were passing through the audience appropriate hymns were sung in low, subdued tones, which added to the impressiveness of the occasion. The concluding hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus Name!" was sung with great earnestness and spiritual fervor.

THE HOME MISSION CONVENTION.

The American Christian Missionary Society began its 49th convention Monday morning at 9 o'clock. The hour previous had been occupied with a lecture by Prof. B. A. Jenkins, of Indianapolis, on "Paul's Literary Style." This was the second of two very able and interesting lectures by Bro. Jenkins, the first of which drew a contrast between First Thessalonians and Galatians. In both of these lectures he manifested rare gifts as a Bible lecturer. The lecture on Friday morning was to have been by Prof. Jenkins, but owing to the delay of the train he did not arrive in time, and his place was filled by Bro. C. A. Young, who conducted a very interesting study on "The Gospel of John." It is very gratifying to note that a number of our younger men are fitting themselves for lecturing upon Bible themes and upon books of the Bible, and that these lectures are eagerly enjoyed by the people. It shows that the Bible is a living book and that when men enter into its spirit, familarize themselves with the historical settings of its various books and have the power to present its facts and truths clearly and forcibly, they are listened to with the greatest attention.

President F. D. Power, of Washington, D. C., called the convention to order at 9 o'clock, and introduced Mayor Watkins, who delivered a very happy address of welcome to the convention, offering the delegates the freedom of the city and even proposing to resign his Mayorship if the convention would select some one of its delegates to fill the office during their stay in the city. President Power responded briefly and appropriately to this address of welcome, and then delivered his presidential address. It was a strong and timely address on the topic, "The Holy Spirit and Missions."

The report of the board which followed, through its corresponding secretary, Benj. L. Smith, showed a good year's work, the most successful, perhaps, in the history of the society. We have made such extracts from the report of this board as will give our readers at least a bird's-eye view of what has been accomplished. The motto, "Home Missions to the Front," which B. L. Smith adopted on his entrance upon the work of corresponding secretary, seems to have become something more than a mere motto in the minds of a large number of our people, who are coming to see the supreme urgency of this work.

JUBILEE CONVENTION.

On the announcement of the appointment of the committee on time and place of the next convention, President Loos, of the Foreign Society, suggested that this question be settled at once, without the usual preliminaries, and moved that the convention convene in Cincinnati, in 1899, in its semi-centenary convention. A. M. Harvout, of Cincinnati, and Geo. A. Miller, of Covington, made neat and happy speeches urging this invitation, and the motion was carried by a unanimous rising vote. We understand that Music Hall has been secured for the convention, and the aim is to rally 10,000 delegates and to make our total contribution for missions $1,000,000. This is a large program, but it will do no harm to work towards its realization.

Time and space fail us in an attempt to follow in detail the proceedings of this convention. Among the good things provided for us on Monday was an address by R. S. Latimer, of Pittsburg, on "Our Opportunities for Mission Work in the City;" "The Hour of Prayer for America," conducted by S. D. Dutcher; Report of National Superintendent of Christian Endeavor, J. Z. Tyler; address on "The Manifold Mission of Christian Endeavor," by C. B. Newnan, of Detroit; "The Christian Endeavor as an Educational Agency," by B. A. Jenkins, of Indianapolis; "Home Missions to the Front," by H. F. McLane, Toledo; a symposium on "How May we best Develop and Utilize our Christian Endeavor Forces," by F. G. Tyrrell, St. Louis. In the evening after praise service conducted by S. R. Hawkins, New Orleans, there was an able address on "Education: Its Importance and Status Among the Disciples," by E. V. Zollars, president of Hiram College, and another by S. M. Cooper on "The Church Building."

Tuesday we had a Report on Education, by Mrs. A. A. Forrest, Irvington, Ind.; Church Extension Report by G. W. Muckley; Report of Statistical Secretary, G. A. Hoffmann, Missouri; Report on Ministerial Relief, by D. R. Lucas, Indiana, with a talk on same by A. M. Atkinson, followed by an address by Jabez Hall, of Butler Bible College. The report showed a lack of funds to meet the present wants of a number of beneficiaries of this fund and a liberal collection was lifted to meet this deficit. Of the above addresses and reports we were only permitted to hear that of Bro. Hall, which was a masterly presentation of the value of the Christian ministry and of our obligation to support it, even when the minister from infirmities of age or misfortune is unable to support himself. After a brief praise service on Tuesday afternoon, led by T. A. Reynolds, of Nashville, Mrs. H. M. Meier, of St. Louis, was given ten minutes to present the claims and explain the object of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. In a word, its object was explained to care for the orphans and the homeless children, and also for the helpless and homeless old people among our members. The method was to have a central board with state auxiliaries, which shall co-operate with this board in looking after the benevolent work in the various states, and when practicable establishing homes in these states for the care of homeless children and old people. "Give to us women of the church," Mrs. Meier said

"the orphan children and aged and homeless old people among us to love and care for, and you men may do the voting and look after politics." Mrs. Meier's address was heard with deepest interest and created a most favorable impression for the Benevolent Association.

C. C. Smith made a ringing address, as he always does, on the subject, "Negro Education," and was followed by an able paper by B. F. Manire, of Mississippi, upon "What we Owe to the Negroes of our Country." The remainder of the afternoon was occupied with the report of the Sunday-school work by Knox B. Taylor, of Illinois, and an address on "Children's Rally for Home Missions," by G. A. Hoffmann, of Missouri. The evening session brought us two stirring addresses, "The Paramount Urgency of Home Missions," by George Darsie, of Kentucky, and "A New Star in the Crown of our King—Porto Rico for Christ," by J. A. Erwin. The urgency of our Home Mission work perhaps never had an abler presentation than that which Bro. Darsie gave it, and J. A. Erwin enlisted our hearts as he told us how Porto Rico, to which country he went immediately from the convention as a missionary, should be won to Christ.

OUR WIDE FIELD.

Wednesday forenoon was occupied, aside from the reports of committees, with the the claims of the different sections of our great country. A. B. Moore, of Minnesota, told us "How the North is Ripe for the Harvest;" O. P. Spiegel, of Alabama, told us of "The South as a Mission Field;" W. H. Bagby, from the dominion of Brigham Young, showed "How the West Holds a Ripe Harvest," and "The Call from the East," was presented by C. M. Kriedler, of New York. An "Open Parliament" was conducted by Jno. E. Pounds, of Indiana. Fitly enough this session closed with prayers of consecration. Surely, the needs of these great fields in our country demand a deeper consecration on the part of Christ's followers. The sum-total of the impression made by the sessions of this convention was that we have a magnificent field, making mighty demands upon us, and that we have scarcely begun to realize the magnitude of our obligations, much less to respond adequately to these demands.

THE FOREIGN CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

This society began its 23rd annual convention on the afternoon of Wednesday, President C. L. Loos in the chair. Secretaries A. McLean and F. M. Rains presented synopses of their printed reports, showing a decided gain over the previous year's work. This gain is in the amount of money contributed, number of churches organized and in the number of churches and Sunday-schools enlisted in the work. The gain in money over the previous year was $24,703.60. The gain in the number of contributing churches is 321 and in the number of contributing Sunday-schools 370. Less than 3,000 churches and a little over 3,000 Sunday-schools now participate in the annual offerings to Foreign Missions. It shows that there is much land yet to be conquered in the way of enlisting our forces in the enterprise of world-wide missions. After praise and thanksgiving for the success of the past year, the convention heard two very striking addresses, one by W. J. Wright, of Washington, D. C., on "Missions the Heart of Church Life," and the other, "The Preacher's Reponsibility to Missions," by Geo. H. Combs, of Missouri. These men had put time and thought upon their addresses, and presented something which it was not only worth while to hear, but to go a long distance to hear. The evening of Wednesday was occupied by a single address by F. M. Rains, the treasurer of the Foreign Society, upon "The success of Modern Missions." The speaker was considerably hampered by his manuscript and did not awaken the degree of enthusiasm which he is capable of exciting when he speaks without manuscript, as he usually does.

FOREIGN MISSIONARIES.

We were favored by the presence of a number of foreign missionaries in the convention. On Thursday forenoon a number of these were to address the convention. "Mission Work in Japan" was to be presented by Miss Lavinia Oldham; "Missionary Experience in China," by Dr. Jas. Butchart; "My Work in India," by E. M. Gordon. W. R. Hunt, of China, was also a visitor in the convention and was to speak. It was the writer's misfortune to be confined to his bed during that session of the convention and unable to hear the addresses. Indeed, we were compelled to leave the convention before its close and our enjoyment of the sessions throughout was marred by ill-health. The addresses on the afternoon of Wednesday on "Children's Day," by W. A. Harp, and "Giving for Foreign Missions," by J. L. Brandt, we were also deprived of hearing. The last evening was to be occupied by two illustrated lectures, "Missions in China," by Dr. Jas. Butchart, and "Missions in India," by E. M. Gordon.

SUMMING UP.

Perhaps we are justified under all circumstances in saying that this was a very successful convention. There were some drawbacks, chief among which were the number of people absent from the convention during the day, visiting Lookout Mountain and Chickamauga Park. This was to have been expected, however, as the historic associations of the place were presented as one reason for taking the convention there. The other unfavorable circumstance was the large number of people that were temporarily ill during the convention, caused, perhaps, by the water. This was especially true of those who stopped at the Read House. This hotel entertained a large number of our delegates, and few of us we think will cherish pleasant recollections of our stay there. The people who were entertained in private homes fared much better, and are generous in their praise of the treatment they received. But in spite of these drawbacks, the attendance was fine, considering the location. The spirit of the meeting was admirable, most of the speeches were worthy of the occasion, the work accomplish showed a decided advance, and altogether the outlook for the future is hopeful and inspiring.

It is a fundamental mistake to suppose that church members are not needed in the Sunday-school. They should make the best of Sunday-school scholars in attendance, in deportment, in class studies, in teaching, in proficiency and in general duties. The Sunday-school is not for children only.

THE CHATTANOOGA CONVENTION.

These notes are prepared in the midst of the confusion and enthusiasm incident to a great assemblage of our people.

It cannot be said of this grand assembly of the Disciples of Christ that it is the greatest meeting in their history. It is not; but it is a great meeting, and a good.

Brotherly love is dominant. The spirit of the meeting is devout, reverent, enthusiastic. The addresses are uniformly of a high order. It is evident that the speakers, as a rule, have thought—have carefully and closely thought—on the topics on which they address the people. There are but few, strictly speaking, extemporaneous addresses. This does not mean that the speakers read. The speakers generally speak. Some of them read their addresses, but some of the most thoroughly prepared addresses were delivered without the use of a note. This feature of this general assembly of the Disciples is worthy of heartiest commendation.

The reports of work done, moneys collected and disbursed, and known spiritual results secured, indicate an advance over anything attained in previous years. But present attainments do not satisfy. There is a desire for better results. Out of this desire, generated by the successes of the past and present, has been born a determination to make the future in every way an improvement on the past.

These notes do not deal with statistics. Our readers will obtain an abundance of information of this character in other departments of our paper and in other issues. It is sufficient to say here that the amount of money collected and disbursed by the American Christian Missionary Society and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society exceeded by several thousand dollars the collections and disbursements of former years. The report of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions shows that the national missionary organization of our women is in a healthy, perennial condition, and that the good work of our God in the hands of these devoted servants of the Most High receives marked evidences, and continual, of the divine approval. Church Extension gains steadily year by year. There ought to be no serious difficulty in placing a quarter of a million of dollars in the treasury of the Board of Church Extension before the year 1900. The enterprise appeals with peculiar force to level-headed business men. It is a fine illustration of business in Christianity. The only note of discouragement sounded during the convention related to the work of Ministerial Relief; and in this sacred ministry, as Bro. Atkinson so felicitously styles it, there is no real ground for discouragement. His ill health accounts satisfactorily for the diminished receipts for the last year. He was able to serve the board only about four months during the year. It is a great pleasure to his friends —and their name is legion—to have him present and able to participate in this convention. D. R. Lucas, of Indianapolis, will now plead the cause of Ministerial Relief before the brotherhood. Such a ministry ought not to require a plea. It ought to be regarded as a privilege to minister in material things to the veterans who have faithfully ministered to us the glorious gospel of the blessed God.

There is an unusual attendance of those who are called evangelists in this meeting. The use of the words—"those who are called evangelists"—is not intended as a slur upon the good men who spend their time and strength in protracted meeting work. Why the word evangelist should be applied to them exclusively is not apparent. Our pastors generally do evangelistic work to a greater or less extent. Not a few of them are among our best evangelists.

There has been a drifting apart of the men who are called pastors and those who are spoken of as evangelists. One or two meetings have been held by the evangelists who are here, and some of the pastors. These meetings were in the nature of conferences, were in good spirit, and can but result in a better mutual understanding and more cordial co-operation. It was determined to hold similar conferences at the time of the General Conventions in Cincinnati next year. It is understood that these conferences will be quite informal and that their purpose will be mutual acquaintance, mutual improvement, and the attainment of greater efficiency in the work to which pastors and evangelists are alike devoted—the salvation of men.

The place of Christian Endeavor among us, and the care of our young people, received thoughtful attention. A paper was read in which a summary statement was made of what other Christian people are doing to promote the spiritual welfare and efficiency of their young people. It is evident that the Disciples are in the very front ranks in the training of their young people to serve wisely and well the one Lord. Christian Endeavor has reached such a magnitude among us as to require the entire time and strength of one man. An effort will be made, it is understood, to secure the services of a competent man for this important work. There is no service among us of greater importance than that of directing the energies of our young men and young women in such a manner as to make them efficient servants of the Christ. The church of the future is involved in this enterprise. Let us in this, as in all else, seek the wisdom that comes from above.

It is apparent that the Disciples are growing in every direction. Their numerical increase has been great, but better than their growth in numbers is their increasing unity. They are rapidly becoming a united people. The spirit of unity and union is on the increase. The bitterness, the strifes, the contentions of the past have disappeared, let us hope, to return no more. There is also a marked increase in the general intelligence of the people. They do not understand "the way of salvation" one whit better—if indeed they understand it as well—than did those former generations, but their general intelligence and culture are superior to the intelligence and culture of those who have gone before. This fact is full of encouragement. We are beginning to know how to use the wealth with which God has entrusted us. The word "beginning" is used in this connection with deliberation and purpose. We are only at the beginning of an experience the end of which no man can see. Gen. F. M. Drake handed B. L. Smith his check for $5,000 a day or two ago, the income from which will be used in general evangelistic work. This is well; but there are others who could give in a similar way—with equal generosity—and they will. We are moving in the right direction in this matter. The time is not far distant when our prosperous business men will contribute of their means by the ten thousand to extend the kingdom of righteousness and peace. The meaning of stewardship is beginning to dawn upon us. The following quotation presents the duty of preachers in this matter:

"CHARGE THEM THAT ARE RICH IN THIS PRESENT WORLD, THAT THEY BE NOT HIGH-MINDED, NOR HAVE THEIR HOPE SET ON THE UNCERTAINTY OF RICHES, BUT ON GOD, WHO GIVETH US RICHLY ALL THINGS TO ENJOY; THAT THEY DO GOOD, THAT THEY BE RICH IN GOOD WORKS, THAT THEY BE READY TO DISTRIBUTE, WILLING TO COMMUNICATE; LAYING UP FOR THEMSELVES A GOOD FOUNDATION AGAINST THE TIME TO COME, THAT THEY MAY LAY HOLD ON THE LIFE WHICH IS LIFE INDEED."

Do such conventions as this in Chattanooga pay?

The answer must be, on the part of those who attend, an emphatic affirmative. It pays in every way. They promote unity of thought, of purpose, of speech, and of effort. They cultivate a spirit of intelligent evangelism. The grace of benevolence is increased. Faith is augmented—confidence in our brethren, in God and in the special message with which we have been entrusted. A spirit of catholicity is also promoted, broader views are gained. The needs of the world are considered and how to meet them. One is saved from the narrowness encouraged by the treadmill life of the parish. In every way it pays to hold such conventions as this Chattanooga Assembly.

To experience the intellectual stimulus and spiritual uplift afforded by the morning meetings for Bible study is itself a sufficient return for all expenditures incurred in attending this convention. There are those who will never forget those meetings. Their influence for good was extensive and permanent.

On to Cincinnati in '99 is now our cry. It is not too soon to begin to prepare for that—our jubilee—convention. Fifty years ago our organized work began in Cincinnati. What changes have taken place in that time! Surely, God's hand is on us for good!

In our preparation for Cincinnati in '99 we must not forget to assist in the collection of $100,000 for Home Missions. Home Missions to the front this year. One of the mottoes on the wall of the Auditorium in which the Chattanooga Convention is held is $100,000 for Home Missions this year. Just above it is this motto: ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND SOULS FOR CHRIST THIS YEAR! ! Note well this motto. It is not 100,000 church members this year, but—and this is a very different matter—100,000 souls for Christ. To aid in securing souls for the Savior is one of the ways in which to prepare for Cincinnati in '99. God help us!

—Nov. 13-19 has been appointed a week of prayer for young men by the American International Convention of the World's Conference of the Y. M. C. A. During this week all ministers are asked to preach a special sermon for young men and to mention the work of the Association in their behalf. Also to point out to young men the part they play in the family, the church and the state. All of these fields of work demand healthy, strong, Christian young men. A good program has been prepared by the associations for the entire week, and it is hoped that the week will be generally observed and attended, especially by our young men.

Editor's Easy Chair.

CONVENTION ECHOES.

The Easy Chair cannot do otherwise than fall into line with the general trend this week and pay its respects to the great annual convention at Chattanooga. Instrumental, as we were, in having the conventions go to the Mountain City, we feel special gratification at their success. Several had already begun to say to us in anticipation of failure, "I told you so;" but nothing of that sort was heard after the convention got under way. The truth is, we have reached a point, not only in numbers, but in zeal for our general interests, that neither distance nor fear of pestilence nor self-support while there nor, even fourth-class hotels can prevent a large attendance at our National Conventions.

We doubt if the brethren in any city where our conventions have previously met have given as much time, anxious thought and labor to make suitable preparations for the convention as were given by the brethren in Chattanooga. They felt that the demands upon them would be very great and they organized their forces thoroughly and worked systematically, and all that could be done on their part to make our stay there pleasant and profitable was done. We sincerely trust that they may realize from the convention that permanent good for which they hoped and which their unselfish labors for the convention so well deserve. The executive committee, together with the committees on reception, finance, entertainment, pulpit, press, local excursion, auditorium and hospital seem to have anticipated all the possible needs of the convention. If the convention was not all that they had hoped for in the way of numbers we trust that it made up in quality what it lacked in quantity.

It was good to see the familiar face of ex-Governor F. M. Drake, of Iowa, present once more in our annual conventions. His donation of $5,000, to the general mission fund of the Home Board, is an expression of his interest in the evangelization of our beloved country. Other prominent business, as J. H. Allen and F. E. Udell, of St. Louis; W. S. Dickinson and S. M. Cooper, of Cincinnati; W. W. Williams, of Des Moines; A. M. Atkinson—preacher, business man and philanthropist combined—Howard Cale and Amos Clifford, of Indianapolis; R. S. Latimer, of Pittsburg, besides others whom we do not now recall, were present as participants in the work of the convention. We could wish that this class could be more largely represented in our conventions. We believe it would tend to benefit our conventions in many ways if they were present in larger numbers and had more to do in shaping the course of things.

A pleasant episode of the convention was the presentation by W. M. Taylor, one of the local preachers of Chattanooga, of a gavel made out of wood from the Chickamauga battlefield, with its handle entwined with red, white and blue, to President Power, in a happy speech, in which he referred in eloquent terms to the union of the North and the South during the late war with Spain—a union which he believed would be perpetual. President Power responded in suitable terms, accepting the gavel and returning his thanks to the donor in behalf of the convention. At this juncture the song entitled, "On to Chattanooga," by J. H. Stark, printed in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a few weeks since, and reprinted on slips and scattered through the convention, was sung to the tune of "Marching through Georgia." The difficulty of matching the meter to the tune at first sight prevented the song from being a decided success as a musical performance, but the sentiment more than covered this defect, and it was followed by enthusiastic applause.

The lack of time to suitably discuss measures of importance that come before the convention is always sorely felt, and one begrudges all the more any time that may be wasted in a speech or sermonette that has no special bearing on the subjects of the convention. There were some recommendations voted down during the convention which we cannot doubt, could they have been thoroughly discussed, would have been adopted. Perhaps there were some adopted which might have been voted down if there had been fuller discussion. The recommendation of the committee on nominations, that the president of the Foreign Board and the president of the Foreign Society be not the same person, was based on reasons so apparent that we wonder that it was voted down without any discussion, or even without an inquiry as to the reason of the recommendation. The method of the American Christian Missionary Society in this respect is much wiser, and should be adopted in the Foreign Society. There may not be the slightest danger now, and there is not, in having the president of the board that conducts the missionary operations all the year appoint the committees that are to consider and pass upon its action. But there may come a time when the impropriety of this arrangement would become manifest, and meanwhile it would be well to avoid any suspicion of a close corporation. It is difficult to see why the Educational Board was not allowed to have a secretary to look after its business provided it was willing to pay for his services. We have no more important board than this when its place comes to be properly recognized.

The following paragraph from the report of the Board of Education will be gratifyto the friends of the colleges:

The resume of the year's work would not be complete without mentioning the good fortune which has fallen to Butler, Drake, Hiram and Eureka Colleges. It is really a misnomer to call it good fortune, since it is due to the patient labor of the men who have been developing these institutions. Hiram has secured an estate of $30,000, upon conditions that an annuity be paid the donor during his lifetime. This suggests a way by which benevolent persons can benefit institutions more securely than by bequests; for inheritance taxes are avoided, and the possibility of breaking the will is entirely removed, while a fair income is assured the donor during his lifetime. Drake has secured $38,000 to pay off floating indebtedness. Eureka has received $30,000 for a like purpose. This relieves Eureka of a burden which has been pressing upon it for several years, and puts the institution in a position to appeal to the brotherhood for increased endowment on a business basis. The newly organized Bible department of Butler has been assured of support for three years; and steps are now being taken to secure a permanent endowment for the four new professorships that have been added.

The scope and the value of the work of the National Superintendent of Christian Endeavor may be seen from the following opening paragraph of the Christian Endeavor report:

During the past year I have aimed (1) to secure a better enrollment of our Christian Endeavor Societies; (2) to bring them into more general and more efficient co-operation with all our missionary enterprises; (3) to provide for the systematic instruction of all our young people, and (4) to bring our brotherhood to recognize the latent and still undeveloped possibilities of Christian Endeavor.

In the closing paragraph of the same report the National Superintendent, J. Z. Tyler, under the head of "Backward or Forward—Which?" after giving the numerical strength of Christian Endeavor among us, adds:

But the greater possibilities of Christian Endeavor still lie latent and undeveloped. I believe it has a possibility of usefulness of which few of us have ever dreamed. I am thrilled when I think of what, by wise management and the divine blessing, it may yet become and what it may yet accomplish. But present methods cannot secure further progress. I speak out of an experience in which I have seriously hazarded my health when I say that it is impossible for me to longer continue the double duty of the pastorate and of the superintendency of Christian Endeavor. While my heart is more devoted than ever to this good work, and while its possible future seems to me more promising than ever, I am yet compelled, by considerations of health and the demands of duties elsewhere, to ask that you release me from the office of National Superintendent of Christian Endeavor.

It is safe to say that no man among us understands the spirit and true scope and possibilities of the Christian Endeavor movement more thoroughly than J. Z. Tyler, nor do we believe there is another man in all the Endeavor ranks that has been a wiser leader and a more faithful and unselfish worker in this field than he has been. Accepting as true the above statement of the superintendent, that he can no longer do the work of pastor and that of National Superintendent of Endeavor, the convention, nevertheless, felt unwilling to part with his valuable services, and recommended that the board of managers retain him for his whole time to cultivate this promising field, provided it could find a way for his support, either directly from its treasury or through the Endeavor Societies. We are sure that the Home Society would find it highly remunerative to their treasury to secure his work in stimulating missionary zeal in the Endeavor Societies, and we are sure, too, that if the societies are asked to contribute, say $1.00 each per annum, to a fund for the general interest of Christian Endeavor, and extending it in new fields, they would readily do so. In one of these ways let Bro. Tyler be continued as our standard bearer in Christian Endeavor, until we become, not third or second, but first in rank among the religious bodies of Christendom.

The daily papers of Chattanooga treated the convention with great courtesy, not only printing the proceedings of the conventions quite fully each day, but even giving the pictures of some of our handsomest men and women in their columns. Sometimes the pictures had the wrong names under them, but this made little difference. We notice the picture of the venerable president of the Foreign Society appeared with the name of the president of Hiram College underneath. The Mayor, in his speech, complained that too few pictures of the women had appeared in the papers, but added, with characteristic Southern chivalry: "The faces of your fair women will remain photographed upon our hearts long after the pictures of your men have faded from memory." This, of course, compensated the ladies for any slight they may have felt in not being pictorially presented to the people of Chattanooga. Many of us never know how great men we are until we see ourselves written up in the personal column of these convention reports in the daily papers. It is evident from these columns that there are no small men who attend these conventions. This is as it should be. The convention needs our largest men.

The social feature of the Chattanooga convention was one of its best features. No one gets more out of this side of the convention than does the editor. It is his best opportunity for getting acquainted with people who have known him for many years and whom he has never met. The hearty hand-grips from those who have read his paper and have been strengthened by it into a larger and better religious life, and who have been comforted by it in times of sorrow, and encouraged by it in moments of weakness and fear, together with their words or even looks of appreciation, is no small part of an editor's compensation for his ceaseless toil and unremitting care. We never met more of these kind friends than at Chattanooga, and the remembrance of their hearty greetings and words of encouragement will be a source of strength to us through all the on-coming days.

In looking back at the conventions we have a feeling, which we think many share, that after all there was something lacking —a something, too, that is essential to a sense of satisfactoriness and completeness. There was not that point of spiritual enthusiasm and devotion that has sometimes been reached in our conventions. Perhaps the size of the hall had something to do with it, but the consciousness of hurry and rush did most to interfere with the devotional feature of the conventions. There was a lack, as it seems to us, of spontaneity, or, perhaps we should say, of the opportunity for spontaneity in the devotional service. There was no meeting that we now recall that was thrown open to the whole convention for volunteer prayers or exhortations. It may be said that this is impracticable in the present plan of running our conventions. Might we not, then, modify our plan so as to give an hour for the overflowing of hearts in voluntary praise and thanksgiving and exhortation? Brevity, of course, is a good thing, and a zeal for running on time is also to be commended when it does not assume the form of a menance to all spontaneity and unfettered devotion. The "Quiet Hour" feature of the Christian Endeavor Convention would add not a little to our conventions.

Hour of Prayer.

THE DAY OF SALVATION.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Nov. 2.)

For he saith,
At an acceptable time I hearkened unto thee,
And in a day of salvation did I succor thee;
behold, now is the acceptable time; behold, now is the day of salvation.—2 Cor. 6:2.

This parenthetic clause, thrown in in the midst of one of Paul's celebrated climaxes, states a truth of transcendent importance. Quoting from Isaiah the word of the Lord to Israel of old, saying, "In an acceptable time have I answered thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee" (Isaiah 49:8), the apostle adds, "Behold, now is the acceptable time; behold, now is the day of salvation." There is a tendency in human nature to look forward to some future time as more favorable for amendment of life than the present. We are all prone, more or less, to procrastinate. It is easy to find in our present condition and surroundings what seem to us obstacles hard to overcome in entering upon a new life. "Some other time," we say, "will be more acceptable; some other day will be a better day for accepting the great salvation than to-day."

This is a delusion of Satan. Not the future, but now is the acceptable time. Not to-morrow, but to-day is the day of salvation. There has been and is yet, to some extent, current an idea among religious people that people must wait until God's "good time" before they can turn to the Lord. Under this kind of teaching earnest seekers after truth and salvation have been kept waiting in darkness through weary months and even years for God's good pleasure to grant them salvation. To all such waiting souls this word of the apostle comes sounding the note of good news, saying, "Now is the acceptable time; now is the day of salvation." No time is so acceptable to the Lord for a sinner's return to him as the present, and no day has the promise of salvation but the present day.

The truth has larger application than to waiting penitents, who are hesitating about throwing themselves upon the mercy of God, and entering into the joy of forgiveness of sins. It applies also to that class of Christians who promise themselves that after awhile, when times are better, when they have gained more leisure, they are going to devote more time to religious thought and religious work. "In some acceptable time," they are saying, "we are going to enter upon a broader and richer and fuller Christian life. We are not satisfied with what we are and with what we are doing, but the time is not convenient for us to begin the struggle after higher and better things." It is the same old mistake. Paul is saying to all such: "Now is the acceptable time; now is the day of salvation."

How aften do we hear Christian people say that when they get older, and have accumulated more of this world's goods, they are going to be less in bondage to material things; they are going to give themselves more time for reading, for study, for travel and for the development of their higher nature. This, too, is an illusion. There are no better days than the present, and none so good for beginning this very work of self-development, and of living in the higher region of our nature. It is pitiful to see so many church members spending most of their lives engrossed with material interests, with a mere rift in the clouds on Sundays, until their souls have well-nigh lost the capacity for soaring into the higher regions of thought and aspiration and enjoyment. A sort of moral and spiritual atrophy prevents them from ever realizing the dreams which came to them in their earlier years.

Of all the mistakes which mortal men make, none seems to us more pitiful than that of men passing along through life to its swift close, postponing until some future time the joy and blessedness that might be theirs to-day; walking under brazen skies instead of under a starlit dome that stretches away into the infinities; slaves to their daily tasks and in bondage to pursuits that minister only to their lower natures, when they might be freemen in Jesus Christ, rejoicing in the liberty of the children of God; moaning out lamentations because of their hardships, their burdens and their disappointments, instead of singing jubilant songs of triumph along the pilgrim way that leads to the delectable mountains; deluding themselves with the idea that sometime in the future will be a better time for them to open their souls toHeaven's light and peace than to-day, instead of early entering into fellowship with God and walking all the way in the sunlight of his presence, their paths growing brighter until they enter the Celestial City.

Let not this mistake be ours. Let us be admonished by this word of the apostle and to-day begin that larger and better life to which God is calling us and to which our souls in their higher and better moments respond.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the God of patience and of tender compassion, how great is Thy mercy toward the children of men! How patiently hast Thou waited with outstretched hands for Thy wandering children to come to Thee and accept the rich gifts which Thou art so willing and so ready to bestow! Forgive us, dear Father, for delaying our return to Thee so long, and forgive us, too, that we have not come closer to Thee and received more of the infinite treasures of Thy grace and love. Forbid that we should postpone to some future time the acceptance of that grace and mercy and peace which Thou art ready to bestow upon us to-day. May these meditations lead many faltering ones to commit themselves to Thee, and many who have been living too far from Thee to accept a fuller salvation, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

Current Religious Thought

In an editorial on "Conduct by Proxy," in the Advance for Oct. 13, in which numerous dangers are pointed out in the use of this method of doing business, a good explanation of the failure of temperance and other good laws is incidentally given. The editor says:

One common form of conduct by proxy is undue dependence on legal enactments. Here is some great evil, like the liquor traffic, or gambling, which is at war with the public welfare, and good citizens who love law and order come together and say, "Let us pass a law which will prohibit or restrict this evil." Very good; but the law when enacted, be it ever so good, does not lift from one citizen interested in it one iota of his responsibility for its enforcement. It is a rule for action, but as a statute there is as little action in it as there is in a street car dynamo which has no connection with the power house. Conduct by proxy is the dangerous shoal on which hundreds of excellent prohibitory laws have gone to pieces. Who will enforce these laws after they have been enacted? Too many citizens think that they have done their whole duty when they have secured the enactment of a law and have committed its enforcement to certain duly elected officials. But the lawbreakers are merely put on their mettle by a new law, no matter how strict it may be in provisions and penalties. They regard it as an antagonist, and they begin to plan how they may overcome or evade it. "It looks formidable," they say, "but has it teeth and claws? Yes, it has teeth and claws, but is it a dummy figure stuffed with virtuous but innocuous ballots, or is there life in it?" The only thing that can endow it with life and keep it healthy and active is vigilant citizenship. Lawbreakers are not one bit afraid of legal enactments, and they are not very much afraid of officers of the law, for they can often make terms of peace with these which are mutually satisfactory; but they are desperately afraid of aroused citizens —in sufficiennt numbers—who are bent on having the right done. "Died from conduct by proxy," might be written over every dead-letter law.

In the Biblical World for September Prof. Geo. H. Gilbert, D. D., Chicago Seminary, has an article on "The Apostles' Creed Revised by the teaching of Jesus." After an examination of the creed, article by article, Prof Gilbert concludes that in the light of the personal teachings of Jesus it should read as follows:

I believe in God as the Father of all men, who so loved the world that he gave his Son to die for it, and who freely pardons every penitent sinner.

I believe in Jesus as the Messiah and Savior of the world, who lived a perfect life of trust, obedience and love; who in his character and teaching gave a perfect revelation of the will of God; who founded the kingdom of heaven upon the earth; who was glorified by the Father in his death and resurrection; who sitteth at the right hand of the Father, and who is also in vital spiritual connection with his disciples on the earth.

I believe in the Holy Spirit, who takes the place of Jesus with his disciples, who shows unto us the things of Jesus, and inspires to Christian service.

I believe in the holy kingdom of Jesus, entered through faith in him, manifest wherever his spirit is manifest, extended by personal witness to Jesus, triumphant and everlasting.

I believe in the forgiveness of sins through Jesus, the life of consecration to the will of Jesus, the reception of believers by Jesus in the hour of death, and their perfect felicity in the perfected kingdom of God the Father.

In an article in the Church Union for October on "A Wrong Emphasis," by H. C. Hayden, D. D., are these sayings:

It is a significant fact that the Higher Critics of England and America, in spite of or as a result of their investigations, find the Bible no less an inspired book—not less full of God nor less authoritative over the conscience than their brethren who decry their work. And it is at least possible that the rest of us, if we took the same pains to get at their standpoint that we do to suppress them, might also come out into a large place, with a greater wonder in our hearts at God's footsteps in history and a greater delight in the book we cherish as the veritable "Word of God"—a phrase which Dr. Robertson Smith himself declined to swap off for the equivocal, "Contains the Word of God."

* * * * * * * * * *

How much grander and more Christian it would be if, instead of crowding our saintly, honest and reverent scholars out, they were met in their own field by other scholars, honest and saintly, who go at least part of the way with them, but not all, and together, reverently searching, have mutually helped each other into the light, tell the rest of us that we too may walk in it. The church is in no danger of settling down on the dictum of any man, or any one school of men, dogmatize and asseverate as they may. To the consensus of scholarship she must submit herself. For this, in some things, we wait.

This surely will go on, whatever we do. It ought reverently to go on. Then let us give comprehension and elasticity enough to our ecclesiasticism to allow our devout scholars to abide within the fold, not under the ban of distrust and with the stamp of odium upon their brows, but with confidence in the truth, and charity for those whom we believe Christ accepts, even though to us they seem in their search for truth to be putting themselves and us to needless trouble. Let Erasmus say to the twentieth what he said to the sixteenth century: "By identifying the new learning with heresy you make othodoxy synonymous with ignorance."

Our Budget.

—Faith bridges many chasms.

—Trust in God quiets many anxious hearts.

—Boldness against sin needs no apology.

—The cultivation of righteousness increases delight therein.

—The Christian's sure reward in heaven more than compensates for all earthly losses.

—The church more than any other organization is held together by invisible ties.

—The weather for October has been unusually cold, but this is an era of unusual things.

—We devote much space this week to the Chattanooga Convention , that you also may partake of its spirit and fatness.

—By the kindness of Miss J. Goss Carter, Canton, Mo., we are permitted to publish in this paper one of Tolstoi's characteric stories. Miss Carter translated it from the French language for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The word-painting is vivid.

—"No nation which has Jesus Christ enshrined in its heart can perish."—Dr. Lorimer.

—The Standard, Chicago, has an excellent editorial on the relation between parent and teacher in the public school, that contains many valuable suggestions. But the chief point is that of co-operation. We fear that this very needful duty is too sadly neglected on the part of parents toward both public and Bible-school teachers. The loss in either case, let it be remembered, must fall upon the child.

—"Are We Overloaded," is the title of an article in this paper by F. T. Pew (from the pew) which, though not sufficiently discriminative, is nevertheless suggestive. But while there are dangers in the direction indicated it must be remembered that the church is no place for idlers. There is work for all and plenty of it. Let there be less of the commandments and doctrines of men laid upon church members and a better distribution of the burders of the Lord's work and the things complained of will not exist.

—The time may come when employers will not employ men who are given to strong drink for mercenary interests, and when the interests of our industries and our commerce may drive this curse from the land, but enlightened Christian men ought not to wait for the necessities of trade and commerce to squelch the drink evil. The necessities of the family, society and the church are greater, to say nothing of the value of men's souls.

—Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts has a ringing article in this paper on National Perils and Hopes. Dr. Crafts is the superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C., and under the auspices of this bureau some strong reform bills will be presented to the next congressional session. And if, as Dr. Crafts says, the churches would unite their voice, votes and prayers against these evils we could soon rid them from our land. Why this awful, inexcusable delay? Why do not the men of the churches rise up as one man against these evils and suppress them?

—"Sketches of Our Pioneers," by F. D. Power, prepared for the second series of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, is a charming little volume. True, the sketches are short, but they are enlivened by thrilling incidents and events in the lives of the men named, and their brevity whets the appetite for more knowledge of the pioneers of the restoration movement. It is an excellent companion to "Missionary Fields and Forces," by Bro. Lhamon, and by no means invaluable to the family reading table. They are convenient books for any household of Disciples of Christ.

—The St. Louis Advocate last week paints a dark picture of the evils of our country. The editor had visited the great St. Louis Fair on big Thusrday. About one more visit would have changed him from an optimist to a pessimist. He was half converted as it was. Is not this the true position for Christ's soldiers after all? Has not the doctrine of optimism been pressed too far? Why try to make things seem what they are not? Or to think they are all right when they are not? This is the nature of Christian Scientists' philosophy and is unsound. Facts are facts and the truth will out. It is time—high time—that the army of the Lord was mobilized for battle. It is no use to cry peace, peace, when there is no peace with sin, crime and moral evil.

—We are glad to give the following commendation of the portrait of Alexander Campbell, recently given on our front page, from so competent a judge:

I wish to express my commendation of the portrait of Alexander Campbell. found on the first page of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of September 29. I think it is unsurpassed if equaled in accurate delineation of his features by any printed picture I have ever seen. In the earlier days of my portrait painting, in 1852 I spent two weeks at the Bethany mansion having personal sittings from Bro. Campbell for the portrait that I then painted, which, although crudely executed, was at that time certified to me in writing by himself as the best that had been painted. This print in your paper has more resemblance to it than any other I have seen. I desire a copy myself, as I wish to paint the face again with my original and this photograph to aid me, seeing I have had 46 years' experience since the original was painted.

M. C. TIERS.

913 Forest Ave., N. Y.

The photograph referred to above can be had by writing to Eugene Goodrich, Grand Rapids, Mich., enclosing bare cost of reproduction—fifty cents.

—The Religious Telescope last week began an editorial as follows: "The Word of God rests upon an impregnable foundation of evidence." We had thought and are still inclined to think that the Word of God is in and of itself impregnable. It is its own foundation and must endure forever quite independent of any evidence rallied in its support by man. It is men's theories of the Bible that need proping up with evidence; or rather that need impregnable foundations; not the Bible. The increase of substantial testimony only reveals to man more clearly the impregnability of the Word of God.

—In an editorial suggested by the welcome extented to President McKinley on the occasion of his visit to this city the Observer last week said:

Perhaps no city in America so fully represents both the Northern and the Southern elements of our population as St. Louis, and it is safe to say that in no other city has the President of the whole country been more cordially and sincerely received than he was in the great metropolis of the Central West. It is a matter for national gratitude that we have a President who is honored, revered and loved by the whole people. Chicago tried to lift the President above the people by bestowing upon him the doctor's hood and the doctor's degree, but he is still the great American commoner whose proudest honor is that he is an American citizen. Our Washington University might have bestowed degrees and honors on the President, but he is greater and grander as Mr. McKinley than he is as Dr. McKinley.

—The Christian Repository for October, 1898, contains a sermon preached before the West Union Baptist Association, of Kentucky, in September, 1852, by its editor on the "Past and Future of the Baptist Churches." This naturally raises the question whether the sermon when delivered was fifty years in advance of the times or whether Baptist churches are still fifty years behind the times. Considerable history has been made in the religious world since the first delivery of that sermon.

—We have just been handed a copy of the Lesson Commentary for 1899, by W. W. Dowling, editor of Our Young Folks and also editor of the Sunday-school literature published by this house. We have not had time for a careful study of this new book, but from a hasty glance over its pages we do not hesitate to pronounce it the equal if not the best of any of the commentary series from his hand. It is to be especially commended for its analytical helps, its collation of sidelights, its frequent illustrations and its terse comments and striking applications. The book is out in good season for the new year and all may be supplied in good time. There is also time to do some good missionary work by extending the use of this book among the pupils, officers and teachers of your school and of introducing it into new schools.

—Leslie J. Perry concludes an interesting article on "An Alliance with England" in the Independent, with the following optimistic declaration:

The moral and physical effect upon the world of such a union will be immeasurable. That it will be for good can hardly be doubted. It will mean that Anglo-American liberty, intelligence, prosperity and happiness shall go forth with the English language and overspread the earth. Occasionally some benighted nation out of the past, like Spain, will attempt to obstruct this march, but without avail. Perhaps in some remote, hide-bound spots these cardinal virtues will have to be planted with the aid of Anglo-American fleets and armies to the sound of Armstrong and Gatling guns, but the ameliorating effects will be none the less efficacious or permanent. Salisbury's dying nations will be absorbed and rejuvenated, and the whole human race elevated.

The writer of the above paragraph, however, thinks that England should and will give up everything on this continent except a few coaling stations in order to secure the alliance. We fear that Mr. Perry's optimistic nature has somewhat blinded his eyes to the character of national nature; especially to British nature.

—From a copy of the third annual report of the Board of Ministerial Relief we learn that the donations from friends to this fund during the year has been but $3,629.11. There was on hand, Oct. 1, 1897, $1,682.08. There has been collected interest on loans $427.73, and a mortgage loan returned to the treasury of $500, making a total of funds for the year of $6,-137.92. There was a cash balance of $991.04 in the treasury Sept. 30th, but $900 of this has since been paid to annuitants on the current quarter. The receipts then for the year from all sources were $4,455.82 and of this $4,156.03 have been paid out for relief during the year. There is now in the permanent fund $9,375. Relief has been extended to eighty persons during the year. This report concluds the work of A. M. Atkinson, of Wabash, Ind., as the corresponding secretary of this board, but not without a strong entreaty for greater liberality toward our dependent preachers and their families. If space permitted we should like to give some of his burning words. As it is we cannot here and now but ask you to send to him, or to Howard Cale, 120 E. Market St., Indianapolis, Ind., for a copy of this report. You should not fail to do this and to give it a careful reading.

A MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Rev. C. H. Smith of Plymouth, Conn., Gives the Experience of Himself and Little Girl in a Trying Season—What He Depends Upon.

The testimonials in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla come from a class of people whose words are worth considering. Many clergymen testify to the value of this medicine. Read this:

"By a severe attack of diphtheria I lost two of my children. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic both for myself and little girl and found it most excellent as a means to restore the impoverished blood to its natural state and as a help to appetite and digestion. I depend upon it when I need a tonic and I find it at once efficacious." REV. C. H. SMITH, Congregational parsonage, Plymouth, Conn.

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST

The Oldest Paper in America

Founded A.D. 1728 by Benjamin Franklin

The Curtis Publishing Company

THE ROMANCE OF THE SEACOAST

A series of thrilling articles of little-known phases of life along the Atlantic coast. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

I—The Lights Along the Shore will describe the wondrous changes in lighting, and of the perfect system by which our Government takes charge of the thousand and more lighthouses of the nation. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

MEN & WOMEN OF THE HOUR

Close-Range Studies of Contemporaries

Is the title of a weekly page that displays at a glance the panorama of people prominently before the public—portraits and paragraphs that tell the week's history among the notables. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

POPULAR BIOGRAPHIES

The Post will give, in the course of the year, thousands of brief biographies, and sketches of its writers and authors, illustrated wherever possible with photographic portraits.

THE BEST POEMS IN THE WORLD

The poems in this series will be admirably illustrated, and, wherever possible, there will be given a sketch of the life of the poet, with a portrait, and the story of how each poem came to be written. The poems will be selected, not from the standpoint of the ultra-literary man or woman, but for their appeal to lovers of sentiment. They will be poems of the emotions—those that appeal to the heart; poems that tell a story—those that are filled with human interest. They belong to what may be called the "pocketbook school of poetry"—those poems that one cuts from a newspaper and carries in the pocketbook till they are worn through at the creases. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

II—When the Fisher Fleet Goes Out to Sea. The thrilling dangers of a class seldom heard of—the Nova Scotia fishermen in their daily lives, their hardships and sufferings. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

III—With the Life-Savers Along the Coast will tell of the everyday lives of those brave men who dare death and darkness in their angriest forms—showing the workings of a system that saves thousands of lives yearly.

IV—The Men Who Wreck Ships. It is popularly supposed that wreckers no longer exist; this article will tell of well-organized bands of wreckers who lure on to rocks, by means of false signals, rich vessels for the sake of their treasures. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

V—Perils of the Smuggler's Life. The risks that are taken nightly to circumvent the Customs officials—a business that is much larger to-day than it is supposed to be. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

The illustrations in this series will be the most striking that have ever appeared in the Post. ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

THE SATURDAY EVENING POST WILL BE MAILED TO ANY ADDRESS FROM NOW TO JANUARY 1, 1899, ON RECEIPT OF ONLY TEN CENTS ⁘ ⁘ ⁘ ⁘

THE REGULAR SUBSCRIPTION PRICE IS $2.50 PER YEAR

—We will send the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on trial until the end of this year for twenty-five cents; or from time order is received until Jan. 1st, 1900, for one dollar and seventy-five cents.

—The leading editorial in the Christian Commonwealth, London, Oct. 6th, is devoted to a backward and forward look of that journal, which has just completed its 17th volume. While the editor's ideal has not yet been attained, the journal does not feel disposed to change its course, plans or policy, except to insist more vigorously for a purer Christianity and a clearer presentation of "the old Jerusalem gospel." This is a splendid mission for such a paper in the world's metropolis, and we heartily wish the Commonwealth another 17 years of life in that city on this work.

—Sister Hallam, of McKinney, Texas, writes to tell us of the location of a sister recently locating in this city, that she may be properly acquainted at the nearest church. This is a good plan. Every one knowing of the removal of any member of the Christian Church anywhere to this city should notify us, or the pastor nearest the location, of the fact. Many of our people could no doubt be saved to the cause if they were thus carefully cared for.

—An exchange says that "motion has in it a terrible power." This is a very indefinite statement. A body in motion has power against resisting obstacles, but this is modified by the volume, density and velocity of the moving body. Something analogous to this may be witnessed in the church. This is one of the natural laws of the spiritual domain.

—W. C. McDougal, who has recently removed from Bridgeburg to Winger, Ontario, Canada, and who expects to return to Hiram College, Hiram, Ohio, next fall, says: "Your excellent paper must follow me where I go, for I cannot afford to do without it. I speak a good word for it at every opportunity." We appreciate all such kindly words and assistance, and would be glad if many more of our readers would be at the same pains to extend the circulation of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. By so doing you benefit yourself, your neighbor and the cause for which the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST stands.

—Cards are received announcing the marriage, on Nov. 9th next, at Ocala, Fla., of Miss Minnie Eliza Thompson, daughter of Mrs. Margaret Ross Thompson, to Mr. Charles Epperson Powell.

—W. F. Richardson, Kansas City, Mo., was chosen president of the American Christian Missionary Society, and will preside at Cincinnati over the Jubilee Convention.

—There remains yet some fragments of news from the Chattanooga Convention, which will appear next week.

—No article on the Sunday-school lesson appears this week on account of Dr. Willett's voyage to Europe. He had intended writing ahead for the trip, but was prevented by duties and preparations for the voyage. This will be a disappointment to our readers who have come to regard these articles as a substantial help, but Dr. Willett promised that on his arrival at Antwerp he would forward notes in advance that another break might not thus occur.

—Our frontispiece this week presents a face that is familiar to Christian Endeavor workers throughout the United States. Bro. J. Z. Tyler's active relation with the Christian Endeavor movement and his zealous labors in its behalf, even to the probable permanent impairment of his health, have made him a recognized leader of this modern movement among the young people. His labors in preparing and managing the Bethany Christian Endeavor Courses have earned him the gratitude of all who understand the latent possibilities of Christian Endeavor among us. We are glad to add his picture to our portrait gallery of distinguished men.

—We understand that the Christian Association of Great Britain is likely to want a good man for an important field in that country in the spring. This is a good opening for some strong preacher among us who would like to labor for a few years in England and assist our brethren there in establishing churches and propagating principles in harmony with the New Testament teaching. E. M. Todd, 28 Cromwell Grove, West Kensington Park, London, is the secretary of the English committee who have the selection of the man. Of course, only brethren of established character and reputation as ministers of the Word would be eligible.

—The Central Christian Advocate strikes at a much-needed reform in the following introduction to an editorial on "Political Vilification," in a recent issue. If it wasn't for robbing the country of secular papers we feel like saying that all newspapers that indulge in this kind of political currency ought to be boycotted:

Every time the American people engage in a political campaign of any magnitude—and that means once every two years—the press and platform become rivals as reputation-smirchers. It has become so well known a rule of American political life that he who aspires to public office must expect to have his motives questioned and his reputation assailed, that many a sensitive soul resolutely declines even to consider the propriety of entering the public service, although the views of duty may call in that direction. The country has lost the services of some of its best citizens becaure of this odious peculiarity.

—If this paper reaches you who are not a subscriber, please consider that this is an urgent invitation to join the circle of CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers. Our special offer of $1.75 from now until Jan. 1st, 1900, ought to satisfy you. You may try it until Jan. 1st, 1899, by sending your name and address, together with twenty-five cents. If you appreciate the improvements which we are constantly making in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we should be pleased to have you secure your neighbor as a subscriber. Substantial encouragement at this end of the line will also be appreciated.

—If you are going to say anything, by voice or pen, you must know beforehand what point you are to aim at. What you need at the start is not ideas, but an idea. If one thing possesses you, and you want to convey it to others, words will be at your call to express it. But if you have words in abundance, and try to think of ideas which can be expressed in those words, neither words nor ideas will be worth much to you or your hearers. If the best navigator in the world starts out on a voyage he must decide, to begin with, where he wants to go. Otherwise his charts, his compass, the tides, the currents, the winds, and his nautical knowledge are of little use to him. Your first need in speaking is to be possessed by an idea and a purpose.—Sunday-school Times.

Educational Conference at Moberly.

Remember the Educational Conference to be held at Moberly, Mo., Tuesday, Nov. 1. It is important that the friends of education in the state be present at that conference.

PERSONAL MENTION.

C. R. Hudson, of Franklin, Ind., has gone to New Haven, Conn., for a postgraduate course in Yale University.

W. J. Russell, of Kalamazoo, Mich., has been tendered a unanimous call to preach for the church at Rushville, Ind.

Cards announcing the wedding of Mr. J. A. Briggs and Miss Bertha Widman, at Chattanooga, Tenn., Oct. 15th, have been received at this office.

The British Weekly says that Dr. Lorimer began his great sermon before the Baptist Missionary Society, at Nottingham, England, "with closed eyes, level voice and measured utterances." He did not open his eyes, it seems, until he was well into the depth and spirit of his sermon.

A farewell reception was tendered to Dr. F. M. Kirkham and wife and their daughter, Grace, in the parlors of the Central Christian Church, Chicago, on Friday evening, Oct. 14. About one hundred and fifty persons gathered to say good-bye to the departing ftiends. Short addresses were made by Bros. Black, Dr. Kirkham, Arthur O. Garrison, Bros. Hester, Palmer and others.

Bruce Wolverton, who for the past 6 months has been preaching for the Second Christian Church of this city, has returned to Portland, Ore. The Second Church had to give him up for want of sufficient finances for his salary and its current expenses and debts. While at the Second there were 40 additions under his ministry. The church found Bro. Wolverton to be an efficient, active pastor. As the church will arrange with its own forces to conduct its services, for awhile at least, no preacher need apply for the pulpit.

The following excellent testimony to appreciated worth and labor which appeared recently in the Courier-Journal, will be readily seconded by all who know the parties named and who have read their excellent books: "One of the most scholarly and interesting books that I have recently seen is 'The Song of Songs,' by Prof. J. W. Ellis, of Plattsburg, Mo. His translation and arrangement lend such a charm to the book that the student of the Bible must read it with greatly intensified interest. J. Breckenridge Ellis, of Plattsburg, is a worthy son of his father, and to his other publications he has added one of greatest interest, a book entitled 'King Saul.' It is one of those rare books that one can scarcely down after he begins reading it. Send to these authors and procure a copy of these books. You will not be disappointed. Our brethren should hail with delight such cultured and scholarly works coming, as they do, from our own people."

On last Friday, Bro. Muckley, of Kansas City, Mo., our Church Extension secretary, paid this office a flying visit. His face was still aglow with the spirit and fervor of the Chattanooga convention, from which he has just returned.

C. E. Pomeroy, of Marion, Kan., is assisting L. W. Klinker at Peabody, Kan., in a series of gospel meetings instead of as stated in this column last week. These brethren expect to continue there four weeks, then go to Marion to hold a meeting. Bros. Klinker and Pomeroy, the pastors at these places, are exchanging meetings and Prof. H. D. Funk, of Borner, Kan., is to lead the song services.

THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

Great attention is now being given to the Home Department of the Sunday-school. It is intended for all persons who for any reason cannot attend the regular sessions of the school, yet who desire to study the International Bible Lessons, and keep pace with the great Sunday-school movement.

The Supplies.—The supplies necessary for the Home Department, in addition to the Lesson Annuals, Quarterlies or Papers that may be used in the school, are as follows:

1. Application Blanks for membership in the class to be signed by the applicant and filed with the Secretary of the Department.

2. The Home Register, containing full explanations for conducting the Department, with ten Test Questions on each lesson of the quarter, followed by blank spaces for writing the answers.

3. Certificates of Proficiency, to be given to members at the end of the quarter, signed by the Superintendent and Secretary, based on the written answers to the questions on the lessons of the quarter.

Price List.—The prices of these necessary supplies are as follows: 1. Application Cards, 10 cents per dozen; 50 cents per 100. 2. The Home Register, 5 cents per copy, or in packages of not less than ten copies, 3 cents each. 3. Certificates of Proficiency, 25 cents per dozen, or $1.50 per 100.

Order your supplies for the Fourth Quarter of 1898 immediately and start the good work.

THE NOONDAY OF THE SOUL.

L. H. STINE.

I.—THE POTENCY OF LIGHT.

Light is the countenance of the Everlasting. Its effulgence is the garment of the Almighty. Holy light was the first "offering of heaven"—the one in which God built himself into the world, and it became the sublimely beautiful symbol of the "true light" that, in the process of time, would ensphere the soul of man and would irradiate his mind through all its noble organs. It is the likeness of the Eternal and, with its "burning head" lifted aloft, lights one "deep into the Deity." Light went went before all things as the precursor of Cosmos, and it played the first part in the history of the world. Light was the prelude of creation's destiny. The creation hymn begins its lofty narration of "almighty works" with the birth of light. That eternal beam that shot forth from the hand of God to penetrate primeval gloom, to raise the infant world from its cradle of chaos, and to guide it over the highway of vast geologic time to the sunlight of things, demanded the first note of praise. "Let there be light" is the first recorded word of the determining will of God.

The vision of the dayspring from on high, and of the rising of the Sun of Righteousness in victorious struggle with unsuccessful darkness, forms the prologue of the "sweeping acts" of the imperial gospel theme.

The ringing imperative of cosmical history is the world's first need, whether in evolving cosmos from chaos, or in conforming the soul to the image or the Christ. When the day grew dark on the scene of his desperate fight, from morning until evening, the "prayer of Ajax was for light." "The soul of his century," the literary idol of his time, Goethe, on whose meditative mind, in one of its inspired moments of dreamy revery, dawned the brilliant generalization that all the parts of a plant, from the seed to the blossom, are "mere modifications of a leaf"—a bold generalization of rare ingenuity and beauty that revolutionized the science of botany, this "master of histories, mythologies, philosophies, sciences and natural literatures" (Emerson), this poet that strikes the "harp with the hero's strength and grace," when dying called for "Light! O, for more light!" Having professed to seek the truth all his life, and having written much on Christian themes, Feuerbach expired with the confession of bewilderment and despair on his lips: "Truth! O, truth! where is it?" Sheridan, the brilliant parliamentarian, screamed in his dying hour: "O, I am absolutely undone!" These stars, and others, such as Hobbes and poor Goldsmith, that shone with the lustre of stars of the first magnitude in the firmament of mind, passed forth into the night at their setting. Had the light of literature, of science and of philosophy—true image of the "true light" that blazed from the enthusiasm of their genius— disappeared in the refulgence of the "light of life," as a star hides itself in the splendor of the day instead of sinking below the horizon of hope, resting on a soul winged for its ascent to be with God, it would have gleamed forever in the lordlier skies.

Beams of light are God's creative luminaries and the sacred instruments he handles for the accomplishment of his purpose and for the effectuation of his decrees. The Creator commissioned them to proclaim the evangel of the day and they gave to the world the "bridal of the earth and sky." Their gleams wreathed the face of nature with radiant smiles on the rose, on the tender violet and on the "fields until they laugh and sing." They tune the summer's silent organ for its throbbing chant of love and praise. Their invisible touch opens the courtly tulip and their summer's glow crowns the year with its coronet of golden corn. Speeding on their way through the dark shower that fronts the crimson west, they expand high on the evening sky the brightening bow of promise and change its harmonious colors with a revelation of God.

One day while holding a spectacle lens in each hand, Hans Lippershey directed them toward the steeple of a neighboring church when a "flashlight" out of the infinite revealed to him the future telescope. Sporting along the line of a spider's web, a sunbeam made known to Sir Samuel Brown the principle of the suspension bridge. A beam of light exposed to view the behavior of a shipworm perforating a piece of wood, and suggested to Sir Marc Isambard Brunel the copy of the Thames tunnel. Piercing the long rows and proud tops of European pines, where dwelt the spirit of Odin and Thor, beams of light suggested to the Northern imagination designs for the "long-drawn aisles" of Christian temples and patterns for the gorgeously painted cathedral window. A friendly beam playing about a swinging chandelier in the Cathedral of Pisa revealed to the youthful mind of Galileo the long-hidden secret of the pendulum.

They were beams of light that revealed to the lawgiver the pattern of heavenly things which should serve as the model of things on earth, and that taught the accomplished artist how to conform to the true model in idealizing the heavenly. They opened the prophet's eyes to the "infinite book of secrecy" and inflamed the spirit of his poets with the feeling of momentous truths. They guided the holy apostle in the use of the mystic keys designed to unlock the kingdom of the Son of Man to the nations sitting in darkness, and they wove rich hues of promise for the reformer and martyr of the better life beyond their conflict and their desolation. Young Saul, resolute in defending the honor of the ancient faith, stricken to the earth by a legion of victorious beams, arose to his feet the "perfectest herald" of the new evangelism. They led the mind of Savonarola, the prophet of Florence, into his deep sense of the divine presence and awoke the slumbering energies of Luther for the epochal action of the reformation. "The glory of the Lord" hung like a transfiguration cloud over the land of the Cæsars and "while the Roman Empire was invaded by open violence or undermined by slow decay, a pure and humble religion quietly insinuated itself into the minds of men, grew up in silence and sobriety, derived new vigor from opposition and finally erected the banner of the cross on the ruins of the capitol" (Gibbon).

Waves of light not only evoke the tender germs of plants from the earth, and generate the chlorophyll within the leaves of plants and the tissue of muscular and nervous fibres; not only give color to the fragrant blossoms and generate the electromagnetic activity of the earth's crust; but in varied gradations of intensity and duration are "mysteriously connected with the intellectual susceptibilities, and the melancholy an cheerful tone of one's feelings" (Von Humboldt). One is consciously aware of the sensible difference produced in one's moral nature by a dark day or a bright one. Every ray of sunshine distils a balm to mitigate the pains of life, and a cordial of hope flows in every beam to delight and exhilerate the delicate feelings of the soul. Light gives zest to the spirits, vivacity and joy to the heart, and crowds the mind with cheerful ideas. It is the life of the soul as well as the soul of the universe. Light conceals an occult power of enchantment and fascination that tranquilizes one's feelings, composes one's thoughts and inspirits one's heart. "The sun chases sadness from the sky, and dissipates the clouds that darken the human heart" (Pliny the elder). This is king David's idea in his beautiful epithet—"the LORD is my light." Light is a figure for comfort. In a strain of confidence and hope he sings of the providence of the Lord of light who makes plain the way of salvation. It is the function of light to dispel the shadows of doubt and fear, and to create faith and trust. Recognizing the inspiring effects of light on one's moral nature, one can appreciate the feelings of the cynical philosopher, Diogenes, who ordered an intruder to stand out of his sunshine. His morose temper craved the sunlight. No other power could successfully counteract the sombreness of his nature. Many a man having degenerated into the sullen disposition of a misanthrope would be led into a more assuring faith in the goodness of God, into a serener apprehension of the future, and into a more comprehensive view of the humanity, philanthropy and patriotism of man by a restoring, lubricating and balmy bath of sunshine.

The wonderful discovery in natural science that "no substance can be exposed to the sun's rays without undergoing in time chemical change," furnishes a forcible illustration of the transfiguring power of the "light of the gospel of the glory of Christ" (2 Cor. 4:4), as it is diffused through the civic and religious structure of society. One is told that a sunbeam is one of the most powerful agencies of nature. With a magic force it breaks up the strongest chemical affinities, and creates a myriad combinations that tend to the harmony of the world. In the Bible it is said the sun is the emblem of God. It is the glowing lamp of the world—lucerna mundi, as Copernicus was wont to name it. Such a symbol of God conveys an impressive truth when one thinks of the sun as the source of light and heat. A new conception of the sun's energy is imparted to the emblem, however, when one learns from astronomy that it is the center of attraction, and when one, in addition, takes in the generalization that the sun is the ultimate physical source of every form of power that exists in the world. The winds waft the commerce of every nation over the seas, but it is the heat of the sun that rarifies the air and sets the winds in motion. The running stream yields a power that grinds one's grain, turns one's spindles, works one's looms and drives one's forge; but it is because the sun has gathered up the vapors from the bosom of the ocean—the "mother of life"—that fall on the hills and are now meandering back to the source from whence they came, molding the surface of nature in their course, into the forms of exquisite beauty. The expansive energy of steam propels one's engine, but the fire with which it operates is locked up in the coal—the remains of extinct forests stored away among the hills, or derived from existing forests. Both the primeval and existing forests drew their substance from the sun. It is the chemical force resident in the sun's rays that disengaged their carbon and laid it up as a source of power for future use. The animal exerts a force by muscular contraction, but he draws it from the vegetable on which he feeds; the vegetable derives it from the sun whose rays of light and heat determine its growth. Every time one lifts his arm or takes a step he draws on the power the sun gives him. When one steps into a railway carriage, or aboard an ocean steamer, it is the power of the sun that hurries one along. The gentle breezes that fan one's cheek when the days are sultry, and the restless tornado that levels cities in its fury are obedient servants of the sun (Prof. Green).

Peace, "dear Muse of Arts, plenties, and joyful births," is winning her victories among the most Christian nations, and is sheathing in a beautiful calm the thirsty and vengeful sword; but it is because the principles illustrated in the life of Jesus have brought the man at arms to serve upon his knees. Christendom witnesses with interest and delight the joyful coronation of childhood, and with gladsomest carol and pealing anthem celebrates the sacredness of infancy; but it is because Jesus shed his blessing like a "celestial benison" on the head of childhood, anointed the child-life as the leader of the spiritual race, erected its mysterious glory into the standard of the new life and made its "virtues of simplicity, humility and worldliness" (Chrysostom) the condition of entrance into his kingdom of grace. Every child brings into the world with it the image of the perfect life, and the work of the Christ is to perpetuate that image where it has not been blurred by sin, or to restore it where it has been lost. Woman is no longer the slave or toy of man wherever the transfiguring light of the gospel has gone. Her form is the light of every path one pursues. Her hand strews with flowers life's weariest way and raises fallen hopes to new visions again; with many a smile of peace imparts comfortable feelings to the lonely spirit and pours a celestial balm on the desolate heart, but it is because Jesus exemplified in his personal life the gentler virtues of human nature in a way they had never been honored before. Greek culture had glorified in men the power of intellect and knowledge, of courage and heroism, and said, Blessed are the knowing, blessed are the brave, blessed are the artistic, blessed are the heroic, and had celebrated in admired strains the beauty of the tenderer graces of women; but it remained as the transcendent achievement of Jesus to blend inseparably for all time in one harmonious life the feminine graces of human nature with the sterner virtues of man. The exemplification of the delicate graces of woman in combination with the masculine attributes of character was the sublime miracle of the life of Jesus. He was mighty in word and in deed, because the tenderer and finer virtues of human nature rose in his life to the full measure of their power. This extraordinary union in one person of the weak and the strong as the old civilizations regarded these two poles of human nature, is the distinguishing mark or sign of the Christianity of Christ. Neither an arc lamp, telephony, phonography, telegraphy, science, philosophy, art nor literature indicates the true progress or an age, but the gradation that woman records in the scale of civic and religious life and the honor man pays to her salvation in its broadest sense, is the positive assertion of the charming excellences and supernal powers of sweet sympathy, patient kindness, heavenly pity, prevailing gentleness, native simplicity, vestal modesty and endless trust, and it is the light of Jesus that evokes these divine attributes from the human breast and develops them into the perfect man.

The potent beam that formed in the brain of Isaiah his "odes of silver tone, of which the ear is never weary," or thrilled the soul of King David when his lyric melodies were begotten; that imparted to Sampson his herculean strength, or endued Elijah with royal power for triumphant miracle; that enlivened the artistic taste of Bezaleel with a "clear perception and a strong, bold hand," to beautify the sacred tent, or animated the talent of Hiram, the Tyrian artist, to engrave precious metals for the embellishment of King Solomon's temple, came from the same fountain, illumining alike the natural and the spiritual talent. Light has a common centre of power. The light has prepared the mechanical skill of Aholiab to work in blue, in purple and in scarlet, moved the genius of Raphael to create the "Transfiguration" for the embellishment of the cathedral of Narbonne; that guided the talent of Gideon in his military exploits, inspired the genius of Wellington to join his sword to the providence of God for the overthrow of Napoleon, and for the reversion of the march of Eureopean events toward the "glories of the Possible;" that illumed the faculties of Paul in the midst of the Areopagus, inspired Luther at the Diet of Worms; that streams like a celestial tide through the chapters of Luke's gospel, sparkles like gems of the morning on the immortal pages of the Imitation or gleams like a serene hope through the stanzas of In Memoriam. It was the light of God that shone upon the "trackless floods" for the Pilgrim Fathers in their search for liberty in the "frozen regions of the North." It was by the light of God streaming from the fountain of the Eternal for the expansion of the human mind that Newton discovered the principle of gravitation. Witnessing the contractions of a frog's legs, Galvani had a vision, through a "flashlight" from God, of the coming telegraph. The discovery was not an accident or a work of chance, it was a providence. The strange dream at sea and the perils of the shipwreck which followed that gave to young Alexander Campbell the direction of his life; the sermon that fixed the mind of Francis of Assisi on his life's great object, and the violent storm that hurled its bolt at his feet on the road to Erfurth, encompassing his soul with the anguish and fear of death, were not the works of chance. God is conceiving and is projecting his plans, and is enfolding them like lilies, pure and white. This world of spiritual entities and prophecies is not moving mechanically, like a clock, driven by the force of some powerful spring that God wound up before he entered upon his rest. His light is shining now as it has ever shone since first it tinted the clouds of chaos. By means of the grass and flowers it imprints the fields with the hieroglyphics of "eternal verities." It flung its beams on the seashore where lay a tortoise shell wherein the soul of music slumbered and nerved Apollo's hand to loose the "sacred tongue of God." It inspired the simple effusion of Ruth and awoke the triumphant ode of Miriam. From the fire of genius it evoked the drama of Job and the Canticles of Solomon. It revealed to Cornelius his acceptance as a child of God, and opened the devout heart of Lydia to "give heed unto the things which were spoken of by Paul." It beams in the burning words of the witness of truth and shines in the convincing testimony of holy living. Now it is seen creating a plain and simple faith, then shining through an enchanted hope, at last, blazing in the exultant flames of self-devoted love, consuming the carnal members that are upon the earth and investing with the character of a new life the true, the beautiful and the good.

MONUMENTAL EVIDENCE OF SCRIPTURE.

T. DARLEY ALLEN.

The argument for Christianity is continually gaining strength from discoveries in the East. So much has come to light of late years to demonstrate the truth of the history contained in the Bible that infidels have been forced to abandon positions which, prior to those discoveries, were believed to be impregnable.

In the early years of the present century the Old Testament was supported by but very slight testimony from secular sources, the greater part of it antedating the earliest productions of the pagan historians that have come down to us. Infidels, therefore, could deny the truth of any of the Old Testament statements that they pleased without any fear of having their claims shown to be unwarranted.

Now, however, there is abundance of evidence in support of the truth of the Hebrew Scriptures, and of a kind, too, which infidels must admit to be of a reliable character. This evidence, recorded upon stone and clay, and unquestionably the work of men who were contemporaries of the Old Testament writers, cannot be affected by the most hostile criticism.

Among the most important dicoveries of archæologists are the Moabite Stone and the Inscription of Siloam. Upon the former, a stone of black basalt, discovered in what was once the land of Moab, is an inscription giving a record of Mesha, the Moabite king and corroborating 2 Kings 3. The Inscription of Siloam is contained on an artifical tablet in the rock forming the southern wall of a channel leading into the Pool of Siloam. The inscription is in the purest biblical Hebrew and cannot be much later than the time of Mesha. Its chief value lies in the fact that it overwhelmingly refutes the claim that infidels so often urged, that the Jewish people of the royal period were rude and barbarous. The inscription shows that the Jews of that time were a remarkably cultured and literary people.

A well-known critic referred, a few decades ago, to the Hittites as a "mythical nation of ancient times, for the existence of which there is no extra-biblical evidence." To-day, however, every critic admits that the Hittites were among the most powerful races of people of remote antiquity, monumental evidence, discovered in 1879, showing that they were able to cope with the mighty nations of Assyria and Egypt in the fourteenth century before our era.

The Old Testament references to Ahab, Tiglath-Pileser, Shalmaneser, Sennacherib, Cyrus and other kings find illustration in the discoveries of archæologists. The names of the cities of Palestine conquered by Shishak, king of Egypt, still to be seen upon the temple walls at Karnak, and the Jewish faces of his captives are still visible, although sculptured many years ago in the days of Rehoboam. The history given in 2 Chronicles 12:1-8 is, therefore, shown to be perfectly true by evidence that even infidels must accept. The explorer has also unearthed Pithom, the treasure city which the Israelites built, and bricks made without straw are still to be seen there. The ruined palace of Pharaoh-hophra, at Tahpanhes, whither King Zedediah's daughters fled for refuge (Jeremiah 43), has also been discovered.

The remarkable evidence of the truth of Old Testament history afforded by archæological researches, strong as it is to-day, may double its strength through the discoveries of the next few years. Many able scholars are devoting their lives to the investigation of Oriental antiquities, and there is every probability of a great deal of fresh light being thrown upon the scriptural history.

"IS THE WORLD GROWING WORSE?"

T. DAVIS.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Sept. 22, 1898, contains an article from the pen of Bro. J. J. Haley under the above caption. In that article Bro. Haley seems to have departed from his usually clear and analytical style of thought and diction. Many of his statements seem to me to be misleading. On many of his statements and inferences there are many who, like myself, desire instruction. Bro. Haley, by implication, censures certain authors for their pessimistic tendency of thought regarding the present and future condition of the world, and then, after repeating the editor's question, "Is God dead?" declares that the optimism of the prophets of Israel was based on a clear conception that the moral order of the world and the immanence of God in all his works were the sure guarantees of the ultimate triumph of righteousness.

It is on the question of the immanence of God, or what is the same thing, the general and special directing providence of God in the affairs of the world, that I—and I am sure many others—desire enlightenment, not merely as an abstract problem in theology or metaphysics, but because of its intimate connection with the unfortunate condition of about nineteen-twentieths of the human race. If it is true that the stupendous and for the greater part sickening panorama of life, from the time history first reveals it to us down to the present time, is but the visible manifestation of the controlling power of God in the affairs of history, then I see no good reason why we should question the truthfulness or reasonableness of the old saying, "Whatever is to be will be, and whatever is, is right."

Does Bro. Haley mean to affirm that all the events of history, even to the most insignificant thoughts and actions of men, are under the immediate direction of God, and in fulfillmeut of a universal plan or purpose formed in the infinite mind from all eternity?

If God exercises a universal and special providence, can it embrace less than every thought, volition and action in the world? Is this what men mean when they talk about "divine providence," "providence o God," "divine purpose," etc.? Is God's providence directive and compelling as well as permissive? If yes, does that fact affect in any degree our volitional freedom, and to what extent? Also, to what extent does it affeet our accountability? If no, then I would like to be told exactly what men mean when they talk of God's overruling providence? (See CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Aug. 4, 1898, p. 137.)

Again, if God's providence, or plan, or moral order, each of which we are told is directed to the accomplishment of the final triumph of righteousness, does not embrace in its working every minutia of life, how are we to determine the limit of its action? It occurs to me that there are many wholly unwarrantable things said concerning the providence of God. For instance, it has been repeatedly asserted, with the confidence of almost absolute certainty, that our great naval victories over the Spaniards were directly ordered by providence. Let that be admitted for a moment while we ask whether God in his providence assisted Turkey in her wars against the Greeks and Armenians. Who that is not destitute of the commonest feelings of fairness and humanity will assert that he did? If the doctrine of the divine immanence be true, who dares to deny that he did?

And if this doctrine be true I see no escape from the conclusion that all the crime and misery and suffering that have ever cursed humanity are but so many of the factors which God ever has been and still is employing in the solution of the great problem of life. What can be more horribly revolting to any one possessing the feelings and endowments of a proper man?

Finally, why should we believe in the "divine immanence?" Can the belief in such a doctrine contribute in any degree towards making people wiser or better? It is a question on which we reasonably hold different opinions, therefore there is nothing certain known about it. And I am utterly unable to see how such a belief, with all it implies, can increase one's reverence, not to say respect, for the Creator.

Our good brother makes sundry statements to show that the world is not growing worse, some of which I wish to notice briefly.

1. As regards the appliances for the relief of poverty, I suppose it is the proper thing for the millions of hungry wretches in the world to be thankful for small favors. Doling a scanty charity to relieve present suffering is no justification for a social condition which compels men and women to drag out weary lives of menial toil; lives as destitute of real enjoyment as those of beasts. Whatever amelioration of suffering has come to the laboring class is a product of force exerted in the face of danger of death or imprisonment, and the church, as a unit, has no right to claim one iota of credit for it; for she has ever been, as now, a passive spectator in the conflict. I will say in this connection, that it will be in order to boast of the civilization which protects the horse from the brutal treatment of his driver when there are laws made and executed that will effectually protect the laborer and tenant from the worse than brutal treatment of master (employer) and landlord.

Here is the proper place to notice what our brother says about disarmament—that pleasing but delusive dream. Dulusive, because so long as there are so many millions of struggling human beings to writhe and groan and contend against the oppression of mammon, just so long will it be convenient for those whose wealth shapes legislation to use bullets and bayonets to hush the mutterings of discontent and to reduce the refractory to obedience. Nations will not disarm, because nations are ruled directly or indirectly by those whose interests it is to maintain armies.

2. "Modern liberty has completely triumphed over the brutal despotism of the past." I think the facts hardly warrant so positive an assertion. But let that pass while we reflect for a moment. What does our brother mean by modern liberty? Was it not liberty that inspired Miltiades and Leonidas and Judas Maccabæus and the heroes of all times, who raised their arms against the usurpations of tyrants?

But how did this fact called "modern liberty" become such a factor in the world? Did tyrants in every form, political and ecclesiastic, touched by the cries of suffering, grant willingly, peaceably, to the victims of their cruelty the right and privilege to enjoy unmolested the sweet boon of liberty? Is it not rather the product or achievement of long ages of the most fearful and persistent conflict? Rivers of blood, prisons, tortures, racks and scaffolds, sufferings unutterably horrible, are a few of the items in the terrible price paid for liberty up to the present time.

I challenge any one to point to a single case in history wherein the "powers that were" granted peaceably one solitary right to the masses. Are there still some concessions to make? Have all an equal chance to-day in the terrific struggle for existence? And does the sweet angel of love and fraternal fairness pervade the hearts of those to whom want and wretchedness kneel in tearful supplication, in sufficient strength to impel them to relax their inhuman grasp without more bloodshed? Time alone can tell.

3. I do not know our brother's age, but if he is as old as I am, I am at a loss to know why he should go back to the wars of Cromwell and Napoleon in his search after exhibitions of savage brutality in war. Our own civil war furnished examples by the thousands that would call forth the blush of shame on the swarthy cheek of a Comanche. Whether we are so changed since then as to justify us in saying we would not do so now if the opportunity were given us by letting loose our passions can be partially guessed after witnessing a "modern" lynching.

4. All that is said about our war with Spain seems to me to be in rather bad taste just now, when our patriotic fervor is chilled and the air murky with charges of mean, low, arrant knavery and political favoritism, which threatens to smirch even the garments of our Chief Magistrate. Would we not better be a little modest until we ascertain to what extent a greed for pelf and political preferment have been mixed up in the affairs in which so many seem disposed to make the providence of God a prominent factor?

5. "Slavery is gone." Yes, and to one who witnessed the fiendish display of evil passion in the tragic events which marked its exit, the bare mention of its going as being one of the triumphs of Christianity must needs seem monstrous. If there was anything Christian connected with the destruction of slavery, how can we account for the existence of the bitter prejudices which perpetuated the distinction, "Church North and church South?"

6. "Polygamy is going. The saloon is doomed." Before venturing any remarks of my own I wish to quote from a recent sermon by Dr. Talmage. First, as to the status of saloons, he says: "Then look for a moment at the evils of drunkenness. Whether you live in Washington, or New York, or Chicago, or Cincinnati, or Savannah, or Boston, or in any of the cities of this land, count up the saloons on that street as compared with the saloons five years ago, and see they are growing far out of proportion to the increase of population." How many weeks has it been since there was quoted in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST a statement from a prominent religious paper, showing that the municipal power of St. Louis was held a powerless victim in the grasp of the rum power of the city? What is the condition of our own proud Iowa? In 1882 we gave a majority vote which we confidently believed would rid our fair state of the rum curse. To-day the saloon is "regnant and rampant," and in almost every contest with the people judicious rulings seem to be on the side of the saloon. So much for the "doom" of the saloon.

In the matter of polygamy, Dr. Talmage, in the sermon referred to, says: "It is no uncommon thing in our cities to see men in high position, with two or three families, or ladies willing solemnly to marry the very swine of society if they be wealthy. The Bible is all ablaze with denunciations against this impure life, but many of the American ministers uttering not one point-blank word against this iniquity lest some old libertine throw up his church pew." This is the testimony of a witness who certainly is in possession of means of knowing whereof he speaks. How many other ministers could give evidence to the same effect if they were not muzzled by the fear of losing the patronage of the wealthy.

And so it seems that it does not require a very exhaustive research to show, not that the world is growing worse, for that I do not believe, but that much that is said and written about the semi-miraculous triumphs of Christian civilization in these times of ours is wholly unauthorized by the facts in the case, and is, therefore, misleading and harmful. Also, that the prime factor in the perpetuation and extension of all the great modern evils is the power and love of wealth. All of which goes to prove that there remain many adequate reasons for the complaints of the "vile pessimists."

SUPERNATURALISM.

J. W. LOWBER.

Supernatural literally means above nature. It may not be unnatural, but above the ordinary laws of nature. When understood the supernatural is as much governed by law as what we call the natural. A great naturalist has said the laws of nature are the thoughts of God. When we know even as we are known the distinction between the natural and the supernatural will disappear. The established order of things is not to be violated by any who is a subject of the laws of nature. None except the Author of nature has a right to interfere with these laws. If it can be established as a fact that these laws have been interfered with even by higher law, then there can be no doubt about the existence of a supernatural Author who presides over and governs the natural world.

One of the most eminent of modern skeptical philosophers was the celebrated La Place. This great man claimed that the probability of the continuance of the laws of nature is superior to any other evidence, and to the best established historical facts. This position claims that the probability of the perpetuity of the natural law is superior to the evidence of the senses, to the evidence of testimony; in fact, to all evidence. This difficulty comes up against the argument of the skeptical philosopher: How does he know anything about the laws of nature except through the testimony of the senses? We cannot make progress in anything and ignore the testimony of the senses. It is also impossible for the philosopher to get along and deny all historical evidence. No man lives long enough and has enough personal experience to talk about the permanency of the laws of nature. It is only upon historical evidence that he can base any such claims.

All science is against the doctrine that everything has continued from eternity as it now is. Geology teaches that the earth was once in a chaotic state. Since that time new laws have been added to nature and the old ones have been greatly revised. The Nebular Hypothesis claims that the whole system of nature was once in a nebulous state. This gaseous state, which is the most refined state of matter, was not the permanent state, for matter did not continue in that state. As matter is inert it never could have reached that state without supernatural agency. It is impossible to account for the origin of life if we reject the supernatural. Whatever may have been the law by which the first man and woman were produced, they were miracles; for no such law continues in operation at the present time. It ceased to operate after the origin of man, and the purpose of progress after this appears to have been to produce a perfect man. All science testifies to the existence of the miraculous. It is the law of nature that cold contracts; but when it reaches the freezing point this law is reversed, so ice is lighter than water. The Author of nature here introduces a new law for the welfare of man. The prophecies and miracles of the Bible cannot be accounted for without a belief in the supernatural. It is not surprising that the great skeptic, Rochester, became a believer when he had studied carefully the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah. I cannot see how any candid student of the book of Isaiah can otherwise than believe in the Christ of prophecy. Every conscientious student of the Bible and of nature must reach the conclusion that the Christianity of the Bible is a divine institution.

We all have our mother tongue, and linguistic science certainly teaches that the first man and woman had a teacher. Whatever may be true in reference to the law of evolution, like Mother Earth it is in itself dumb, and if like the other laws of nature it is the thought of God; then, after all, it is the Father in heaven who taught our first parents. The supernatural is, therefore, required in order to make man a speaking being. Language is of divine origin, and God not only made use of it in the creation of the heavens and earth, but also in giving man a revelation of his will. The Word was in the beginning with God, and the Word was God. The same Word became flesh, and dwelt among us. While the incarnation is not unnatural, it is the greatest manifestation of the supernatural.

"NOT AS THE WORLD GIVETH, GIVE I UNTO YOU."

T. H. BLENUS.

The customary salutation of the Jews, both in saluting friends and bidding them farewell, was by the use of a term equivalent to "Peace be unto you." The Savior alludes to this custom when he says to his disciples, "Peace I leave with you," but to show that he is not merely using a common form, and in a common manner, he adds the remark so worthy our attention, "Not as the world giveth, give I unto you." In the first place, the men of the world are unable to confer the peace which in their salutations they desire to bestow upon their friends, but the wishes of Christ were not thus impotent. The world's peace is transitory and often visionary, but the peace of Christ will endure forever. When the world proclaims peace to us the exclamation often wants the principle of sincerity. It is not difficult to find many whose words instead of being the unequivocal ineterpreters of their heartfelt sentiments are in direct opposition to them. There are many who cultivate with assiduity the wretched art of concealing the most unworthy and unscrupulous designs, by an imposing and extremely affectionate exterior, who with a cruel dexterity dissemble the true emotions of the soul that they may abuse the unsuspecting sincerity of those with whom they come in contact, who decorate and adorn with beautiful and sweetly scented garlands the victims they are leading to the slaughter. How often, while the whole heart is rankling with envy or aflame with anger, do the lips utter professions of regard and attachment. This is the way of the world, and I deem it not an exaggerated representation of its insincerity. Thousands will accede to what we have written who, deceived by vain assurances of affection, by feigned expressions of respect, supposed that they had found warm and true friends, but who in the hour of trial have found these pretended friends, on whose pretentions and caresses they confidently relied, cold, distant, and unheeding to the voice of their needs, and in the hour of trial treacherously abandoning them. Thousands will attest its truth who have been the dupes of those whom they imagined were attached to their interests, whose confidence has been betrayed by those in whom they supposed it was most firmly placed, but who have found by sad experience that the professions of the world are generally a strategem which selfishness and self-love employ for the accomplishment of their designs. Not so with the expressed attachment of the Lord Jesus. Disgusted with the world's treachery, indignant at its falsehood, we turn our thoughts to the words of our Lord—"Peace be with you;" "Peace I leave with you." There is no falsehood here, no dissimulation of friendship. These words drop from lips that never knew guile, and come welling up from a heart into which deceit never entered. Reproving all sin, Christ's indignation was yet peculiarly excited by fraud, deceit and double-dealing, either in word or action. If ever there were times when Jesus laid aside his meekness and lamb-like gentleness, it was when he directed his thunders and pronounced his woes upon the Pharisees, whose outward deportment and language were in opposition with their inward sentiments. Christ never deceived a hope, never betrayed the confidence of a single soul that relied upon his assurances and trusted in his Word. That is an unhappy man, indeed, who has no other reliance than a world which perpetually dupes, deludes and disappoints, but thrice happy are they who have found in the Savior a friend who will never frustrate their expectations, and who will in the hour of trial and adversity justify his sincerity by the most clear and unequvocal proofs. In the midst of the fluctuations and trials of this life we need some sure support on which we may confidently and with the assurance of confidence lean, some faithful bosom companion on whom we may unreservedly rely. An insincere, insecure world is not calculated to be such a support. Too often do we find as Amasa found in Joab, treachery approaching us with the accents of peace on its lips, while it firmly grasps the deadly, hidden dagger of death. A sincere, faithful, supporting, guileless, comforting Jesus is the one who, ever near to us, "is able to do abundantly above what we ask or think."

Fortune For Young Men.

The new, loud, clear, Giant Talking Machine is creating the greatest sensation in large cities. The new machine and complete public exhibition outfit can be had for less than $25.00. Examination free, and any brilliant young man without experience can fill a hall every evening at 25c. admission. People go wild over this new invention. HOW PEOPLE LOVE TO BE HUMBUGGED.

One of the chief topics of the hour in England is the history of M. Louis de Rougemont. During the last two months this gentleman has been amazing the world with reports of his personal experiences as the new Robinson Crusoe. He has succeeded in fascinating that immense section of the public who were so faithfully characterized by Barnum as "delighting to be humbugged." To my own mind we are gaining another illustration of the effect of faith, which is simply belief in testimony. If the testimony is false, then the faith is false also, and yet it may be most sincere. Now, M. de Rougemont is testifying to such wonders as the world never heard of before, and multitudes are being bewitched by his extraordinary record. He solemnly declares that he has spent thirty years amongst cannibal savages in unknown regions of Australia. Sir George Newnes, the Baronet editor of many popular magazines, and one of the members of our Parliament on the Liberal side, was so impressed with the veracity of the adventurer that he at once ordered his staff to supply him with everything that he needed, and he undertook to publish the account of Rougemont's sufferings and achievements. Truly this is a specimen of simple faith on the part of one of our cleverest public men, the most successful publisher of our time, and as simple faith is invariably contagious, the enthusiasm for Rougemont has spread in the most wildfire fashion. For instance, at the recent meetings of the British Association of Science, perhaps the most learned assembly in the world, Rougemont was actually invited to deliver an address, and although a few men plainly expressed their convictions that he was imposing on public credulity and attempted to put him through a heckling from which he at once shrank, he was received with the most cordial and childlike confidence. Now, this sort of faith is very different from that required either by the law or the gospel, whereby testimony is demanded from the mouth of not less than two or three witnesses. We are not asked by the New Testament to believe on the testimony of any one eyewitness that Jesus rose from the dead. Many of the testimonies are presented to us, and it is the convergence of testimony from men and women of all temperaments and all ranks which overwhelms unbelief and slays doubt at the empty tomb of the Redeemer. We are being asked to believe in a series of miraculous incidents in connection with Rougemont, simply on his own individual and unsupported testimony, and many people who can never believe the multitudinous proofs of the truth of the Christian religion, instantly and greedily swallow anything marvelous which an unknown pretender is pleased to offer them.

WHAT LOUIS DE ROUGEMONT SAYS.

One very serious matter is that Rougemont's backers are trying to form a syndicate to explore and open the wonderful fields where this king of the Cannibals declares that he found crude gold besides many a gem of purest ray serene. This means that many gullible persons are about to be swindled out of their money, as so many have been in every country at all times by pretentious impostors. I fear we are about to witness the perpetuation of one more gigantic fraud. What sort of tales is M. de Rougemont telling us? A man who relates how he buried a tomahawk in the head of a giant alligator whose scaly hide would turn the edge of one of your Kentucky axes is not to be complimented on the air of veracity worn by his narrative. A man who has paced the length of a dead whale and made it out one hundred and fifty feet must not be surprised if people tell him they do not believe him. A shipwreck adventurer who distills seawater into fresh out of one kettle for two years and gets enough out of it all the time for a large dog and himself, strains the faith of his readers not a little. He reaches breaking point when the same kettle is made also to do duty for his savage guests for months on end and during a lengthy sea voyage in an open boat. A residence of two years on a sandspit only seven or eight feet above high water in midocean is another patent impossibility. There is no region in the world where the ocean waters would not again and again in such a space of time wash over and overwhelm such a refuge. That all this farrago of nonsense should be gravely presented as a contribution to geographical and ethnographical science, and should be seriously received even in a learned conclave is exciting great indignation in the minds of the men most intimately acquainted with the part of the world referred to. Mr. Carr-Boyd is one of these. He is a man of acknowledged repute as an explorer, a magistrate, and a Fellow of the Royal Geograhical Society. He has been offering to M. de Rougemont some awkward questions, which that gentleman says he is not well enough at present to deal with. But he has been well enough to perpetrate one very disreputable blunder. He has sneered at the Honorable David Carnegie as a mere dilettante traveler, notwithstanding that Mr. Carnegie's dangerous, adventurous and romantic march is known and authentic and its achievements were astonishing.

THE PARLIAMENTS OF THE CHURCHES.

Religiously speaking, this is the most interesting period of the year in this country, for during the latter part of September the great denominations hold their conventions. Last week the Baptist Union met in strong force at Nottingham, under the presidency of my old friend Samuel Vincent, of Plymouth, one of the foremost of living preachers. But at the meetings at Nottingham the most prominent speaker was not an Englishman, but an American visitor, very familiar to us on this side of the water. Dr. Lorimer, of the Tremont Temple, Boston, gave more than one oration during the week, but his most striking utterance was on "The Preservation of Primitive Christianity." Now, when I read the program and saw this subject notified, I thought that either you American Disciples of Christ had been converting Dr. Lorimer to pentecostal and primitive Christianity, or else that he had been stealing our thunder. But now that his address has been published I perceive that it does not denote either of these contingencies in a complete sense, and yet in an approximate degree it is true that this eloquent and eminent American Baptist is one of us. He is certainly a Baptist in form and in name, but he is wonderfully unsectarian in spirit. Who amongst the most ardent of Disciples could speak more appropriately than Dr. Lorimer did in the following passage: "A change is imperatively needed. If society is to be regenerated and the soul sanctified, we must go back to primitive Christianity. A general movement in that direction would abate irritation (created by recent criticism), would be received with satisfaction by the working masses and would restore a dynamic which at the first was equal to the overthrow of paganism and the subjugation of barbarism. To you belongs the initiative. It is for you to inaugurate the RESTORATION OF PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANITY.

Not enough is it," Dr. Lorimer went on to say, "for us to insist that we have been its custodians; we must justify our assumption by evincing as never in the past its generous and gracious attitude. We should go all through Great Britain proclaiming primitive Christianity." Now, after this extraordinary deliverance form a denominationalist, I think that when Dr. Lorimer returns to Boston you American Disciples should invite him to act on his own theories and join you who are actually doing in the United States what he wants done here. His speech is a welcome sign of a change of thought setting in amongst the Baptists.

DRAGGING ENGLAND TO KISS THE POPE'S TOE.

The great Church Congess has been held at Bradford, Yorkshire, at the same time as the assembly of the Baptists in Nottingham. The most eloquent of the English bishops, Dr. Boyd Carpenter, the Queen's favorite preacher, was president, and he had a very difficult task. The Church of England is divided into three great camps. The High Churchmen are crazy; the Low Churchmen are lazy; the Broad Churchmen are hazy. And the crazy, lazy and hazy parties met in conclave, not in order to settle their differences, as the English people are expecting them to do, but to enter into a sort of conspiracy to suppress all real discussion and to let all things drift on as they are. But this means that if the Anglican Church is not stirred to amendment and reform, then it will be captured by the determined Ritualists, whom the bishops are all affraid to attack, and it will lay itself down in a Chinese "kotow" at the feet of the wily old Pope, who last year administered such kicks to Mr. Gladstone and the High Churchmen, when they abased themselves at the Vatican to beseech the Holy Pontiff to be so very condescending as to recognize the validity of Anglican orders. The church met in a vast crowd, but the policy of "laissez faire" reigned throughout the week. The Bishop of Ripon actually went out of his way, in a style altogether foreign to him and unworthy of so truly great a man, to sneer at those who are going into hysterics about the mere lighting of a candle, or the color of a surplice, or the position of a lectern. This is a tremendous snubbing for the Evangelicals from their own most trusted leader. So that Churchmen are crying peace where there is no peace, except the peace which prevails with portentous hush before the breaking of a terrific storm. Steadily on towards a stupendous crisis is the great Established Church drifting. When that crisis arrives it will result in the greatest change in the history of England since the Reformation.

Are We Overloading?

The contrast between what Jesus said of his yoke and what is expected of church members to-day, by the church, is we think sufficiently marked to justify the question at the head of this paper. If we may draw a conclusion from ecclesiastical history we believe that the tendency of present religious organization is to increase the burdens of their communicants. We will cite some noted instances cited in support of this view.

(1) The religious system inaugurated by Moses seems to have been a very simple affair at the first, but as it grew older it became so burdensome in its demands and exacting in its service that no man could meet all of its requirements. Rites, ceremonies, ordinances and tithes were added until it become a yoke which no man could wear. No Hebrew of Christ's day had the time or wealth to fully meet its requirements. Jesus saw this and severely denounced the authorities for a condition of things that had become unbearable. He accused those who sat in Moses' seat of having bound burdens upon the people that were grevious and of refusing to remove them or even of helping to bear them. And so in order that the people might have their liberty again, he set the whole thing aside and gave to the world a new system in its stead, the yoke of which was easy and its burden light.

(2) One of the most marked features of Christ's religious system at the first was its simplicity. During the first century it was remarkably free from cumbersome ordinances, rites, ceremonies and tithes. But, like the system of which it was the substance, it also increased its exactions of men until it became as complex and as ponderous as Judaism. Its adherents became its slaves. Their possessions, talents and time were at the command of the authorities of the church. Under the ponderous weight of the church the light, life and joy of the home and of nations was crushed out. A few men in the 15th and 16th centuries saw these unjust exactions of ecclesiastics and their oppressions of the poor, and hence the Protestant Reformation.

(3) In the Protestant Reformation religious liberty was not fully restored to the people, but the contrast between Protestant and Catholic Churches in this respect became very marked. But, unfortunately, as we think, this breach, which should have widened, seems rather to be closing up. The trend of Protestant Churches to-day seems not to be toward lighter but toward heavier burdens. The increase of societies, clubs, bands, meetings, missions, sociables, entertainments, lectures, schools, benevolences and collections has been so great that it has about become impossible for a man to keep the whole law. Church members are already staggering under their burdens, and the end is not yet. As things are now, but little if any of a man's time, talent or possessions is left for himself, his family or his friends. Perhaps some are ready to say that this is as it ought to be, but so said the doctors of the law and the bishops of the Papal system in their day.

Perhaps we should illustrate our meaning. Under the Roman Catholic religion in its palmiest days the people's money was gathered ostensibly "for the Lord;" but in reality for high livings and costly cathedrals. What was the result? Let the ignorance and poverty of their peoples answer. And yet, in the face of these facts Protestant Churches are committing the same error—increasing the burdens of their communicants and traveling toward the same end—oppression.

At first a sinner is told that salvation is free. After he becomes a church member he is then told that it is his duty to support the church. By and by he is told that he ought to have a hand in every good work; a principle which, by the way, is nowhere recognized in the business world as either practicable or sound; this is an age of specialties. Then, if he becomes a liberal giver, he is exhorted to donate all that he has "to the Lord." And some even are admonished to borrow on the unpromised and unknown future—another unsound business principle—and offer that "as a sweet-smelling odor unto the Lord." Then, if he should show a disposition to hold back his gifts "unto the Lord," he is charged with being "afraid to trust God," "a nominal Christian," "a figurehead" or some other chilling epithet, calculated to either extort money from him or drive him from the church. The aforesaid epithets and accusations, bear in mind, are simply the Christianized methods of torturing non-submissive church members. They are the torture-machines of medieval times modernized with but little loss to their severity and effective features.

In most of the so-called churches to-day, but few crimes are more emphasized than that of non-giving. No other qualities of soul are sufficient to offset this lack.

It may be true that all a man has and is belongs to the Lord, but not in the sense nor for the purpose in which this claim usually comes from the church. It is yet difficult for some men to believe that the taking of hard-earned wages, upon which a whole family is depending for daily bread, to put into a costly church edifice, or to make up the salary of an expensive ecclesiastic, is "giving to the Lord." Or if this saying is true and the preacher who makes it would hate to be accused of trying to obtain money under false pretense, and the Lord so uses that money, they then conclude that "the Lord is a mighty poor financier, and not the friend of the poor that he claimed to be."

But it is not about the increasing demands of the church for money alone that we complain; there are other burdens. The demands upon an average church member's time are becoming equally oppressive. There are so many meetings, sociables, societies, clubs, bands and other church activities that it is almost if not quite impossible for the laboring church member to keep up with the procession. And yet, if he misses one of these his example is held up as a bad precedent and he is indirectly twitted and tormented over the matter until he becomes sour and don't care whether he goes to church at all again or not. And so things seem to be going from bad to worse. The burdens of the churches are becoming oppressive and the people are rebelling. They will not submit, and hence the empty pews. That these conditions are driving thousands of men from the church and keeping tens of thousands from hearing the gospel is the belief of your writer, and the apology for this paper. What think ye on this subject, O ye scribes and editors? In the meantime, let us not forget that the increase of burdens divided the kingdom of Israel, overthrew Judaism, devitalized Christianity, and to-day is one of the causes that has set "the masses" at naught with the churches. Not the increase of pure and undefiled religion, but of the mercenary, worldly, selfish demands of ecclesiasticisms and religious organizations. F. T PEW.

Christian Science in India.

NOTES OF A RECENT ADDRESS BY THE PANDITA RAMABAI.

After a four months' stay in America I have become more than ever impressed with the words of Solomon: "There is no new thing under the sun." With all the advancement of the nineteenth century I am surprised and shocked to find that ancient philosophies are making their appearance in the United States under the guise of Christian names. It is a sad sight to one who is acquainted with the results of heathen philosophy and superstition, to see educated people, who enjoy all the privileges of a Christian civilization, being deceived by the glamour of a new name.

On my arrival in New York last spring I was told that a new philosophy was being taught in the United States, and had already many disciples. The philosophy was called Christian Science, and when I asked what its teaching was, I recognized it as being the same philosophy that has been taught among my people for four thousand years. It has ruined millions of lives and caused immeasurable suffering and sorrow in my land, for it is based on selfishness and knows no sympathy or compassion.

But what has shocked me most has been the report that there are women in America who are not deceived by the name of "Christian Science," but are confessedly studying and adopting the philosophy of the Hindus. As I was born and educated in the philosophy, having taken my degree of Pandita in it, I am acquainted with both its literature and its influence upon my people; and I want to witness to its degradation. To study Indian philosophy one must go to India and see its results and learn to read the Shasteas in the original. It is all very nice to read pretty translations, where much that is base and degrading is expurgated; but the original is quite another thing.

INGRATITUDE FOR GOD'S BLESSINGS.

The difficulty is that these American disciples of Hinduism have never appreciated the good things God has done for them. They are not interested in God's Word because they do not study it, and ignorance is at the root of all their infatuation. They are ignorant of the goodness of God, and they are wise in their own eyes. Many of them have had a university education, just as the men have had. They have clubs of their own, and many other privileges, but in spite of all this they have become foolish. I do not say so, but the Bible says so. Now, if you want to have a philosophy that will be useful to you in your life and will allow you to be useful to others, study the philosophy that you will find in the Gospel of John and the First Epistle of John.

These people are dissatisfied and want something better, something grand. Some of them told me they found so many "grand things" in the Hindu religion after they studied these translations. They received that knowledge in the English language and they say those books are "full of grand thoughts." I can tell you many of those "grand thoughts," for I have studied the same books in the original tongue. I thought I could find something happier and something higher in the philosophical works of my people, but I only found large words. The philosophical language is "very deep and very grand," therefore it is fine to make long sentences, and these sentences fill perhaps two or three or six pages. When you have got to the end of a sentence you do not remember what is said on the first page, and so you find it "very grand and deep." You know it is very grand when you do not understand it, and that is just what this philosophy means. It is a philosophy when you do not understand it. I can tell you I have sounded the depths of that philosophy, and what did I find? I will give you an idea in my own language. It means just this:

THE PHILOSOPHY OF NOTHINGNESS.

You are to take the whole universe as nothing but falsehood. You are to think that it does not exist. You do not exist. I do not exist. When you realize that, that is philosophy. Can you realize it? There was once upon a time a great being called Brahma, and that person was no person at all, but something like air, full of joy and knowledge! I cannot understand it, but philosophy tells you that you have to believe that this being, full of joy and knowledge, without any personality, existed once upon a time. That being had no mind. It did not want to say anything or have anything near it, and therefore, of course, it did not understand anything. Then there came another being just like himself, and that being was nothing but darkness. It was all falsehood. Now this air united with that darkness and assumed personality. It became male and female, and as that person has formed all things, the logical inference is that everything is falsehood. The birds and beasts that you see do not exist. You do not exist. When you realize that you have no personality whatever, you have no life, no knowledge, nothing, then you have attained the highest perfection of what is called "yoga," and that gives you liberation and you are liberated from your body and you become like him, without any personality. You draw on the blackboard zero, plus zero, minus zero, multiplied by zero, divided by zero, and it equals zero! It is just that—nothing more.

ITS FRUITS.

And what has that philosophy done for the people of India? A tree is judged by its fruits. An appletree can not bring forth a pear, but it will bring forth its own kind. The grandeur and beauty of that philosophy must be judged by its fruit. You are a people of some feeling. Everything is real. You feel that when other people are starving you ought to give them something to eat, but out in India they do not feel that. Men do not feel any sympathy for others. They do not feel for people who are starving or being killed in war. In our late famine our philosophers felt no compassion for sufferers and did not help the needy. For why should they help when they claimed the suffering was not real, neither were the dying children real. The first result, then, of the philosophy is the basest cruelty and selfishness; no compassion for sufferers, and supreme egotism.

WHERE TO STUDY HINDUISM.

To study Hindu philosophy it is best to visit India and experience it. Plenty of opportunities are afforded even if you go only to Bombay. That city is very large, and it is very hot there; but that will make no difference to philosophers who never experience heat at all. The people of India and the philosophers who have studied with the learned men ought to feel alike towards all people and all beings; but they never show a particle of kindness to the women, and their lives are made so unbearable that they want to kill themselves. These philosophers have shown mercy towards all lower animals. They have established hospitals for animals, but they have never established hospitals for women. The preachers who have come over here to preach Buddhism to the American people have established a hospital for animals in Bombay. In that hospital there is a ward devoted to bugs, and a man is hired to feed those bugs on his blood every night. They never take any thought of the women who are dying under the weight of this philosophy, but they just show their charity towards the bugs. I recommend that hospital for the edification of American students of Buddhism. Let them stay one night in that bug ward. That will pay them for all their labors in studying that philosophy!

The Hindu women have been made slaves, and it is the Christian people who are now bringing them the liberty of Christianity. Our philosophers have never established schools for our women and girls, but they have taught that it was a religious duty to burn thousands of widows alive. The women are very necessary in order to cook the food and care for husbands, but when the husbands die they are good for nothing. When I was in Calcutta I was asked by some of the philosophers to speak on something of the religion of the Hindu women. They tried to make a preacher of me. If I had become a preacher of the Hindu religion I do not think I could have remained a Hindu a single day. I was told, in the first place, by our learned people, that the women must never study the holy books of the Hindus. The men of India think that the very study of the books gives them salvation; but if the women study these books they are lost. What is good for men is not good for women in India. That is their belief. I just overstepped that rule a little and made a study of the religion. What do you think that I found woman's religion was? This religion said, You must never read or write, and knowledge is not the thing that is desirable for women. Women are naturally wicked, and if they get knowledge they become worse and worse!

THE HINDU WOMAN'S RELIGIOUS DUTIES.

The next duty of a woman is that she must be married, no matter how old or how young she is. You can find not many unmarried women in all that country. The religious books teach that unmarried women are going to hell, to be doomed to eternal punishment, and so the first care of the parents is to get a girl-baby married. As soon as a girl-baby is born in the family, the father begins to think where he can get a husband for her. When she is about nine or ten months old, he goes to a neighbor and says, I have a daughter, and would like your son to get married, and will he marry my daughter?" And so they are married. The two men fall in love with each other, and the contract is settled between them! That is marriage under Hindu philosophy, and it is binding.

Perhaps there are 700 girls in 1,000 that are married under ten years of age, for no girl is allowed to remain unmarried after she is twelve years of age. It is only the low castes who allow them to remain unmarried until they are fourteen or fifteen; high-caste men get their girls married before they are ten years of age.

What happens after? If the man dislikes the woman, why, he has the divine right of marrying as many women as he likes, for the man is considered the incarnation of the god Vishnu, and that god had 6,000 wives in this life! A man can get married to severa women at a time. There are some high-caste people who get so high as to marry 100 or 150 wives at a time. They do not have a very good memory, and so they keep a directory of their wives and children. As the husband is immortal, the Hindu religion says that a woman must never marry again when her husband dies. If they want to get to heaven, and do not stop anywhere else, then they must burn themselves alive. Seventy years ago the women used to be burned alive with the dead bodies of their husbands, but now that is stopped by law. Now the women are taught to cast themselves in the sacred rivers, or to take opium, and go to heaven, where they may find their husbands.

WHERE A HINDU WIFE IS FREE.

The husband is considered a god, and in heaven, my countrywomen are taught that they must be the servants of their husbands the same as on earth. On earth or in heaven the Indian woman can never be free. The third place open to her is hell. The man does not go there to trouble her, and that is the only place where she can be free! That is what the Hindu religion says regarding women, and that is the only religion that is given to her.

The Hindu woman's religious duties consist in household cares and the worship of her husband. After rising early and attending to the cares of her house her next duty is to put her head on the scared feet of her husband and worship him. When he comes home from business with bare feet her duty is to take warm water and wash those beautiful feet and drink the water in order to purify herself. Woman is naturally unholy, and drinking that dirty water is what scantifies her! That cleanses her from all sin, and there is nothing else, and in this way she is to live all her life. I wonder how many of these American disciples of Hinduism would like to realize that religion?

SINLESS LIES.

The philosophy of India teaches that there are five sinless lies, and among these are lies told to women. It does not matter whether it is to a mother or sister or wife or daughter. They must be met on their own standard, and so the man tries to deceive them.

That is how the women are treated, and if the American women think that they would like that philosophy, I wish they would feel it before they forsake the Bible and take it up. India is the best place for the study of the results of Hinduism. Go out there and see what it has done for women, and you will know what the religion is!

I want to tell you about the widows of India. There are 23,000,000 of them, and probably one-fourth of the whole number are under twenty-five years of age. We have probably 70,000 little children who are doomed to live in widowhood, and there are 13,000 under four years of age. They have to work without much food being given to them, and they have just one meal a day. The people think they ought to be punished for being widows. Many of these poor little creatures are committing suicide. Many of them want to go away and take liberty, and that liberty is taken to their own destruction.

INDIA'S WIDOWS AS MISSIONARIES.

Reader, thank God for everything you have, and think of the 140,000,000 women in India who do not have the light or liberty, but are doomed to be miserable all their lives and die like dogs and cats. Now I have come to be a Christian, I can never be thankful enough to God for the things he has done for me. I think it is our highest pleasure to do something for our women in India, and I pray that the Lord will give me a little more strength to do something for my countrywomen. It has pleased the Lord to give me 300 childwidows who are in my school in Poona. There are over 275 who are Christians, and preparing themselves to work for their own countrywomen. They are learning the Bible, and I hope that there will be many more to carry the Bible to their sisters in their own homes.

I want you to especially pray for the widows in India, and if you go out to India, make the widows your special object; for if the widows have the gospel preached to them they will gladly accept it. It is the widows, I think, who are destined to evangelize India. They have been despised creatures, but God can take these despised creatures and make something out of them. Let us pray for them and work for them as much as we can, and thank God for everything he has done for us.—Record of Christian Work.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Do you want a book in your Bible-schools that in a plain, simple, concise manner gives the Bible teaching on the first principles of the gospel of Christ? Then order a good supply of "Graded Studies in the New Testament," by H. K. and Philip Pendleton. I have not examined a 15-cent booklet in a long time that gave me such general satisfaction, and I would like very much to see classes formed in every Bible-school in the state of Missouri, for in this teaching not only the children and youth need such knowledge, but it will be a good thing for the older ones.

My visit to Warrensburg gave me some good pointers for helping in other parts of the state. Prof. Deerwister in the Normal school is a success, and is using the same methods in the Bible-school as superintendent. They have 425 pupils enrolled, and are working for 500. Of these 125 are Normal students. What a great opportunity for sounding out the truth! There are 26 teachers, among whom are such as Judge Woods, C. H. Dutcher, Dr. and Mrs. Hedges and Miss Mollie Johnson, with an army of little folks that would gladden any heart, and of all these on Sunday not a teacher was absent, while 17 of them taught the lesson without reference to any help save the Bible, and two others promised to do likewise. This was what pleased me above all else. Their Roll of Honor, based on attendance and changed every quarter, works well, while their offerings are above the average of the state. This is one of the schools that have never cut their giving to state Bible-school work one penny, giving us $50 a year, and promised the same this time and with such promptness that I must again thank them for it. The school was dismissed by prayer, and then under a march on the organ passed out of the building in such perfect order that I am anxious to see other schools adopt it. J. J. Morgan is giving general satisfaction as pastor, one of the members saying that he was remarkable in the regularity of his good preaching, doing nothing else.

The Harrisonville school, W. A. Fite minister, gave our Brother Geo. E. Prewitt such cordial welcome, glad and ready co-operation, such happy response, that the evangelist would like to return. Their offering was $15 in cash and pledges, at which W. A. Fite was as happy and delighted as the workers. Our work has never had better, truer or more constant friends than most of the Missouri preachers.

I have rejoiced in the good books coming to the front this year in popular address, another of which is "King Saul," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, and I want to bear testimony that there is no happier way of preparing oneself for the work in the Old Testament than by reading such books, and if purchased and read now they will only need reviewing when our lessons are within their scope and times, while there is no pleasanter way of spending the winter evenings than in such company, and I plead with all friends of good reading, all the Bible-school force, possess yourselves and present your children with such as "King Saul."

Your secretary happened into Fayette at exactly the right time, for the church was to elect an elder and seven deacons and decide on their minister for another year. In choosing their elder, without any opportunity of knowing who was going out, the brethren re-elected Solon Smith, and also the same brethren for deacons, so that no changes were made, all to the credit of those serving the church and the Lord. Brother S. G. Clay was continued for his sixth year without one dissenting voice, speaking in stronger terms than any words the appreciation of the pillars and supporters of the work in our brother and God's servant, every act of which those of us knowing him and his good wife fully endorse.

In my institute at Grayson the work on the part of those attending was better far than I have had otherwhere this all. Mrs. M. B. Culver is the superintendent, but all seem to be workers, so that the school membership is larger than that of the congregation. The teachers have not yet come to where they can leave the helps on the seat and teach the lesson, but am sure they will. By removal the little band has suffered, but in their zeal they know no such word as fail, and the meeting to follow will manifest the good results of such work. The entire fellowship were as kind to me as could be, while their offering to the work was unusually good in view of their losses, even beyond their ability.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

A number of district and county meetings were held in September, and most of them did fine work. The Nodaway district is never behind, and Sister Hosmer has been their efficient manager for years. Sister Dew is to have the work next year.

Miss Kittie Johnson, the manager of Marion County, arranged a good program and liberal contributions were made. Bro. Davis Errett suggested that the wife of the pastor of the Palmyra church be made a life member of the C. W. B. M. The amount was easily raised and will be paid in the name of Sister Marshall. Another life membership will be taken for a brother, for his wife, in the near future.

More than once has your secretary enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. and Sister M. McDonald. They give to Christians a friendly salutation and a kind reception; and they give much more—they give sympathy and interest in the cause which cannot be expressed in words.

Pettis County had a good convention and a life membership was started by Bro. Henry Davis, complimentary to Sister Stark, the wife of the LaMonte pastor. The LaMonte church is second to none in missionary zeal.

The state convention, at Nevada, fulfilled its promises. Only one person absent whose name was on the C. W. B. M. program. Sister Williams is an admirable presiding officer. Sister Gilbert gave us a warm welcome, and Sister Lowe's response was a beautiful expression of our thanks for the royal entertainment of the Nevada people. Mrs. Bantz had carefully gathered and arranged the facts concerning the lives of our missionaries now in the field.

Miss Mollie Beery's "Story of a Life Membership" was a true story. Sister Vernon read an excellent paper. Mrs. Bowen gave some valuable suggestions on Junior work. Mrs. Grant delivered a soul-stirring address on the "Significance of Missions." She is a speaker of great power and wields her audiences as she wills.

Miss Ada Boyd is the best speaker among our missionaries; and we saw India through her descriptions as we had never seen it before. The address of Mrs. Helen Moses was classical. She will visit the Missouri auxiliaries soon and all who desire may hear her.

The report of Miss Mollie Hughes, the superintendent of Young People's work, was very gratifying. It will be better when the auxiliaries determine to mother the Y. P. S. C. E. and Juniors in missionary endeavors.

The mystery of life and death has puzzled many a wise man. The alchemists of old searched in vain for some combination of drugs that would prolong life indefinitely. Common sense, chemistry and medical science have combined in this age to show man the way to a long and healthy life.

Common sense teaches that a man should not over-work or over-worry; that he should take ample time for his meals, for resting and for recreation and sleep; that he should not neglect the little ills of life, because they are the precursors of serious and fatal maladies. Chemistry has enabled men to make combinations of drugs that were impossible in the days of the alchemists. Medical science has taught when, how and why these combinations of drugs should be used. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the most valuable of all health-restoring medicines, and the most effective. Its first work is upon the fountain-head of life—the stomach. A man who has a weak and impaired stomach and who does not properly digest his food will soon find that his blood has become weak and impoverished, and that his whole body is improperly and insufficiently nourished. This medicine makes the stomach strong, facilitates the flow of digestive juices, restores the lost appetite, makes assimilation perfect, invigorates the liver and purifies and enriches the blood. It is the great blood-maker, flesh-builder and nerve tonic. It makes men strong in body, active in mind and cool in judgment.

It does not make flabby fat, but solid, muscular flesh, nerve force and vital energy. All medicine dealers sell it.

J. W. Jordan, Esq., of Corbin, Whitley Co., Ky., writes: "About two and a half years ago I was taken with severe pains in the chest, began to spit up blood, was troubled with night-sweats and was so short winded that I could hardly walk half a mile. Tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and have improved both in strength and weight."

The medicine dealer who urges some substitute is thinking of the larger profit he'll make and not of your best good.

(Sears, Roebuck & Co. are thoroughly reliable.—Editor.)

The Missouri C. W. B. M. sent this year to national and state treasuries, $6,634.55. This amount will be increased by Sept. 30, and will equal the total of last year.

Fifty life memberships were pledged this year, the largest in our history of one year. How many can we secure for our Honor Roll next year? We begin with three.

The officers were re-elected. Your secretary asked to be released from office. Her request was denied, but she was excused from field work. An organizer will be put in the field after Christmas.

There were fewer delegates than usual present and less money was pledged. But the auxiliaries will report their usual pledges this quarter and all will do their best for this great cause—the extension of Christ's kingdom on earth.

VIRGINIA HEDGES.

Warrensburg, Mo., Oct. 1, 1898.

The St. Louis Letter.

The recent unlooked-for cold wave has revealed the fact that there are many people unprepared for the approaching winter. But there is nothing strange in this. There are always some people who seem never to prepare for anything. But the cold wave did more. It revealed the fact that there are still many men out of employment. Men who want work at any price, but cannot get it. There may not be as many men out of employment now as one or more years ago, but that there are still large numbers of enforced idlers to be seen on the streets is undeniable. In proof of this let any reliable business man or house advertise for a man and he will be appalled at the applications for the place. In a St. Louis suburban town the marshal, recently, was killed; before he was buried there were fifty applicants for the place. In some instances the ratio of applicants to the places open are even greater than this.

A little further investigation will also reveal the fact that a large per cent. of those who have work are working for wages on which they can eke out only the leanest kind of an existence.

It is furthermore evident that these conditions are not confined to common laborers. Men of experience, men of education, men who have held high places in their day, men who have been prominent in public life, professors, educators, writers, teachers and preachers are known to have offered their services for work and at wages which in other days they would have spurned. A man who has traveled extensively in many states and is widely known as a preacher was heard to say recently that the churches were generally complaining of hard times and their preachers were living at a shamefully small salary; some of them, he said, were disheartened. They could not educate their children and some could scarcely keep themselves in decent clothes for the pulpit.

A similar condition prevails among store clerks and mechanics. Those that have work generally have wages on which they are barely living. Shops are not increasing their winter forces, much less raising wages. Some are shutting down; some are running on short time; others are reducing their force. Strikes are still in the land. One strike is scarcely settled in one place until another occurs somewhere else.

There are doubtless some who will not admit these facts. In their judgment any man who is out of employment does not want employment; that he is a knave, a tramp, a hobo, too lazy or too dishonest to work. They say that work is plenty and there is no honest excuse for idlers; that the banks are full of cheap money and the stores are full of cheap goods. You may point out the conditions complained of to them, but they steadfastly refuse to see them. They talk about government credits, balance of trade, per capita capital and other big things known only to corporations, trusts and syndicates, as though every laboring man in the land shared in their profits.

Why are we as a nation so troubled about markets abroad when our own people would consume the products of our factories if they had work at living wages? Our stores are full, but our homes are empty. There is a surplus of capital, and there is also a surplus of labor. And yet the government is seeking foreign markets at enormous cost, and our capital is going into other lands.

"But you can't compel men to invest their money by law," say some. Perhaps not. But there is a law higher than statutory enactments. Money needs no law to compel it to seek investment. Men who have money want to invest it. There is no more natural law in the universe than this. What drives money from the field is competition. Small capitalists are afraid of trusts and syndicates. They prefer to hide or hold their money. There are also other reasons, which we cannot give here and now. The editor would not permit it.

But the law of humanity, of brotherhood and of brotherly acting is a religious question within the precincts of a religious journal, and we will follow that line. Christian men, Christian corporations and Christian capitalists do not have to follow the ways of the world in these matters. They could if they would (and true Christian men would) be a law unto themselves in these matters; or, better still, they would follow the law of Christ, and this would greatly help to solve these questions.

In the first place, they could if they would organize a bank which would loan small sums of money to laboring men on household goods or other personal security at reasonable interest rates. This would save thousands of men from soulless money sharks and their families from suffering.

Second, they could if they would pay a little better wages to their employees than non-Christian men and houses pay. As it is some of the foremost men in the churches have the reputation in labor circles of being the hardest taskmasters in the city. Why should they not set an example of liberality in these things? Why should they not show that they are actuated by their Christianity, and not by mercenary motives even in the matter of wages? A profit-sharing system would be better.

Third, they could if they would provide some public work which would give to every man that asks work, even at the lowest wages, until he could get work elsewhere or money enough to take him to other parts, as is often the only favor asked.

Fourth, they could if they would assist many worthy families to colonize where they could in due time become independent and return the money used to the colonizing company with interest. There is still plenty of land to support all who are unemployed, and who thereby could and would willingly earn their own living if properly helped.

Fifth, they could if they would exert a much more effective influence through municipal, county and state governments against poverty-producing causes, and thereby save many from idleness, crime and destruction. But why go further? The facts stated have already discredited the church as the friend of the helpless, and so the enforced idler is left to look out for himself and his family as he can, without help and without sympathy.

Reminiscences.

Mr. Editor, allow me through your valuable paper to relate a few memories of the events of the first years of the introduction and struggles of the Reformation in the state of New York.

First, I note that Eld. Jeffries, a popular and gifted Baptist preacher at the village of Throopsville, pastor of a large and influential church, upon taking and reading the Christian Baptist, a monthly paper, edited and published by Alexander Campbell, of Bethany, Va., accepted and approbated the views of Reformation as pleaded by Mr. Campbell in said paper, and preached them to his large congregation. This resulted in the withdrawal of some seven of his most intelligent and liberal-minded members from the Baptist Church and the organization of a church of reformatory views. The names of most of these men we can give: Mr. Allen, Sr., of Clarksville; Col. J. Barnum, Capt. J. Crane and Mr. Crull, of Centerville; Mr. Freer, Mr. Green and Mr. Wilkerson, of Skaneateles. These men were the leading, substantial ones of the Baptist Church. This was then supposed to be the second church of like faith and order in the state: the other one, or First, being in the city of New York. Eld. Jeffries entertained the same views of reformation that these leading men did, and had preached them to his congregation; but in that early day (about 1830), from the strictures in the Christian Baptist upon a hirling clergy, they were opposed to a salary being paid to the preacher, and hence Elder Jeffries did not see fit to join them. Therefore, he remained as he was, pastor of his own Baptist Church. The organization remained for years, doing their own preaching and edifying themselves, as they had men of much talent among them. In fact, they had the cream of the Baptist Church. Eld. J. J. Moss, of Ohio, was the first or about the first preacher of the Reformation that visited them on his first visit to the Empire state. The writer heard Eld. Moss say that this company was so afraid of preachers that they talked so roughly to him because he was preaching, that he wept like a child in their presence. Such were their views of the hirling preacher, and such were their views for a long time. As they had to pay nothing for preaching it seemed to be a doctrine to them very full of comfort. Years afterward I have known them to postpone a funeral with the corpse in the house and Eld. Bartlet to preach the funeral, till after the elders attended to the exercises of the first-day meeting! Hence the church never grew any under such regimen. Fortunate for the cause of truth that the Heavenly Father transplanted all with such views in due season to a better climate.

Such was the beginning of the Reformation movement in that early day and in that part of the state. How wonderfully God can bring marvelous things out of seeming impossibilities! With all these hindrances, yet that same church, after years of agony, became the mother-church of several others. Little did the writer think when he attended there for years with Dio Lewis, the Goodriches, the McCarthys, and Waites, and Clapps, that she would ever be such a blessing to the world as she has been. How true that God's ways are past finding out! Clarksville and finally Auburn and South Butler and a host of others can call her mother. It did not, of course, flourish much till those who entertained the anti-preacher idea (and they would preach hours against preaching) preached themselves into such unsavory welcome as to lose all their influence, or God in his infinite mercy translated them from mortality to immortality. But against years of such struggling and anti-missionary spirit and action, still how true that "truth though crushed and trodden under foot—despised—will rise again, for the eternal years of God are hers." There are several churches in the West that can rightfully call her mother—the one at Paw Paw was built up by the members of this same old church, at Thorn Apple, Albion, Marshall and others we do not now remember. All glory to the old Throopsville Church, after all. She was, after her severe agonies, cultured and watered by Elds. Moss, Hayden and other preachers from Ohio, and Shepherd, Bartlet, I. Errett, Hunter, etc., etc. It would be pleasant to mention the main pillars of the old church, those who have stood by it in its adversity and prosperity. Most of them have gone to their long rest and now their labors do follow them, those who were busy actors up to A. D. 1840. How I would like to preach to the Throopsville Church now!

A Circuit of the Globe

BY A. M'LEAN.

The pictures of all the foreign missionaries of the Christian Church, their homes and places of worship are among the illustrations. The author gives an account of what he saw, whom he saw, the many countries visited, the habits, customs, and peculiarities of the nations through which he passed. The book is written in a most fascinating manner, enabling the reader to feel as though he had made the trip with the writer. The author set out from Cincinnati, Ohio, crossing the American continent to San Francisco, then across the Pacific Ocean to Japan, stopping at Honolulu, then to China, India, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, European countries to London, across the Atlantic to America and then home. The book gives the social, political and religious phases of the many nations visited by the author.

Notes and News.

The brethren at State Line, Ind., presented a baptismal suit to their pastor, A. O. Swartwood, on Lord's day, Oct. 16, to show their appreciation of his earnest efforts in the Master's cause. The work is moving along nicely there. W. H. Baker, of Robinson, Ill., is assisting A. O. Swartwood in a meeting at State Line, which continues from Oct. 6th.

WANTED.—Pastor for West Side Church of Christ, Elmira, N. Y. A young man who will labor for $500 or $600 per year preferred. Must be well recommended and able to hold a good revival meeting. Address

CHAS. F. LILLEY.

Elmira, N. Y.

The church at Detroit, Ill., will want a preacher Jan. 1st, 1899. Address Newton Bundy, present pastor.

The church at DeSoto, Mo., we have heard, is about to call S. J. Copher, of Odessa, Mo., for its preacher.

The church at Hematite, Mo., has called J. D. Dillard, formerly of Cape Girardeau, Mo., for six months.

J. E. Wilson, of St. Louis, Mo., preached at Festus, Mo., last Sunday.

Another Dedication.

The East Side Christian Church, Pasadena, Cal., dedicated their new church home on last Sunday. A very appropriate program had been arranged for the occasion. A. C. Smither, of Los Angeles, was to preach at the morning service. Also short addresses by various pastors of the city were to be made. J. W. Ingram, pastor of the First Church in Pasadena, was to deliver the sermon at the evening service. H. Elliott Ward is the pastor of this flourishing congregation. The dedication is to be followed with a protracted meeting, conducted by R. H. Bateman, of Santa Ana. The house is 48x50, with vestibule, class rooms, robing rooms and baptistery. Cost, $1200.

District Convention.

The semi-annual convention of the fourth district of Nebraska convened at Beldon, Sept. 29 to Oct. 2. The convention was well attended and a success from beginning to end. An interesting program was rendered. Bro. Plymesser, of Forrest, district president for the past six years, was re-elected for the ensuing year. He is a wide-awake man and an earnest Christian worker. He has proven himself to be the right man in the right place. Bro. C. Elwood, of Creighton, corresponding secretary and treasurer for the past year, was also re-elected. Bro. Elwood is one of those men who feel a deep interest in the cause of Christ. We has done a noble work during the past year. The most interesting feature of the convention was the report read by the corresponding secretary. It showed the excellent work done by the district board. But the best of all it showed that the district was entirely out of debt and $20 in the treasury. During the past year a large tent was purchased, an evangelist employed and meetings conducted in the new fields and for churches that were weak and unable to pay for a meeting. Among the speaking brethren present were Bro. Applegate, of Wakefield; Bro. Shoemaker, of Belden; Bro. Harrison, of Bancroft, and John J. Higgs, of Bloomfield. Sister Applegate, of Wakefield, district president of C. W. B. M., reported that their society, though few in number, was heart and hand in the great missionary work, and through their untiring efforts an auxiliary was organized at Creighton and Allen. The Wakefield auxiliary, she said, had done and are doing all in their power to send the gospel to heathen lands in the near future. Auxiliaries will be organized at Bloomfield and Oliver's Grove. Thomas Rollings, district president of the Y. P. S. C. E, gave a thrilling talk upon The Relation of the Y. P. S. C. E. to the Church. We were sorry more Endeavorers were not present to hear their relation to the church. It was a splendid discourse. Sermons were preached by Bros. Applegate, Shoemaker and Higgs. John J. Higgs was appointed distrct evangelist for the coming year. The convention was one long to be remembered, and we believe every delegate went to their homes resolved to do more the coming year than they have done during the past. The convention recommended that we drop the name Sunday-school and adopt the name Bible-school, being more scriptural. We are glad to report that the missionary and progressive spirit is advancing rapidly among the Disciples in this fourth district. And our aim is to do a greater work in the coming year for Christ and the church than we have in the years gone by.

JOHN J. HIGGS, District Evangelist.

A Visit to Kentucky.

We left home Sept. 26th for a few days' visit with our dear mother and grandmother, who lives a Barbourville. I reached St. Louis at 3:45 P. M. that day, and called at the rooms of the Christian Publishing Company and found every one busy. The editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST looked rather warm for a man who had been cooling all summer. We reached our destination at 5 P. M. the 27th. I had not reached the home after getting off the train till a messenger came after me to preach the next evening; so I said yes, and for seven days I tried to rest and preach. It was not much rest and poor preaching, I guess. I did not meet Bro. Dickson, the preacher at Borbourville. He lives at London and preaches at B. once per month. Those good people seemed to appreciate our preaching, and showed it by giving a nice purse of silver. We have some most excellent Christians in that town and community. I met my brother, A. L. Fuller, of Bentley, Kan., whom I had not seen for eight years. My grandmother has passed her 90th milestone, and still reads her Bible without glasses. We hope to visit these good people again sometime. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will visit several of their homes there for one month now. We called again as we came back and took in the Fair at St. Louis on St. Louis Day. Reached home in time for prayer-meeting Thursday evening.

The Martin Meeting at La Junta, Colorado.

For one who has never worked in the West and does not understand the conditions, it would be difficult to form an idea what success here really means. Satan has absolute control, and runs things generally to suit himself. A city of 4,500 population, with five saloons and four drugstores, each deriving its support from the sale of liquor, will give some idea concerning the religious sentiment of the place. There is, among the few moral people we have, a feeling of total indifference as to their souls' welfare. In the entire city and surrounding country, which represents 6,000 people, there are about three hundred who attend church.

To enter such a community and succeed, the church knew, requires a man of unusual ability, great tact and power to preach the old plea, all of which we believed Bro. S. M. Martin possessed, and we have not been disappointed.

For five weeks he has held such audiences as have never before been witnessed in this part of the state, many times passing the six-hundred mark. Had any one asked if it could have been done I would have said it was impossible, and I know of no other man that I believe could do it. The good accomplished in this community by his great meeting will take years to measure. It has been my pleasure to hear the greater evangelists of to-day, i. e., Sam Jones, B. Fay Mills, Dwight L. Moody and others, but I rank Bro. Martin above them all. He has a much finer delivery and his sermons are far more intellectual.

Brethren, if you are in a city with a population of or over 10,000 you can make no mistake in engaging Bro. S. M. Martin to hold you a meeting. He goes from here to Dallas, Tex., to hold a meeting for M. M. Davis and his great church.

Thanksgiving Service.

The West Side Church, Chicago, Bruce Brown, pastor, recently had a thanksgiving service that all present seem to have greatly enjoyed. A good program for the occasion had been previously arranged, and the uplifting influence of the occasion was felt by the church. Of this meeting and the church the pastor writes as follows:

"There have been 100 new members added to the West Side Church since Feb. 1st, and at the service Wednesday night we started on the second hundred. No one has been counted who has not become actively identified with the work. I mean by that, non-residents, people from mission points and people who live too far away to attend services regularly. Quite a number of these three classes have been baptized, but we do not count them in the 100."

La Harpe, Ill.

On last Thursday occurred the jubilee, or annual meeting of the church at this place.

Just before the annual meeting each year—if it is necessary—the church makes an extra effort to raise money and settle up all expenses and any indebtedness that may be outstanding. We then call in some neighboring preachers or former pastors of this congregation and have all-day services with roll-call of the members, and annual reports from the officers of the various societies of the church, such as Sunday-school, Y. P. S. C. E., etc. Dinner is usually served at the church, by the sisters, and part of the day is observed in a general social visit with each other.

This is a day looked forward to and enjoyed by all in attendance, and is considered beneficial in more ways than one.

The treasurer's report showed $1,564, raised during the year for all purposes, including missions. There were 25 additions during the year, and six dismissals by letter and three deaths, leaving a net gain of 16. Total membership now is 236. Bro. K. C. Ventress is now in his seventh year's work with us, and is getting along nicely with the work. The church is prosperous and we have a very efficient Sunday-school under the leadership of Dr. W. O. Butler.

H. S. DICKSON, Clerk.

Oct. 17th, 1898.

Dedication at Indianapolis.

We are quite happy. Sunday, Sept. 18, we dedicated our new house—the Seventh Christian Church of Indianapolis—and surpassed even our most sanguine hopes. Bro. Jno. E. Pounds preached the sermon, then proceeded to raise money as though he were an old veteran at the business. The result was that before the day was over our pledges overran the mark, which in the morning seemed impossible of attainment.

Our improvements cost $4,200. To cover shrinkage, provide for further expense, etc., we placed the pledge mark at $5,000, and more than covered it. For a poor congregation this is a noble showing, and required self-sacrifice.

A no less pleasing feature of the day was the interest of all the Christian Churches of the city, manifested toward us. The long-felt need of a closer relationship in the work of the whole city is about to become a reality.

This church was organized in 1884, by Bro. J. M. Canfield. Those who have ministered to it since are Bros. A. Plunkitt, J. W. Crews, James Conner, S. M. Conner, Aaron Walker, E.M.Egolph and the writer, who is nearing his third year's end. The growth of the church has never been phenomenal, yet always upward. Schemers, in times past, have here tried their infamous work, but God has preserved the church intact. Selfish men and women, who knew (or thought they knew) the form of godliness, but who knew not its power, finding no congenial atmosphere in it, were compelled to withdraw, where they could manufacture surroundings favorable to their ends. They are doing it, too, by the way, with a vengeance. Though they have involved some good men, yet as a whole it has been a great blessing to the church that they were not with it.

The new church is capable of accommodating 1,000 people. Seating capacity of 800. It is brick veneered. The auditorium is 44 by 51 feet, inside measurement. The lecture-room is 30 by 45 feet. The two rooms are connected by sliding doors. From the open porch in front, doors lead into a vestibule, 10 by 12 feet, on either side. From the west vestibule, stairs ascend to the balcony. The floor inclines toward the pulpit. It is heated by a furnace, lighted by electricity and seated with modern pews.

We are expecting beter things.

Michigan Grange.

Bro. Chapple, of Vandalia, is engaged in a meeting at Hill's Corners. He has been engaged to preach for the churches at Vandalia and Hill's Corners for another year, with an increase of salary.

Bro. J. H. Lacey, of LaPort, Ind., has taken up the work at Duplain.

Bro. Spayd, of Owosso, has closed his meeting at Mt. Pleasant with ten added to the Lord. He had to close the meeting on account of the illness of Sister Spayd. May it be the Lord's will for our consecrated Sister Spayd to be fully restored to her health. She has been very ill, but all her friends will be glad to hear that she is some better at present. I would like to say a great deal about Bro. Spayd's new book, "The Two Covenents and the Sabbath." Brethren, it ought to be circulated widely. Send twenty-five cents to L. W. Spayd, Owosso, Mich., and he will send you a copy by mail. It is just what you need in meeting the Seventh-Day Adventist. Two have been added at Durand since last report.

Bro. McCall begins his fourth year at Yale. His audiences are larger than they ever were.

The people of Michigan will be pleased to learn that Bro. W. A. Ward began his evangelistic work once more, with this month. You may expect to hear of some grand meetings.

We are pleased to hear that Bro. McMillan, our state secretary, has gone the way of all the living, by taking unto himself a wife. We congratulate him ad wish him success and happiness. May the Lord prosper him in his work. More again. R. BRUCE BROWN.

Bethany.

At Chatianooga the alumni and friends of Bethany met and conferred. The results of that meeting may have a very important bearing on the future of this worthy old institution. Already restored confidence is asserting its sway. It has begun to dawn upon most thoughtful people that, come what may, Bethany has yet a great future before her.

It was the unanimous opinion of all present that the graduates and patrons of Bethany should form local organizations in the larger cities and centers of influences, through which help could be extended to her in many ways, especially in moral and financial support. A plan, with this as a result, is soon to be put into operation. There are nearly one thousand graduates of the college scattered throughout the United States and British Provinces.

The financial outlook steadily grows brighter, although it is only about a fortnight since the board of trustees started out on the present new departure. Bro. McLean remarked in the meeting at Chattanooga that after a careful and thorough investigation he was fully satisfied that the administration of Bethany's affairs had always been strictly honest, however great may have been the misfortunes that may have overtaken them. If errors have been committed, they were not inspired by dishonest purposes.

There is scarcely an educational institution in the land that has not at some time in its history been so near the brink of failure that it required extraordinary help to save it from ruin. This can scarcely be said of Bethany now, however much she needs funds, and it is doubtful if she ever was in a worse condition than at present. What other college has ever had such vitality ? J. L. DARSIE.

Convention Miscellany.

The Chattanooga Convention proved that it takes something worse than yellow fever to scare the Disciples of Christ, or keep them from their annual assemblage.

The weather, excepting only the rain of Monday, was splendid. It was clear, cool and bracing; the air was fragrant with the breath of the magnolia and the rose, and the rain had laid the dust.

Nobody with whom I met before the convention expected a thousand people; the enrollment must have reached nearly 1,400. And they were splendid people. There were no growlers, no kickers, no critics. The proceedings were full of "go" from start to finish.

One of the veterans remarked two features that particularly impressed him: first, the "old stagers," who have always been making their big speeches, were jostled off, and a program had been made with new timber; second, the addresses were rather better than usual at our National Convention. Doubtless the young men have been learning from the old.

On the whole the program committees are to be congratulated. Their work is exceedingly difficult, to secure variety and ability and acceptability. It was remarked that if they persist hereafter in placing two speakers on the evening program, the humane society ought to interfere. After an entire day of convention work the evening session ought to be made one of uplift. The devotional service, the singing, the announcements and items of business that overflow from the day's sessions, with one address, ought to be enough to satisfy anybody. It is better for both speaker and audience. But if the wealth of talent is so great and the themes so numerous that two speakers are indispensable, limit them both, and knock them down when the limit is reached; if they are too big, sing them down!

Two new days were added to the calendar of special offerings for such churches as choose to observe them. Children's Day for Home Missions, in November, and a day for Ministerial Relief, the Sunday before Christmas. The report making these recommendations was voted through by less than three hundred people, and not more than one-third of them voted either aye or no. Some of our churches have already abolished all special days; all of them that co-operate at all with the boards are struggling to adjust things so as to leave at least one-half the Sundays free for plain preaching, without begging.

Through the courtesy of C. C. Smith the Benevolent Association had a hearing of ten minutes, Mrs. H. M. Meier, president, being the spokesman. There were occasional stretches of vacuity in the program that could have been much better occupied with a full and fair presentation of the work and methods of this new National Association than with the items that were scheduled. However, imperfection marks all things human.

The convention was a surprise to Chattanooga, a stimulus to every delegate and visitor, and a real uplift to our cause. There were several finished addresses, and several times a finished audience. The hotel fare was not the best, but the arrangement in private homes was entirely satistory.

National Perils and Hopes.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS, PH. D.,
Superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.

Twelve cyclonic clouds of moral evil darken our national sky: The pro rata increase since the civil war, of liquor consumption, murders, divorces, lynchings, labor riots, municipal misrule, Sabbath-breaking, impurity, corrupt journalism, brutal sports, negro criminality and respectable lawlessness.

These clouds should be the chief concern of Congress and the churches alike, for they are more perilous to the nation, in the light of history, than any foreign foe. To remove or reduce these clouds we must remove or reduce the causes, which are, in part: the civil war, for war, however just, always increases intemperance, impurity and Sabbath-breaking, lowers the sacredness of life and impropriety; the lager beer invasion, which came under cover of the civil war; immigration; excessive commercialism; impersonal business, the "soulless corporation," that in public thought can neither cheat nor be cheated; luxury; the relaxation of belief in future retribution, which always multiplies hells on earth.

These evils are as much weaker than the moral forces of the churches as Spain is weaker than the United States, and will be defeated whenever the united churches really attack them. First, the churches must recognize that the gospel has to do with personal and social ethics as much if not more than with theology; and, second, the forces now divided into one hundred and fifty sects must be sociologically united to save society as well as souls. That hese clouds can be dispelled is betokened by he fact that clouds as dark have been dispelled n this generation by the unitedaction of Christian citizenship—dueling, slavery, Mormon olygamy, the Louisiana lottery, the spoils ystem, to which may be added three other eforms so nearly complete that we may count hem as done, which are, scientific temperance ducation in the public schools—but four tates out of the union on that—and the ustralian ballot—only three states haven't hat in some degree—while the Anglo-Saxon inernational treaty of arbitration is now practially assurred, and promises to be the begining of the end of international war. The ther clouds also are to be dispelled when the hurches unite their forces, a grand army of 3,000,000, which becoming really the "church ilitant" will become the "church triumphnt."

Church Extension Receipts.

For completing chapels for the week ending Oct. 15th, '98:

From churches	$285.17
From individuals	845.40
Total	$1,130.57
Last year, churches	200.77
Individuals	820.32
Gain	109.48

NOTE.—A further analysis of our receipts shows a gain of $25.08 in receipts from individuals; a gain of $84.40 from the churches, and a gain of five in the number of contributing churches.

Collections in the churches should be kept going through November. We still lack $13,000 of reaching the $20,000 from collections this fall.

Remittances should be sent to OHIO.

Cincinnati, Oct. 17.—There were three baptisms last Sunday night, Oct. 9th. There was one confession yesterday morning. Walnut Hills Church was never in a more flourishing condition than now.—S. D. DUTCHER.

MISSOURI.

Wallace, Oct. 17.—Our meeting here two weeks old and eight added; church united, people interested, prospects good. Our hindrance, very bad weather. I go next to DeKalb, Mo.—JNO. P. JESSE.

Center, Oct. 15.—Closed meeting here Wednesday with five additions. The church built up in zeal I trust. Begin at Spaulding tonight. Hope for a good meeting there.—W. D. MCCULLEY.

Frank L. Bowen, City Missionary in Kansas City, is conducting a meeting in the hall occupied by the Ivanhoe Park Christian Sunday-School at Thirty-eighth and Woodland Avenues in that city, and reports the outlook for a new church there to be good. The first five days' work ,ending Oct. 15, resulted in three confessions and one addition by letter. This work is in one of the most rapidly growing sections of Kansas City, and it is important that a rallying point for our work there be firmly established.

1519 Tracey Ave., Kansas City, Oct. 22.—Recently closed an eight days' meeting at Bethel Church, Buchanan County, assisting W. A. Nickell. There were five additions. The church is in perfect harmony and splendid working condition. Have seldom seen a country church doing such fine grade of work. I wanted to say this for church and minister. —A W. KOKENDOFFER.

Trenton, Oct. 22.—One addition at Trenton recently. All departments of the work moving along reasonably well.—GRANVILLE SNELL.

Mt. Moriah, Oct. 20.—Notwithstanding the storm the interest in our meeting is good. Eleven additions and fine audiences. Bro. Gillidet, of Bethany, has been with us part of the time. We go next to Princeton, Mo.—MORGAN & DAUGHTER.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.

Oklahoma City, Oct. 17.—J. V. Coombs and Hunsaker will begin a meeting with O. P. McMahan here Oct. 23.—O. P. MC.

KENTUCKY.

Stanford, Oct. 19.—Seventeen additions to date.—H. A. NORTHCUTT, evangelist; F. W. ALLEN, pastor.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, Oct. 18.—Three additions at North Park Church; one at Broad Ripple.—J. M. CANFIELD.

IOWA.

Ottumwa, Oct. 19.—The meeting at the Oak Grove Church closed after 16 days with 13 additions; nine by obedience. Jas. T. Nichols and the writer conducted the meeting. Bro. Nichols has been laboring for Mt. Auburn and Oak Grove Churches, but Mt. Auburn needs all his time and he has arranged to stay all time with them while the writer continues his work here. The Oak Grove brethren love Bro. Nichols and give him up with reluctance.—A. L. CRILEY.

Clarinda, Oct. 16.—Have just returned from holding a 12 days' meeting at Little Hickman Church, near Nicholasville, Ky. Five years ago we held a meeting for this church, and hence it was quite a pleasure to be there in another meeting. The meeting resulted in 14 additions and the organization of a splendid Endeavor Society.—C. H. WHITE.

Winterset, Oct. 20.—One baptism recently. I begin my third meeting here next Lord's day with J. Will Landrum singer.—J. M. LOWE.

Milo.—The Milo meeting, which has been in progress for five weeks, closed last Lord's day. This meeting, which was in a new field, was under the auspices of the churches of Warren County and conducted by Bro. Dempsey A. Hunter, of Jefferson, Iowa. Bro. Hunter is a strong man in the Lord and a very effective speaker. He is a very clear, concise talker, and by his kindly spirit won the hearts of many. Although some may say the meeting was a failure, there has been good seed carefully sown that will bring forth much fruit in the future. There were two confessions, and a church organized of 10 members. Plans were almost completed for the coming year. A building being secured for services and arrangements being made by which they will secure a student from Drake University to preach for them next summer, when another meeting will be held and large ingathering of the Master's flock is expected. The town is so full of sectarianism that it will take some time to overcome it, but right will triumph.—IDA PAYNE.

ARKANSAS.

Bald Knob, Oct. 17.—Our meeting at this place closed last night with 30 additions, mostly by baptism. The writer has been with this church for seven years and will continue indefinitely. Our meeting was conducted with our home force and all are happy, praise the Lord.—M. A. SMITH.

OKLAHOMA.

Hennessy, Oct. 13.—With the assistance of Singing Evangelist Jas. S. Helm I am holding a meeting at this place which is two weeks old with five additions. Yesterday was a bad day, almost stormed us out. I sent for Bro. Helm after reading the notice of him in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I am by no means disappointed. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is to me the most trustworthy and helpful weekly visitor.—C. W. VAN DOLAH.

TEXAS.

Waco, Oct. 19.—My work with the Central Church this city is closing with additions at nearly every service. I baptized three last Sunday, and had two other additions during the day. One to be baptized later.—F. N. CALVIN.

ILLINIOS.

Lincoln, Oct. 17.—Our meeting commenced yesterday. Two additions to begin with; one by confession. The prospect is very good. The regular minister and the church have things in charge. Lincoln Church will be in line again not many days hence.—ALBERT NICHOLS.

Rantoul, Oct. 21.—One addition last Sunday. The church here and at Bethany, which is our mission point, gave $38 to Illinois missions.—H. H. PETERS.

Truth.

The only amaranthine flower on earth
Is virtue; the only lasting tresure, truth.
But what is truth? 'Twas Pilate's question put
To Truth itself, that deigned him no reply.
And wherefore? will not God impart His light
To them that ask it?—Freely: 'tis his joy,
His glory and His nature to impart.
But to the proud, uncandid, insincere,
Or negligent inquirer, not a spark.
What pearl is it that rich men cannot buy,
That learning is too proud to gather up;
But which the poor and despised of all
Seek and obtain, and often find unsought?
Tell me, and I will tell thee what is truth.

A True Story.*

In the village of Valadimir was a young merchant by the name of Aksenov, who owned two stores and a dwelling. Of prepossessing appearance was Aksenov, with blond, curly hair. He was fond of gaiety and songs. In his youth he drank freely, and when under the influence of liquor would become very boisterous. But after his marriage he drank only occasionaly.

One summer day Aksenov decided to go to the market town, Nijni-Novo-gorod. As he bade adieu to his family his wife said to him:

"Ivan Dmitrievitch, do not go there today. I have had a bad dream about you." Aksenov laughed good-naturedly and said:

"You are afraid I will do something foolish at the market."

His wife responded: "I scarcely know myself of what I am afraid. Only I have had a bad dream. I saw you coming home, your head bare and your hair entirely white."

Aksenov laughed all the more and said: "Ah, well! It is a good sign. I will be successful in my business and will bring you some beautiful presents."

He took leave of them and departed. About midway to the market town he met a merchant whom he had known and stopped with him for the night.

They took tea together and retired in adjoining bedrooms. Aksenov was not a great sleeper. He arose at midnight, that he might travel at his leasure in the cool of the morning. He aroused the postboy and gave him orders to harness his horses. Then he entered the hotel, paid the landlord and departed.

After he had gone about twenty miles he stopped to let his horses eat again and to rest at the tavern. As he sat on the steps waiting for dinner he took a guitar and began playing. Suddenly there arrived a carriage; an officer and two soldiers alighted from it. They approached Aksenov and demanded of him what his business was and from where he had come. Aksenov answered their questions and invited them to eat with him. But the officer continued to press the questions—

"Where had he spent the past night? Was he alone with the other merchant? Why had he left the tavern so precipitately."

Aksenov, surprised by their questions, told them all, then said: "Why do you question me so closely? I am neither a thief nor a brigand. I am attending to my own business and no one has a right to question me."

Then the officer called the soldiers and turning to Aksenov said: "I am the sheriff. If I question you it is because the merchant with whom you passed the night has been slain! Soldiers, search him."

They enter the tavern, taking his trunk and knapsack with them, which they opened and looked through. Suddenly the sheriff pulled from the knapsack a knife and exclaimed:

"Whose dagger?"

Aksenov looked and saw a knife covered with blood. It was from his knapsack they had drawn it and terror seized him.

"And why was blood on the knife?" Aksenov tried to answer but he could not say a single word.

"Me—I—er—do not know—I—a knife! It does not belong to me."

Then the sheriff said: "The merchant was found this morning with his throat cut. No one but you could have committed the crime. The house was securely fastened from the inside, and in it no one but you. Here, moreover, is a knife covered with blood, and found in your possession. Besides, the crime is pictured on your countenance. Confess all—how you slew him and how much money you have stolen."

Aksenov swore he was not the guilty one, that he had not seen the merchant since they took tea together, that he had no one's money but his own—8,000 roubles—and that the knife did not belong to him. But his voice was choked, his face was pale and he trembled from fear as one guilty.

The sheriff having called the soldiers, ordered them to bind him hand and foot, and to put him in the carriage.

Aksenov crossed himself and wept. They took possession of his baggage and his money and carried him to prison in a neighboring village. They made inquiries in Valdimir. All the merchants and inhabitants declared that Aksenov, whom they had loved to drink with and be entertained by was an honorable man.

Then the case was taken before the judges. He was accused of having murdered the merchant, from Riazon, and of having stolen from him twenty thousand roubles. Aksenov's wife was heart-broken and knew not what to think. Her children were small—one of them a baby-in-arms. She took them both with her and went to the village where her husband was imprisoned. At first they refused to let her see him. Then when she had entreated them they granted her permission.

On seeing him in prison clothes, bound and huddled with criminals she swoomed and fell to the floor, and did not come to herself for some time. When she did she put the children away from her, was assisted to a cot by Aksenov and then gave him an account of the family affairs and asked him to tell he all that had happened to him. When he had told her all she asked:

"What are your chances now?"

"A supplication must be sent to the tsar," he responded. "For it cannot be that the innocent should suffer punishment."

His wife told him she had already sent a supplication to the tsar, but it had done no good.

Aksenov was overcome with grief and made no answer.

The wife said to him: "It was not in vain, that dream I had, you remember, in which I saw you with white hair, for truly your hair has become white because of sorrow. You should not have gone that day."

Then she placed her hand upon his head, and said: "Ivan, my dear, tell the truth to your wife. Was it not you who murdered him?"

Aksenov said, "And you, my dear, also believe it!" He covered his face with his hands and wept bitterly.

A soldier appeared and informed the woman it was time for her and her children to retire. Then Aksenov bade farewell to his family for the last time.

When his wife had departed he went over in his mind the conversation which they had just had. In recalling that his wife believed it of him also and that she had asked if it was he who had murdered the merchant he said to himself: "God alone knows the truth. It is to him I must cry. I must rely upon his mercy."

And from that moment he ceased to send petitions to those in authority. He shut his heart against hope and did nothing but pray to God.

The judges sentenced Aksenov to the knout first and afterwards to hard work. They beat and bruised him at the knout and after the wounds had healed they sent him with other convicts to Siberia.

There he remained twenty-six years. His hair became as white as snow, his long gray beard fell out. He lost all his mirthfulness. He vowed he would never laugh and talk again, but devote himself to prayer.

In prison Aksenov learned the shoemaker's trade. With money thus obtained he bought a martyrology which he read while there was light in his cell. On feast days he went to the chapel, read the psalms and sang in the choir. He still had his musical voice. The officers loved him for his gentleness, his companions held him in high esteem and called him "grandpa" and "man of God."

When the prisoners had a favor to ask, it was always by Aksenov that they presented their request, and when they had disagreements with each other it was Aksenov again whom they chose as arbiter.

No one wrote to Aksenov from home. He did not even know if his wife and children were living.

One day they brought a band of new convicts to the prison. That night the old ones asked the new ones from what cities or villages they had come, and for what crimes they had been sent here. Aksenov approached them and with head downcast, listened to their conversation. One of the new convicts was an old man, about sixty years of age. He related the circumstances of his condemnation.

"It is this way, my brothers," said he. "They sent me here unjustly. I had just unharnessed a horse from a sleigh when some one seized me saying I had commited robbery.

"I have committed no offense, said I. I am not running away. You see I have unhitched the horse. Besides, the postboy is my friend."

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, - - - BOSTON, MASS.

"'Not so,' said they; you have stolen the horse." But they could not say where nor from whom I had stolen him. Most certainly I have committed misdeeds which should have brought me here long ago. But they could never take me on that charge. And to-day they have brought me here in spite of the law. But wait; I have been in Siberia before, and I am not going to stay here much longer."

"And from where have you come?" asked one of the others.

"I am from the city of Vladimir. I am a shopkeeper in that place. My name is Makar Semivnovitch."

"Oh, Semivnovitch, have you not heard spoken of in Vladimir some merchants named Aksenov, and if so are they living yet?"

"How then! They are rich merchants, although their father is in Siberia. For without doubt he has sinned like the rest of us."

Aksenov did not like to speak of his sorrow. He sighed and said: "It is for my sins that I have been here these twenty-six years."

"And for what sins?" asked Makar Semivnovitch.

"It is what I deserve," Aksenov answered simply. He did not care to say anything more. But his companions related to the new ones why he had been placed there; how during his journey some one had assassinated a merchant and concealed in his possessions a knife covered with blood and how on account of that evidence they had sentenced him unjustly. On hearing this Makar Semivnovitch looked at Aksenov, slapped his knees with his hands and exclaimed:

"Oh, what a miracle! What a wonder! Ah, you are indeed old, little grandfather!"

They asked him why he was so astonished and where he had seen Aksenov. But Makar did not answer them. He simply said:

"A miracle, my friends, that Fate should have brought us together here."

By these words Aksenov thought that this man might be the real assassin; so he said to him:

"Have you heard that affair spoken of? Or indeed, Semivnovitch, have you seen me somewhere outside this prison?"

"How then! I have heard it spoken of. Even the walls have ears! But it has been a long time since it happened, and what they told me I have forgotten," said Semivnovitch.

"Perhaps you have learned who killed the merchant," said Aksenov. Makar laughed and said:

"But what about the sack in which they found the knife? It, without doubt, belonged to him who was the murderer. How could any one else have put it in your sack? You had it under your pillow—you would have known it."

Upon hearing these words Aksenov felt convinced that he was the very one who had murdered the merchant. He arose and went away. All that night he could not sleep. Presently, however, he fell into a deep trance and dreamed he saw his wife as she had looked when last she was with him. He saw her still living, her eyes, her face; he heard her laugh and talk. Then his children also appeared to him as they had been, both small; one wrapped in a fur robe, the other in its mother's arms. He saw again himself as he was then; gay, young and playing the guitar on the porch of the hotel where he had been arrested. He recalled the horrible place where he had been flogged and the villains who had flogged him, the crowds standing by, and the convicts and his twenty-six years in prison. When he awoke he thought of his old age, and he longed for death to end it all.

"And all of this on account of that scoundrel!" thought he. He felt such intense hatred for Makar that he wished for the moment to slay him in order to avenge his wrongs. He prayed all night without being able to calm himself. During the day he would not go near Makar Semivnovitch. Thus passed five days. At night Aksenov was unable to sleep. He became a victim to insomnia. One night as he was walking in the prison he perceived that one of the bunks had fallen from the side of the dungeon. He stopped to see what had caused it, when Makar Semivnovitch sprang up quickly from under the bunk and beheld Aksenov with an expression of dread. Aksenov wished to appear as if he had not seen him. But Makar seized him by the arm and told him how he had dug a hole in the wall, how every day he carried some of the dirt out in his boots to empty in the streets when they were led out to work, and he added:

"Only keep silence, old man; I will take you away with me. If you betray me I know they will beat me almost to death, but you will pay for it to me, for I will murder you!"

On seeing him who had blasted his life Aksenov trembled with suppressed rage. He withdrew his arm and said:

"I do not want you to free me, and you have no cause to slay me. You have already killed me years ago. As to exposing you or not, it is God who will decide that."

On the morrow when the soldiers were going over the prison they found the excavation. All the convicts denied having any knowledge of it. Those who knew did not care to betray Makar. They knew he would be beaten half to death. Then the chief addressed himself to Aksenov.

"Patriarch," said he, "you are a just man; tell me, before God, who has done this?"

Makar Semivnovitch remained impassive, looking steadily towards the chief, and not once turning to Aksenov. As for Aksenov his arms and his legs trembled, and he could not utter a word.

"I will keep silence," thought he, "but why spare him, since it is he who ruined my life? Let him pay me for my torture. It is true he would be beaten almost to death, and even if he is not the assassin whom I think, what would he do to relieve me?"

The chief reiterated his command. Aksenov looked towards Semivnovitch and said:

"Your Honor, I can not tell. God does not allow me to make it known. I will not tell you. Do to me what you choose. It is in your power."

In spite of the chief's efforts Aksenov would say no more. They could not ascertain who the culprit was. The following night as Aksenov was falling to sleep on his bunk he heard some one approach him and stop at his feet. He looked in the dim light and beheld Makar. Aksenov said to him: "Have you further need of me?" What are you there for?" Makar Semivnovitch did not answer. Aksenov arose and said: "What do you want? Tell me, or else I will call the guard."

Makar bent over very near to Aksenov, and said in a low voice:

"Ivan Dnitriecvitch, forgive me!"

"Why! For what must I forgive you?" asked Aksenov.

"It was I who slew the merchant, and it was I who hid the knife in your sack. I intended to kill you also, but at that moment I heard a noise in the yard. I placed the knife in your sack and made my escape through the window."

Aksenov knew not what to say. Makar Semivnovitch crept from the bed, prostrated himself before Aksenov and said:

"Ivan Dnitriecvitch, pardon me. In the name of God forgive me! I am going to declare to the authorities that I murdered the merchant. They will give you back your liberty, and you will return to your home." Aksenov responded:

"That sounds well, but I have suffered here a long time. Where would I go? My wife is dead. My children have forgotten me. I have nowhere to go."

Makar remained on his knees. He brushed the dust from his head and said:

"Ivan, forgive me. Had they beaten me at the knout it would have made me less unhappy than to see you thus, and to think you still have pity upon me! You have not exposed me! Pardon me. In the name of Christ, pardon a cursed malefactor!" And he commenced sobbing. When Aksenov saw Makar was crying he himself cried and said:

"God will pardon you. Perhaps I am a hundred times worse than you."

Aksenov suddenly felt a great joy overspread his whole soul. He ceased to mourn for his home. He did not care to leave the prison, and did not dream of its being his last hours there.

Makar Semivnovitch did not heed Aksenov, but declared himself guilty.

When the order came to release Aksenov it found him—dead!

Nina.*

STELLA STRAWN.

Nina was a queer child, not like most other children. Heaven and Jesus was very near to her, and she had some very strange ideas. Perhaps the reason was because she was not very strong, and that her mother had gone to heaven.

One day she said to grandma in her serious way, "I'm always going to remember what mamma said before she died, about how I must always take care of little brother and be a good girl and teach him to be good and pretty soon I'll die and go to heaven."

One day Cecil (who was about six) was playing with a little cart and broke it. He began to cry. Nina came up and said:

"Don't cry, Cecil, I'll try to fix it, but if I can't, just remember that mamma's in heaven, and that before long we'll go to mamma and Jesus, and up in heaven toys are never out of fix. This world is full of care and trials, but it is not long before it's all over, honey."

With these cheerful remarks it is no wonder that Cecil's mind was very full of sober thoughts.

Cecil started to school in the spring. He was six years old. It was about one-half of a mile to school across the fields, but he was a hardy boy and Nina always cared for him. But this story is to be about Nina.

One cool March day Cecil was kept in after school to recite a lesson he had missed, and Nina waited for him. He was only kept a few minutes, but the other children were all gone.

"Come, Cecil," said Nina, "let us hurry home. It is cloudy and it will get dark early, and it looks like rain."

So taking her brother's hand Nina hurried along across the fields in the well-worn path. Away they went through the fields till they came to the brook. Here they stopped in dismay, for the board on which they expected to cross had floated away. In dry weather this stream was usually dry, but wet weather had swollen it till it was now a little torrent of ice-cold water.

"Oh, how can we cross?" cried Cecil.

"It's awful cold, but I guess we can wade. It can't be very deep," said little Nina.

"No, no, no; I won't, I can't, no, no!" cried Cecil, pulling at Nina's arm.

"It's too late to go back to the road, and I don't want to be out after dark, and it's going to rain, too," said Nina.

There was a moment's silence, then Cecil said, "well, I can't wade; it's too deep and cold."

"Come, Cecil," said Nina; "I know, I'll wade and carry you."

"You'll let me fall, I know," whimpered Cecil.

"No, I don't think I will," said Nina. "It's all we can do, so there."

So saying, Nina sat down and pulled off her shoes and stockings, and put them in her satchel, and put the satchel around her neck, and taking her brother in her arms said, "Now be still and don't scream, and you'll be all right; you had better hide your eyes on my shoulder so you can't see the water and be scared."

Nina put one foot in the water; she could hardly bear it, but resolutely she stepped in and waded bravely forward. It grew deeper and deeper, until it was to her knees; and her dress skirt was wet. She was frightened, but soon it began to grow shallow, and soon she was on the opposite side. Her legs were trembling and she was numb with cold. Wringing out her dress, she wiped her feet on it and with great difficulty succeeded in putting her stockings on her damp feet. Then it began to rain, and they ran home as fast as they could; when, reaching grandma's, they told their story.

"Quite brave," said grandpa.

"It's enough to kill her," said grandma, never dreaming it would kill her.

"I don't want any supper," said Nina; my head aches, and I feel chilly."

Grandma immediately tried her home remedies, but to no good, so grandpa went for the doctor. It proved that Nina had la grippe. Several days after she had been in bed she said she wished to see Cecil. Cecil was brought in. He had strict orders to be very quiet, so he approached her timidly.

"Brother, darling, come near to me," said Nina; "I want to talk to you, to tell you what I think. I think I shall die soon and I want you to be a good boy. I often tell you earth is full of sorrow and pain, but it is not long before we go to heaven if we serve Jesus. You are young, brother, and so am I, but you can understand. You love Christ and serve him and soon you will die and go to heaven, and mamma and papa and I will be there, for heaven is not far away. We don't remember papa, but mamma said he was a good man. But I'm so tired, Cecie; promise me you will always be good; will you?"

"Yes, yes, I will," cried Cecil bursting into tears, for he had been swelling up all the time Nina was speaking. "But don't die, oh, don't; I can never live without you. Oh, my Nina, my Nina, don't, don't!"

But grandma came and led him away, and soothed him by saying it was only because she was despondent she spoke so, but her own heart was full of trouble and anxiety.

Cecil never saw Nina alive again, though she did not die for several days; he was not allowed in the sick room again.

But Nina's eleven years' sojourn on earth had not been in vain. For we never fail to do good if we follow the footsteps of our great Master, who was humble and lowly, and never despised little things. And if we follow the footsteps of our blessed Savior we shall reap a reward, and we must not forget our pilgrimage on earth is short at best.

"Scorn not the slightest word or deed,
Nor deem it void of power;
There's fruit in each wind-wafted seed
That waits its natal hour."

The Infinite.

BY GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

If we of earth could draw aside the pall
Shrouding the chasm, would we dare to fall?
Who shall be free from terror or from shame?
Shall he of tainted life or tarnished name?
Launched on the Sea of Silence, who is sure?
The wise, the great, the mighty? No; the pure!
For whom shall Heaven's secret be unsealed?
To whom shall Heaven's beauty be revealed?
Who, rising from Earth's clash and crash of wars,
Shall hear the trump of triumph from the stars?
Not he whose god is gold, whose creed is lust,
Who grinds his fellow creature in the dust.
When soars the soul in undiscovered space
Above the world, beyond the reckless race
Which laughs and eats and sleeps and has no care
For the eternal secrets of the air,
What soul is there which shall be safe or sure?
Who on the Sea of Silence shall endure?
To-day we sleep, and if we dream at all,
Our dream is of delight. But soon will fall Upon our ears voices of the vast Regions of Mystery—on our sight be cast
The awful vision of Infinity.
Who then from shame or sorrow shall be free?
When, seeing sin by daylight, by the dawn
Of Heaven's truth and glory, we are drawn
To hide ourselves in darkness—when the light
Makes us to shrink and sicken at the sight
Of our own souls; how much we weep too late
And weeping, shudder at the face of Fate!
For whom shall Heaven's beacon beam afar?
For whom shall Heaven's gate be flung ajar?
From whom shall Hell's foul phantoms flee, dismayed,
As floating fearless thro' the field of shade
The spirit passes? Who shall be secure?
Lo, he whose hands are clean; whose heart is pure!

Sunday-School Literature

THE matter of Sunday-school Literature is one of very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no importance, or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

We understand a FEW of our schools are using sectarian or union (so called) supplies, in order to save a few cents each quarter. Are you one of that number? Samples of our Supplies sent free

Honored Servants.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I am down here in the interests of a son stricken with typhoid. I wish to say a few words of surrounding conditions. When the troops came here I wrote our dear Bro. T. H. Blenus of several of our boys who were members of the church. He visited them promptly, made their acquaintance, secured their friendship and strengthened them against the temptations that surround the loose life of a soldier. My son among the many was taken down with typhoid fever. Bro. Blenus gave him immediate attention. Many are the individuals who have received the personal attention of Bro. Blenus, while they lived, and funeral services when he died. The benefits received by the devotion of this godly man and his estimable wife, can never be measured. I am glad God sent him here in time to meet in some measure the terrible exigencies of the times that have fallen on the soldier's life in this community. I wish to state that, with all the appliances now in use, no better place or surroundings could be found than the field hospital tent for the recovery of the sick soldier. All medicines, ice, milk and everything needed for the sick or convalescent are in abundant supply. To measure the tireless devotion and assiduous attention, by day and night—all the time—of the army of trained lady nurses, cannot be done. My son is recovering. Thanks to Bro. Blenus and all these, with the prayers of my Christian brotherhood. LEROY WILEY.

THE GOOD FIGHT.

(1 Tim. 7:11-16; 2 Tim. 4:7, 8.)

There is such a thing as a good fight. Our country has just fought one in behalf of truth, and righteousness, and freedom. Our young men have unselfishly and gloriously stepped forward in defense of the great principle of human liberty, and some have paid the forfeit with their lives. And yet we all agree that the fewer such fights there are the better. The Czar has made a suggestion which should be echoed by every voice that can be raised in behalf of peace. The other day one of the greatest thinkers of this country was asked, "Bro Procter, what to you think of the Emperor Nicholas' proposition that all Europe should disarm?" Instantly he replied in that original, striking way of his, "It will make him immortal!" And it is true. Think of the greatness of the idea, that all Europe—many times more populous and wealthy than America—flashing with arms as the sea glitters with crested waves, crowded with bivouacs as our fields are crowded with shocks of grain, that this great armed camp should turn its attention from militarism to industry, and should beat its swords into plowshares and railroad shares! It is one of the greatest thoughts of our century. Three men, if they would agree, might inaugurate the reform, and one of them has proposed it. Every preacher and religious journal, every lover of peace and progress in in our land should raise his voice in a hearty Amen! amen! to the conscientious, peace-loving monarch's proposal. Long live the Christian Czar!

But, after all, the figure of the fight serves as an illustration for the Christian life in a way that no other figure can so well do. Paul uses it again and again. The battle between flesh and spirit, the struggle between inclination and aspiration, the fight with that great conqueror of conquerors, Self—nothing can picture this war of extermination except the word fight. It is the best battle ever on. It is the one great, good fight.

There have been men who conquered the world and then there is a great world-conqueror who has conquered them. Greater is he who ruleth this greatest of conquerors than he who takes all cities. Alexander the Great once visited the poor philosopher who lived in a wretched home. "Diogenes, what can I do for thee," asked the emporer, he who ruled the world. "Please," answered the ragged scholar, "Please to stand out of my sunlight!" There's an emperor greater than Alexander who daily comes to us all with the same question. He is ruler of the world, Self the First, Self the Great, and he asks each one "What can I do for thee?" O, if we all only had the courage to say to him, "Stand out of my sunshine!" and then if necessary fight him till he does.

This is the only fight in the world worth undertaking, it is the only good fight, it is the fight of faith, to be fought with armor of God, sword of the Spirit, and it is without quarter, to the death. Either Self will win and the Spirit of God within us will be quenched, or Self will perish gradually, finally, and God and Christ be all in all, reigning in us the hope of glory. Blessed is he that overcometh! The fight will end in peace! After the struggle comes the quiet, after the storm sometimes will come the calm. This self of sin—"Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" "Thank God through Jesus Christ!" There is the Ally who will turn the tide of battle in our favor, vanquish the all-powerful conqueror of kings and say to our souls that strive and cry, "Peace be still!"

Hiram College Jubilee Endowment.

The great popular movement has begun. Hiram College is to be endowed by an additional sum of $250,000 on the occasion of its jubilee commencement in June, 1900.

The army of 50,000 persons who will accomplish this grand work is forming. We publish our first list of names, consisting of several hundred persons. Let every friend of Hiram and every friend of Christian education send in his name. All we want now is your name, which identifies you with this great movement. You can give one dollar or more, the definite amount to be named later. If you can give but one dollar, send in your name with as much freedom as if you could give a thousand.

We here give a copy of the enlistment card. Send us your name and we will write it on the card; and do not fail to give your address, street and number.

HIRAM COLLEGE JUBILEE ENLISTMENT CARD.

Whereas, the friends of Hiram College are uniting in a movement to add $250,000 to the endowment of the institution on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary in June of the year 1900, and whereas an effort is now being made to secure the names of 50,000 persons, more or less, who will make a donation of from one dollar to one thousand dollars each for that purpose, I do hereby agree to join in this movement by promising to pay one dollar or more and will name the definite amount of my donation and the time of payment when called upon to do so.

STARVING

in the Midst of Plenty.

That's what people with poor digestion are doing every day. They have no appetite, or if they do have an appetite and eat what they require, it does them no good, because the stomach does not digest it, and the fermenting mass of food becomes a source of disease, of headache, sleeplessness, languor and the thousand and one symptoms of disordered digestion. Mr. Judson A. Stanion, the great Church and Sunday-school worker, and president Christian Endeavor Union, St. Louis, Mo., says:

MR. JUDSON A. STANION.

"I have had to be extremely careful what I ate. Many things were indigestible, and after a hearty dinner I could scarcely keep awake. I never have been sick in bed, but have had a great deal of inconvenience from indigestion. Since I learned of the merits of Stuart's Tablets I keep them in my desk or carry them in my pocket, and find that I can eat anything at all without discomfort. They were recommended to me by a friend who is enthusiastic in their praise. I cannot afford to be drowsy after lunch, and find these tablets just the thing to assist digestion and keep all my faculties wide-awake." Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets promptly relieve and cure all forms of indigestion. They have done it in thousands of cases and will do it in yours. The reason is simple. They digest the food whether the stomach works or not, and that's the whole secret. At all druggists, 50 cents a box. For book on stomach diseases giving valuable advice, address F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.

Literature.

THE MAN IN THE BOOK. By H. S. Lobingier. 450 pages, Cloth, $1.50. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis.

"This is doubtless the choicest work in our church literature, from the standpoint of literary excellence, poetic fancy and philosophic insight. 450 pages, 12 mo. Cloth, $1.50." The above quotation is taken from the catalogue of books and periodicals published by the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Through the kindness of Dr. A. Steward Lobingier, M. D., of Denver, Col., a brother of the author of the above book, H. S. Lobingier, I have enjoyed the great pleasure of reading and studying this charming book. I want to give my testimony to the merits of this wonderful work. I have read every life of Christ published in the English language, and I do not hesitate to say that "The Man in the Book" surpasses them all. Every minister in the Christian Church should have this book in his library. Surely, this gifted writer was so near the Man in the Book when he wrote that he was under his inspiring influence. The book in its present form is very cheap at $1.50, but it is the belief of the writer that a paper edition should be issued that every family may possess this literary and Bible gem. Every purchaser of this work will add to his library a book of great excellence, and at the same time aid the family of one of the purest, sweetest of God's servants.

"GLIMPSES OF GOD." By Rev. B. G. Newton, Cleveland, Ohio.

This is a book of nine sermons, preached by the Rev. B. G. Newton, pastor Franklin Ave. Congregational Church, Cleveland, Ohio, and published by request of his congregation as a means of assisting in the payment of a debt on their church building. The sermons are readable and worthy of this form quite apart from the primary purpose for which they are published and sold by the author and his church.

"THE STATE." By L. T. Chamberlain. The Baker & Taylor Co., Publishers, 5-7 E. 16th St., New York. Price, in cloth, 50 cents.

This book is an excellent essay on the nature, origin and function of the state, and well worthy of careful reading. The writer denies that the origin of the state is artificial, and that it exists only to punish evil-doers or to regulate commerce alone. It has its origin in the nature of man, and is supreme in its right to exist, govern and develop the race. But he holds that it must take cognizance of the individual as well as of the body collective, and the reverse. The state cannot yield its rights to govern, neither can it justly be partial in its benefits and favors. Much stress is also laid upon individual character as a determining factor of the purity, power and blessings of civil governments. H.

"LIGHT AMID THE SHADOWS." A book of poems, by Annie Clarke. Fleming H. Revell Co., Publishers. Price, 50 cents.

The sentimental and religious poems of this book will afford very pleasant reading for various minds, moods and occasions.

"YOUNG MEN IN HISTORY" is the title of a little book by Frank W. Gunsaulus, D. D., that will bring good cheer to any aspiring, ambitious young man. The book is published by Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, and may be had for 25 cents.

"THE MAN WHO WANTED HELP" is a word of helpful admonition to the man of opportunity, by Jas. G. K. McClure, D. D. This little book is also published by Fleming H. Revell, Chicago, and may be had for 25 cents.

Reprint Munnell's Article.

Dr. W. T. Moore, in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Oct. 13th, states that the late Thomas Munnell's article, "Indifference to Things Indifferent," printed in the first number of the old Christian Quarterly, "is the best thing of its kind in the English language."

Would it not be wise to reprint this article in the New Christian Quarterly, or in the CHRISTIAN-EVANELIST at least? Many of the younger men in our ministry have not read it. Such reprint would be a small but appropriate tribute to the sainted Munnell.

JESSE B. HASTON.

[Nothing could be more appropriate than the republiction of the article referred to, and we are sure Bro. Moore will gladly give it a place in the Christian Quarterly.—EDITOR.]

Edwards Davis.

To the Churches of Christ Everywhere:—We the Christian ministers of California assembled in mass meeting at Santa Cruz this August 1, 1898, desire to inform you of the unanimous action taken by us in regard to Edwards Davis, of Oakland, Cal., who having been charged with immoral conduct by the Central Christian Church of Oakland, was excluded from its fellowship. He afterwards confessed to the Ministerial Union his guilt and that he was justly excluded. Therefore:

Resolved, That although he was restored to the fellowship of said Central Church and granted a letter of recommendation, yet since this act of restoration was premature and was the act of one of the board of the church and not of the congregation, we most emphatically affirm our conviction that he should not be recognized by any of our churches as a minister of Jesus Christ, nor permitted to preach in their pulpits until such time as he shall have given conclusive evidence of genuine repentance and reformation of life.

Resolved, That we deeply regret the necessity laid upon us for taking this action and do now and s all continue to pray for him that he may yet become a true Christian minister, filled with the Spirit of Christ.

Resolved, That this action be published in our church papers and in the Oakland and San Francisco dailies. We take this action in mass meeting because Mr. Davis, not being a member of our State Ministerial Association, is not subject to action by that body as such.

J. H. HUGHES, Chairman,
J. F. TOUT, Secretary.

The foregoing notice came to us a few weeks ago, but its publication has been delayed pending some correspondence with the secretary of the meeting which passed the resolution. Whatever irregularity there may seem to be in the proceedings in this case, it appears that this action of the ministers was necessary to protect their good name and the reputation of our common Christianity. We regret exceedingly the necessity for such publication.—EDITOR.]

Liver Trouble

When the yellow flag of quarantine is hoisted over a dwelling it means disease and danger. So when the yellow flag flies in the face—when the cheek is sallow and the clear white of the eye is dyed saffron—there is danger. It is liver trouble. The liver is one of the most important organs of the body. On the proper discharge of its functions depend human health and happiness. When the liver fails of its duty, poisons at once begin to generate, and other organs of the body become involved. Never neglect the liver if you value health. If you are suffering from liver trouble, begin at once the use of AYER'S PILLS and you will find prompt relief and permanent cure.

"I was so weakened by liver trouble that I could scarcely lift my head. While in this condition I began the use of Ayer's Pills, and finding almost immediate benefit, continued their use until I was cured of my complaint."

GRIDER.

Montie May Grider, wife of John T. Grider, one of the elders of this congregation, died Sept. 27, 1898. Sister Grider was born and educated in this place. She was married to John T. Grider Oct. 2, 1889. There can be no sweeter, purer character than hers. She was among the faithful in all the work of the church. For a long time she was organist here. Every one is made better by being acquainted with one so spotless. She left us in her 30th year. Bro. Grider and dear little Grace, now in her 7th year, have the heartfelt sympathy of many friends. T. F. WEAVER.

Sullivan, Ill., Oct. 10, 1898.

HART.

Claude Garfield, youngest son of Elder E. J. and Sarah Hart, died Sept. 27, 1898, aged 20 years, after a brief illness with typhoid fever. When but 13 years old he obeyed Christ, and was faithful until death. He was a consecrated worker in all the activities of his Master's cause. We all feel that a great worker has gone to his reward. A host of friends remain to mourn his early death. S. G. NAYLOR.

JOURNEY.

Died in the city of Quincy, Ill., Oct. 8th, Sister Caroline Journey. Sister Journey was one of the charter members of the Christian Church at Payson, Ill., and was at all times one of its most helpful members, helping with her means as well as by her good counsel and regular and cheerful attendance. She was beloved by all who knew her, for she was ever ready to extend the helping hand to the needy and distressed. She was 71 years, 11 months and 23 days of age. She leaves three sons and two daughters, besides a host of friends to mourn their loss. She was buried at Payson, Ill.; the undersigned officiating.

SEWELL.

September 11, 1875;
August 30, 1893;
March 22, 1898;
September 30, 1898.

These four dates note the birth, the acceptance of gospel truth, the marriage and the death of Lettie, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Kirby and wife of Eld. E. W. Sewell, Henderson, Tenn. Is Mrs Lettie Sewell dead? Human knowledge replies, "She is;" but the blessed Word kindly whispers, "She is not dead, but sleepeth." In the purity of girlhood she lovingly placed herself in the Savior's care; and in blooming young womanhood she united heart and life with one who was faithfully trying to lead sinners to a better mode of living. As he started out in evangelistic work her clear, strong voice and musical attainments proved a great assistance. She was willing to do well her part, and encouraged him greatly in his labors. When we thought they were just ready to begin life's work in earnest, and could see a beautiful field opening before them, she submissively responded to the Master's call, "Come up higher." Lettie was tenderhearted and affectionate; had a bright, cheery disposition with which she made friends wherever known; sang well, one of her favorite songs being, "Blessed Assurance." Even while one by one the silver threads of life were severed by the raging, burning fever, she continued to sweetly sing, "Blessed assurance, Jesus is mine." This "Blessed Assurance" was well founded, for she tried to live prepared to "enter the pearly gates at Christ's command." May the hand of love touch with gentle healing the hearts of her devoted parents, sisters, and husband. Think not of Lettie as slumbering in the silent city, but as sweetly slumbering in the arms of eternal love.

STEWART.

Died Oct. 3rd, 1898, Flora Hopkins Stewart, aged 44 years, two and one-half months. She was a woman of rare ability and culture. The wife of Bro. J. F. Stewart, pastor of the church at Santa Palma, Cal. She was a faithful assistant pastor for 20 years, in which work she was supremely happy and never thought of self while laboring to save others. She labored even beyond her strength and gave her life for others. She leaves with her heartbroken husband two daughters, 18 and 14 years and a son 12. All of whom she saw baptized into Christ. She was married to Bro. Stewart July 30th, 1878, by E. J. Hart, at Louisville, Ill., at which time she resigned the position of 1st assistant teacher in the public schools, of Flora, Ill. She began public life as a teacher at the age of 16, serving in that capacity eight years. Her health failed in Oregon, where they were in the employ of the General Missionary Board. By the advice of physicians she came to Southern California, where she regained her health for a time, but it was only temporary. In addition to her arduous labors as a home missionary while in Oregon she served the C. W. B. M. as state president three years, during which time the work in the state was greatly enlarged. It was said of Bro. Stewart, "He is a good preacher, but Sister Stewart is a better one." Truly, she has done what she could. She rests from her labors and her works follow her. Bro. Stewart says he has been a subscriber for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for about 25 years.

Publishers' Notes.

By the time this reaches the reader our new publication, written by J. H. Stark, will be ready for delivery. The author has given this new work the title of "Mary Ardmore." This is a high-class religious story based on religious convictions and holding fast to such convictions until they are proven false. The characters are well chosen and each is made to carry out their part to great perfection. The book is handsomely bound in colored cloth and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

QUEEN ESTHER.

M. M. Davis is one of our best writers, and the book of Esther is one of the most interesting stories ever read. The story loses nothing in the hands of M. M. Davis All will continue to the close who begin to read it. The deductions of the author are worth many times the price of the book. It is a story which the child can follow with delight, and from which the preacher can add many sermons to his stock. Here is philosophy, psychology and sociology illustrated.—D. R. DUNGAN.

"Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis, has just been published and is beautifully bound in latest style cloth. It has many illustrations specially prepared for this book. The price is 75 cents, postpaid.

When I commenced "In the Days of Jehu," by J. Breckenridge Ellis, I read it through with much interest and pleasure. The author has taken the facts from the Bible, leaving out genealogies and all that is not necessary to the narrative. I consider this a valuable book. I am glad the author has taken up the life of Saul in the same way. We need more sermons, articles and books on the Bible that are narrative and expository. Such books should be freely put into the hands of the young.—A. E. Ewell, in Christian Courier, Dallas, Tex.

The Bloomington (Illinois) Daily Pantagraph, of recent date, has the following notice concerning our late publication, "Across the Gulf:"

"Mrs. N. M. Vandervoort, of Heyworth, has written a little volume which is deservedly attracting much attention from literary people. It is entitled 'Across the Gulf: A Story of the Times of Christ.' It deals with the persecutions of the early Christians in Rome under the reign of Tiberius Cæsar, and is graphically written. The chapters are all strongly drawn, the chapters regarding the reception of Ptokia, the Christian, in paradise, and of Plutos, the unbeliever, in hades, being especially dramatic. Mrs. Vandervoort has talent of a high order."

The Christian Church Department of the American Benevolent Association.

The attention of the members and friends of the Christian Church is earnestly invited to the consideration of the plans and purposes of the Christian Church Department of the American Benevolent Association, organized for the purpose of creating an endowment fund for the benefit of the missions of the church, such as Church Extension, Home and Foreign Missions, Orphans' Homes, etc. The purposes and plans of the Asociation are receiving the endorsement of practical, thinking business men, as being right in principle, a plan to enlarge and prosecute in a practical way the work and mission of the church. The Association desires to secure County and State Superintendents, to whom liberal compensation will be afforded. To that end correspondence is invited from church workers in the Christian Church, men or women, from all parts of the country.

Address at an early date American Benevolent Association, 240 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

Talks to Churches.—I.

I. Do You Know that special arrangements have been recently made with the Christian Publishing Company by which every member of your church may receive the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST one year free, and that every church in the land can afford a Christian Library, composed of the best books of the Christian Church?

II. Do You Know that this library contains ninety-one books that cover every possible phase of our doctrine and work, fifty copies of one of our best songbooks, The Gospel Call, and fifty yearly copies of our very best church paper, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST?

III. Do You Know that for a Library club of fifty members (each member paying a membership fee of $2.75), you can obtain this entire Library? or, that for small clubs, the Library will be proportionately divided?

IV. Do You Know that the founder will gladly visit your congregation, preach to the people until an interest is awakened, then personally assist in placing the Christian Library, provided his traveling expenses are paid?

V. Do You Know that churches placing their own libraries will be allowed a discount of twelve and one-half per cent. on all money collected from membership fee? Finally,

VI. Do You Know that one of the libraries placed in your church building would greatly enlighten your church membership, enhance the efficiency of your S. S. and C. E. and church work and increase the interest and attendance at all your services?

If You Know These Things, write for fuller particulars. Address the founder,

For the World of the Destitute.

The great questions of how to assist the thousands of the unemployed poor might be settled by the government:

1st. Appropriating public land for a plantation.

2d. Supplying suitable managers.

3d. Conveying all able and willing to work of the unprovided poor to the land.

4th. Enabling them to (irrigate it, if necessary, and) produce and make by hand all the necessaries of life.

5th. As soon as they have earned enough to take up land under the homestead laws and farm, or to go into other independent business, helping them, or paying them sufficient, to do so.

6th. Causing the laborers on the government plantation to receive the overabundant products of discharged farmers, in return for overabundant hand-made necessities on the plantation, and to receive the necessary handiwork of the discharged unable to farm, in exchange for articles needed, from the government plantation, and all this as long as necessary to the welfare of the discharged, and only as far as agreeable to the same. If the destitute have a right to life, which includes a right to whatever is indispensable to life, and if the United States Government has what is indispensable to their life, is it not the duty of the government to supply it to them, as much as is necessary to enable them perpetually to supply themselves?

[The above unsigned circular is worthy of consideration. It would be a humane, economic and wise measure for the goverment to act on this suggestion, at least until something better could be established.—EDITOR.]

ECZEMA ON EAR

I suffered from Eczema on the right ear. I could hardly keep my hands off it, the itching was so severe. Small bubbles would open, emitting a watery-like substance, apparently poisonous. What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The minds of unprejudiced and thinking people may still be much perplexed in attempting to judge of the responsibility of the war department for the alleged mismanagement of the Cuban campaign. The evidence received by the investigating commission has all tended to establish the claim of Secretary Alger, that there was little or no suffering among the soldiers, except such as is necessarily incident to war in a tropical climate, and that all reasonable measures were promptly put into operation to relieve the suffering of the sick and wounded. The commission is now making a tour of the Southern states investigating in detail the present condition of the camps, and the results are for the most part satisfactory. On the other hand, there are the reports of certain correspondents, who are known to be intelligent and trustworthy, who are still making positive and specific allegations of mismanagement, the burden of which must be borne either by General Shafter or by Secretary Alger, or by both. Even those who wish to make light of these charges cannot speak of Richard Harding Davis and George Kennan as "irresponsible journalists," and the explanation that their charges are invented for the gratification of their private grudges is not even plausible.

"George Kennan's Story of the War," as published serially in the Outlook, constitutes one of the best current histories of the late war, if not the very best. The last three articles of this series (published in the issues of Oct. 8, 15 and 22) on the "Santiago Campaign" and "The Wrecking of the Army by Sickness," are the most sane, serious and specific arraignment of the war department that we have seen. Neither the universal joy of the nation over a victory won in spite of these deficiencies nor the cheerful generalizations of those whose devotion to the administration renders them blind to the possibility of serious faults in certain parts of it will serve as an answer to these charges and such as these. When we ask whether there was not a great deal of sickness which might have been avoided by reasonable precautions, we must not be told that white men are always sick in the tropics. When we ask whether the provision for medical and surgical attendance was not hopelessly inadequate and whether the soldiers were not left without much of the equipment upon which not only their comfort but their health and efficiency depended, we must not be satisfied with the vague reply that war always involves hardship. When we ask whether in the manner of transporting troops and equipment from Tampa to the Southern Coast of Cuba and of landing them there was not an exhibition of gross mismanagement and lack of foresight, resulting in the loss of much valuable time and many lives and endangering the whole expedition, we must not accept as an answer the patriotic generality that the victory is ours and that the joy of our triumph should not be marred by discordant clamor of carping critics. What we want is a definite answer to definite criticisms. There is little need to take evidence as to the condition of the army before Santiago. General Shafter's official telegrams to the Secretary of War contains evidence enough to last us for a while. Let there be an explanation of some of the conditions which he sets forth. Let us see whether those conditions were inevitable or not, and if not, who is to blame. At present the official investigation does not appear to be approaching this point very directly or very rapidly.

The general election, to be held on Tuesday, Nov. 8, will determine the complexion of both national and state politics for some time to come. All the states except Maine, Vermont and Oregon will elect representatives to Congress. Eighteen states will elect governors. In thirty-four states new legislatures or parts of legislatures will be elected. There are thirty United States Senators whose terms of office expire March 3, 1899, and for not more than five of these senatorial seats is the succession yet determined. Hanna, of Ohio, Money, of Mississippi, and Proctor, of Vermont, have already been chosen as their own successors; McComas will take Gorman's place as senator for Maryland, and the Maine Legislature, which has been already elected will doubtless support Hale. The remaining twenty-five seats will be filled by the legislatures now to be elected. In view of these conditions, it is manifestly impossible for the campaigns in the several states to be conducted exclusively upon state issues. It is a national campaign, for the outcome of it will determine the attitude which the Federal government will assume in regard to the weighty problems of national policy which must be solved within the next two years.

Just at the moment when both foreign and domestic affairs were wearing the most threatening aspect, the peace of France is rendered still more insecure at home and abroad by the sudden resignation of the French Cabinet. Dreyfus and Fashoda are the two sources of the disturbance which is at present agitating France. Public opinion, which three months ago was violently anti-Dreyfus and one month ago had undergone such complete reversal that the multitude clamored for the revision of the case and a new trial, has again experienced a transformation and Paris is once more raving against Dreyfus and the Jews. The Cabinet had decided upon revision, though by no means unanimously, and it is this decision which is the occasion of the crisis. Gen. Chanoine, Minister of War, made an excited speech in the Chamber of Deputies, concluding with his resignation. Later the premier, M. Brisson, attempted to secure a vote of confidence in the administration, and the failure of this attempt was followed by the resignation of the entire Cabinet. It is probable that considerable difficulty will be experienced in the formation of a new Cabinet. Apparently M. Ribot has declined an offer of the premiership and the task of forming a new ministry has been entrusted to M. Dupuy.

The Cuban Assembly held its first session on Monday of last week. It is practically a body of delegates representing the Cuban army, and the presence of Gen. Garcia as a delegate makes it probable that he will be the ruling spirit in the assembly. The temper of the assembly, as it now appears, is to maintain the Cuban army at its full strength until all outside forces, American as well as Spanish, are withdrawn and Cuba is left to herself to inaugurate her career as an independent republic. The Cuban anti-annexationists favor this plan because it will insure Cuba against being betrayed by her friends into forcible annexation. Incidentally, too, the military leaders observe with much sagacity that, when the first bunch of offices in the new republic are being distributed, they will stand a better chance of getting their share if they are on hand with their troops still under their command.

The relations of France and England, which were already sufficiently involved, may become still more complicated as a result of the present chaotic condition of the French Government. The old ministry continues in office until a new one is formed, but it is doubtful whether England will care to treat with a Cabinet whose death warrant is already signed and whose successor may repudiate its official acts. It is reported, however, that before his resignation M. Delcasse, French Minister of Foregin Affairs, had agreed to submit to the British demand for the withdrawal of Major Marchand from Fashoda and had formulated a set of excuses which entirely satisfied French honor. It was to be understood that the abandonment of Fashoda was not in obedience to the behest of Great Britain, but because the climate in that locality was not salubrious and because its position rendered it difficult to reach with supplies. Both of these statements are true, and their truth would be much enhanced in the event of war between France and Great Britain. This arrangement allowing the surrender of Fashoda under these pretexts and leaving the question of a French station on the banks of the Upper Nile open for future settlement is said to be entirely satisfactory to the French people, who do not want war, but only want it to appear that their actions are not controlled by the fear of war. There is an unconfirmed report that Great Britain is about to establish a formal protectorate over Egypt,in place of the present irregular and indefinite system of control. This would involve a recognition by the powers of her right to be there, which France has never recognized, and if carried through successfully, would render impossible a repetition of the Fashoda episode or anything like it.

The publication of Admiral Sampson's report to the Navy Department gives to the public the inside history of the naval operations of the late war from the beginning of May until the destruction of Cervera's fleet at Santiago, July 3. One fact which is brought out by the report is that Commodore Schley made a serious error in judgment in locating the Spanish fleet and that he was so sure of his opinion that he came dangerously near to disobeying orders to follow it out. When Cervera's fleet had mysteriously disappeared, Sampson correctly located it at Santiago, while Schley thought it must be at Cienfuegos and spent several days in blockading that port, thus affording Cervera ample time to recoal his ships and escape. Why he did not seize the opportunity nobody knows, but that he failed to do so was not due to Commodore Schley. When the Commodore had exhausted to the utmost (if not more) the discretion which his orders allowed him, he proceeded to Santiago in accordance with imperative orders from Admiral Sampson, and there, by his brilliant service at the time of the sortie of the Spanish fleet, vindicated the judgment of those who had kept him in command of his squadron in spite of his one serious blunder.

By a recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, the Joint Traffic Association, composed of thirty-one of the leading railroads in the country, is declared illegal on the ground of violating the anti-trust law. The avowed purpose of the association was "to establish and maintain reasonable and just rates, fares and regulations on state and interstate traffic;" in other words, to prevent cut rates, railroad wars and ruinous competition. The Trans-Missouri Association, founded for similar purposes, but on a smaller scale, was condemned by the United States Supreme Court last year as a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law and the interstate commerce law. The court held that this case was substantially equivalent to that of the Trans-Missouri Association, that the Joint Traffic Association was a trust, and that it operated to the prevention of competition and therefore in restraint of trade or commerce. The case has attracted much attention in the legal world and in railroad circles.

Another legal decision of interest is that of the Illinois Supreme Court in regard to the Pullman Palace Car Co. As is well known, this company owns property and performs functions which do not appertain directly to the manufacture of cars. The town of Pullman, where the company's works are located, is owned by the company, including the homes of 12,000 people, the streets and alleys of the town, the waterworks, gas plant, sewerage system, schools, churches, hotel, theater, market, etc. The court held that, in holding this property, and further in exercising in the town of Pullman functions which belong to the municipality, the company is acting in excess of the powers granted to it in its charter and, therefore, in violation of the law and contrary to good public policy.

A DIVINE MISSION—WHAT?

It is commonly believed among us and is often affirmed that the religious movement which we are urging has a divine mission to accomplish; that it is one of those providential agencies which God ever and anon in the history of the church inaugurates for the accomplishment of his purposes on earth. To destroy this belief would be to destroy at the same time our confidence in the value, necessity and ultimate success of our plea. There is a very general acceptance of the proposition laid down by Gamaliel, that whatsoever is of God will prevail in spite of all opposition, and whatsoever is not of God will come to naught sooner or later.

This belief in the divinity of our plea, and in the fact that God was in its origin as He has been in the history of the movement, may not be in harmony with certain very generally accepted views of God's relation to man and to human history, but we believe it to be in entire harmony with the biblical doctrine of the divine immanence, which is now receiving confirmation from the best scientific and philosophic thought of our day. Any view of God's relation to his world that excludes the possibility of divine intervention at any time to advance the interests of the kingdom of God is, in its last analysis, a species of rationalism, that is as unbiblical as it is unphilosophical.

We believe in the presence of God in nature, in history, and especially in the ongoing of the kingdom of God. Because we believe this, we believe in the divine origin of our religious movement. We believe that the Spirit of God impelled the leaders in this movement to make their protest against existing abuses in the religious world, and to raise their voices for a return to a simpler and purer religious faith and practice, and to the unity of the apostolic church. We believe, further, that as God was in the beginning of this movement, so has He been in its continuous progress, guiding the course of its development so as to accomplish the purpose which He had in view in its inauguration. Believing this, we cannot believe otherwise than that there is a great destiny before us if we are faithful to the divine leading.

There is, in this view of our origin and mission, nothing to inflate our vanity or self-conceit, or to inflame us with spiritual pride. On the contrary, there is much in it to teach us the lesson of humility, and to impress us with a sense of our personal unworthiness. If God has seen proper in His wisdom to make us custodians and defenders of certain truths and principles which need emphasis in our day, what manner of people ought we to be, that these truths and principles be not hindered by our blindness, our narrowness, our lack of consecration to the high purposes for which God would use us? Whatever excellency there may be in our position is not of ourselves, but of God. Whatever failures may have attended the progress of our work are due to our own weaknesses and unfaithfulness. Had we been more loyal to God's great purpose, had we given ourselves to it with greater self-abandon and truer consecration, the truths we hold, the principles we advocate, would have gained a far wider acceptance than they have thus far gained. A sense of profound humiliation should come over us whenever we compare the supreme value and the irresistible power of the plea we are making with what we have achieved. Great as the progress has been we cannot doubt but that it would have been many fold greater had we been worthy instruments in so mighty a movement in behalf of a return to the Christianity of Christ and to the unity of his church.

Believing that we cannot keep too steadfastly in view this special work to which God has called us, and feeling that wrong views as to the nature of this work have done and are doing much to retard its progress, we purpose, in a series of editorials, to point out what seem to us to be God's purposes in this religious movement. The task we feel to be as difficult and delicate as it is important, and we do not enter upon it without a profound sense of our unworthiness to deal with it adequately. Relying, not on our own wisdom, but seeking that which cometh down from above, we shall seek to guide our readers once more, as we have often done in the past, in a series of studies concerning these vital matters which we hope may help them to a larger appreciation of, and a more active participation in, the work to which God in his providence has called us.

THE TRUE CHURCH UNITED.

A notable conference has been held in England between "Church" and "Dissent." Representative Churchmen and Nonconformists assembled in Bradford to discuss in fraternal spirit and unconventional form the Banquo question of trinity. This, most significantly, is a step in advance. Ten years ago the most liberal of Churchmen would have declined to meet on terms of equality or in a spirit of mutual fraternity any body of Nonconformists for the discussion of any question whatsoever. The middle wall of partition of bigotry and prejudice has commenced to crumble.

The chairman and chief promoter of this meeting, Dean Fremantle, of Ripon, a man of catholic sympathies, gave expression to several noteworthy sentiments in his opening address. "Beyond any one organization," he said, "was the great church of God, which consisted of all who owned Jesus Christ as the Lord of their lives, and who were willing to follow him." Recognizing the Christian faith and character of his dissenting brethren, he declared that the congress was there assembled "to give a message from the Christian church as a whole to the nation, speaking with one voice and one heart from various points of the ecclesiastical horizon." One of the Dean's most significant utterances sounded the keynote of one of the most vital discussions of Christian union in modern times. "There was much more union among Christians," he asserted, "than there was division; they had one great object, namely, to build up the characters of men after the image of Jesus Christ, and one great message—the love of God in him. The great need of the times was to make the faith in Christ and his cross influential in every sphere—the family, trade, the nation and the empire. The command of primitive Christianity was still obligatory: 'Go into all the world and preach the gospel.'"

Dr. Glover, of Bristol, the distinguished Baptist minister, struck a decisive blow when he said in answer to the question, "What is the sin of schism?"—"I hold that that sin is committed whenever a man stands aloof from any soul or souls in which God dwells." This sentence should flash perpetually before the eyes of every sectarian in Christendom, and should be written over the face of the church clock in all our sanctuaries. This is getting away from appearance down to the essence of things. Every church that stands aloof from a soul in which God dwells, that refuses fellowship or membership to such soul, is a schismatic church—it lacks the breadth and depth of the New Testament church.

But the most comprehensive, scriptural and powerful basis of unity put before the conference was that of the illustrious Dean Farrar. The true church, he declared, would confine itself to what Christ taught. That was simple and brief indeed: "God is your Father—love him; Christ is your Savior—believe in him and walk in his steps; the Holy Spirit is sent into your hearts — do not prefer the lusts of the flesh." In this message was the true unity, though there were tendencies to ignore it (in the Dean's own church), as when large numbers of Christians said that the promise of salvation almost depended upon belonging to our particular community. The true church meant the blessed company of all who loved the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and truth. The church had often failed in its duty; but if it was faithful to the teaching of Christ, and threw its whole energy into the amelioration of the world, then it would have nothing to fear.

Dr. B. F. Norton said that patriotism was deeper than all the differences between political parties; and similarly Christianity was deeper than all the differences between Christians. We believe, after all, that nothing could be essential to the being of the church which was not essential to the church of the first apostles.

Let the reader note carefully the vital message that comes through the utterances of these eminent men on the unity problem, and it amounts to this: The points of agreement among Christians are fundamental; their differences are superficial and comparatively unimportant. One speaker expressed the belief that union could come only from a profounder theology. He contrasted the Greek type of theology, or the Alexandrian, with the Latin type, or the Augustinian. The former, with its fundamental thought of the divine immanence, tended to union, while the latter, insisting rather upon the divine transcendence, as surely tended everywhere to dualism and division. Brethren, we need to study the simpler and profounder theology of divine immanence that makes everywhere for human solidarity. A recent eminent writer among us who touched upon this universally accepted idea of the divine immanence in the universe, called out the alarum of the frightened watchman on the walls of Zion, who understood that said writer was advocating the Pantheism of Lyman Abbott! Well, Lyman Abbott is doubtless a naughty boy, and Pantheism is doubtless a bad thing, but the Pantheism of middle-age theology is worse than either! A little deeper thinking and a little clearer insight would save us a great deal of trouble! The thing most needed is not the creation or even the promotion of Christian union, but the recognition of an already existing unity in vital things. There is an inward spiritual quality of the union with God through Jesus Christ, that the saints of all times and climes possess in common, that makes them one despite ecclesiastical vanities and theological dogmas. Read again Dean Farrar's platform for unity in the teaching of Jesus. J. J. H.

HIGHEST AUTHORITY.

In a recent paragraph in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we quoted from the Baptist News a paragraph serving notice on some brother who had uttered an uncertain note on the question of future punishment, and inquired of our Baptist contemporary, "What is the Baptist doctrine concerning eschatology, and where can we find it formulated?" The Journal and Messenger has answered our question, and the Baptist News quotes and approves the answer. Both these Baptist papers refer us to the "New Hampshire Articles of Faith," Articles 3, 18 and 19. We need not quote what these articles say, as it is the generally accepted view among orthodox people, but by no means the universally accepted view, even among Baptists. The point is that these representatives of the Baptist press refer us to the "New Hampshire Articles of Faith" and say, "Now it seems to us that our contemporary ought to find in those statements what it desires to know of the belief of Baptists relative to the final doom of the ungodly."

In a murder trial Gen. Butler and Senator Hoar were on opposite sides. The theory of the defense was that the act was committed in self-defense. Said Gen. Butler, attorney for the defense, "We have it on the highest authority that 'all that a man hath will he give for his life.'" Senator Hoar replied: "It has long been a mooted point as to what is 'the highest authority' with Gen. Butler, but he has now settled that question. He has quoted the words of Satan as the 'highest authority!'" It has been a mooted question as to whether Baptists had an authoritative creed to which they would refer inquirers and by which they would test men's doctrinal soundness. So far as the testimony of these papers go, it is settled. "The New Hampshire Articles of Faith" is the "highest authority" on Baptist doctrine.

But there are other Baptists. It has been only a few weeks since we quoted from Dr. McArthur, who, in an address before the Baptist Ministers' Conference, at New York City, recently, said:

> Baptists have no creed, in the technical sense, to come between them and the truth. They are not fettered to the cemeteries of dead theologians. Every generation must do its own thinking. We are better able to make creeds than those who made the so-called ecumenical creeds of the church. Creeds made by men in one generation can be remade or entirely unmade by men in another generation. It is far more difficult often to interpret creeds than it is to explain the Scriptures on which the creeds are supposed to be based.

This, and more of the same kind, from Dr. McArthur. If we should ask him the question which we asked the Baptist News, he would doubtless answer in substance, "There is no authoritative statement of the doctrine of the Last Things which bind the minds and consciences of Baptists. While most of them hold to what may be called the orthodox view concerning future punishment, others hold a different view without sacrificing their position as Baptists." This, at least, would be in harmony with what we have quoted from him. Moreover, it would be in harmony with the facts in the case, so far as the great body of Baptists are concerned.

Having answered our question, the Journal and Messenger turns the question on us and asks, "Will the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST tell us as positively what Disciples believe on the same point?" No, we cannot refer to any Articles of Faith which have been adopted as an expression of our views on the subject. We can refer them to the columns of our religious papers and to sermons, magazine articles and books in which individual Disciples have expressed themselves on this subject with about as much clearness and unanimity as can be found among the writings of the Baptists. Moreover, we can refer them to the teaching of Christ and his apostles on the subject, which we accept and interpret for ourselves without feeling under the slightest obligation to accept the interpretation which our fathers put upon it. In other words, there is liberty of thought upon these profound questions, which relate to the future destiny of untold millions of our race. It is to be expected that with growth in the knowledge of Christ the church of the future will be able to find a more satisfactory solution of these profound problems than has yet been offered to the world. We hope that such may be the case, and we trust our esteemed Baptist contemporaries sympathize with us in this hope.

Hour of Prayer.

THE LOVE OF GOD.

(Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, Nov. 9.)

He that loveth not, knoweth not God; for God is Love.—1 John 4:8.

John is called the Apostle of Love. More than any other of the immediate disciples of Christ he seems to have penetrated into the essence of the divine nature and to the core of religion. If he received more of Christ's Spirit than the other disciples it was not through any partiality on the part of Christ, but it was because he had a more susceptible nature for receiving the divine life and love. God can only give to us up to the measure of our capacity for receiving.

In the statement of John, quoted above, there is enunciated a profound principle: to know God we must come into sympathetic relation with Him. This may be laid down as a general proposition. Some one has said that we can only understand Shakespeare according to the measure of Shakespeare we have in us; that is, it is only according to the measure of our ability to understand poetry that we can estimate his ability as a poet. This is more profoundly true in reference to our knowledge of God. If He is Love, as John declares, then no one that does not love can understand His nature or know Him. That is John's proposition. It is a far-reaching one.

If John was the profoundest theologian among the apostles it was because he loved the most. No man, according to John's declaration, no matter what his theological training may be, understands God if he does not love. We are to know God through the heart rather than through the intellect. Many of the great creeds of Christendom have been formulated by the intellect alone, while the heart has not been allowed to exert its molding influence; hence many things have been attributed to God and affirmed of God that the heart which loves has never approved. The much talked-of revision of a certain creed had for its object the elimination of certain features that are obnoxious to those who understand God better through their hearts than their fathers did through their intellects.

"God is Love." Magnificent truth! Glorious revelation! Cornerstone of all true theology! Basis of all true optimism! Ground of human hope! Motive of Christian service! These three words are worth more than all the tomes of theology that have ever been formulated by human wisdom. It throws more light on the dark problems of life than all the world's science and philosophy. It paints a rainbow of hope on the sky of every human life, and gives songs in the night to the children of sorrow and affliction.

If God is Love, if the hand that guides the courses of the planets and holds in balance the infinitude of shining worlds is the hand of the Father, prompted by love, why should we not dismiss our fears and anxieties and commit ourselves lovingly, trustingly, to His care? Love does not forget its own. Love does not permit its own to suffer, except for their own good. Love is stronger than death and mightier than the grave.

If God is Love, of course He "sent His only-begotten Son into the world that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." It is just like love to do that. It is always stooping down to lift up the lowly and the fallen. It is always seeking to save. It is always leaving the ninety and nine safely in the fold to go out upon the dark mountains in search of the lost one. The whole gospel is easily understood on the basis that "God is Love." Gethsemane, with its unutterable anguish, and Calvary, with its suffering and shame, are comprehensible in the light of the truth that "God is Love." Love is always suffering, and pleading, and sacrificing for the welfare of others.

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we also ought to love one another." Hereby let us test our hearts before God. Do we respond to God's love? Do we really love Him as He is manifested to us in Christ? Are we manifesting that love by deeds of self-sacrifice for His sake? Do we love one another? Are we willing to forbear one another and to forgive one another? Do we bear each others' burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ? Are we seeking to do unto others as we would have them do unto us? If not, then, according to this apostle, we know not God, for "God is Love." What a candle this text is by which to examine our own hearts!

PRAYER.

O, Thou whose name is Love, we thank Thee that Thou hast manifested Thy love for us in the gift of Thy Son. We rejoice that Thou hast revealed Thyself to us as the God of Love. Forgive us, we beseech Thee, O Father, for our lack of love for Thee and for all Thy children. Help us to love Thee more that we may serve Thee and one another more acceptably. Shed abroad in our hearts Thy love by the Holy Spirit, and transform us through the power of love into willing and obedient servants here, that we may share in Thy glory hereafter. And this we ask in the Name of Him who was Love incarnate, even Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen!

CONVENTION AFTERTHOUGHTS.

That Lookout Mountain prayer-meeting never materialized. The program committee left no room for it and made no arrangement for any special time for the delegates to go there. The result was that they went each day without standing on the order of their going. Most of the delegates took in this view at one time or another during the various conventions. We had intended arranging for an independent meeting in the tavern on the brow of the mountain, but sickness prevented, and so between not having time in the early part of the convention and being knocked out by the Chattanooga artesian water and the Read House menu, we were denied the pleasure of the view from this mountain of vision. The place would have lent inspiration to such a meeting, and it would have been well worth while to have arranged for it, but we will perhaps attend to that the next time we go to Chattanooga.

We did take a half day off sight-seeing, however, and it will form a very pleasant picture in our memory of the Chattanooga Convention. One bright forenoon eighteen of us took a wagonette, with a colored historian as driver, and took in Chickamauga Park, about ten miles distant. It was a delightful day, a most delightful company, the roads were Uncle Sam's best make and the scenes and associations most interesting and historic. Here on this historic battlefield "Greek met Greek" in one of the great battles of the war. The monuments that stand thick over this ground tell where heroes fought and died. Yonder on Snodgrass Hill stood the brave Thomas, "the rock of Chickamauga," fighting when the rest of the army had fallen back, and saving the day from disaster. To him on this hill came the lamented Garfield, in that daring ride in which he dashed through Confederate lines to carry a message from Rosecrans to Thomas. On this hill stands an observatory, from the summit of which the whole battlefield lies beneath. We returned by way of Mission Ridge, from whose summit we have a fine view of Lookout Mountain, lifting its bold head above the valley, and the Tennessee Valley and the city of Chattanooga. On this ridge was fought later another one of the great decisive battles of the war. Yonder on Orchard Knob stood Grant with glass in hand, directing the movements of the army, and watching the Union forces storm the heights of Mission Ridge, driving back their brave foes. This spot, marked by Federal and Confederate monuments, will ever remain historic ground, and men of distant generations will come to visit the place made sacred by the sacrifice of so many heroic lives on the altar of patriotism.

Quite a number of our leading evangelists attended the Chattanooga Convention—men who have made a national reputation by their success in winning souls to Christ and in planting our banner in new fields. These, with a number of our state evangelists and evangelistic pastors, held some meetings to consider questions of interest connected with their work. One of them expressed to us the feeling that our religious papers were not as friendly as formerly to evangelistic work. We venture the suggestion that this is a mistaken impression. To make disciples of all nations, including our own, is the great work of the church, and the men who are most successful in this work will ever hold a high place in the esteem of the brotherhood. It is only truth, however, to say that some excesses or extremes in connection with these evangelistic meetings have produced a sort of reaction against what is called "big meetings." An excessive zeal for numbers, it is believed, in many cases has led to the baptism of many who have not been convicted of sin or made to realize their need of salvation. This in one danger. Another is the manifestation of a belligerent spirit and attitude toward other religious bodies, which arrays the religious forces of the community against each other and prevents their mutual co-operation in good works. These two dangers guarded against, and the evangelists will have no reason to complain of the lack of appreciation on the part of their brethren. Let men be converted to Christ and not to any theory or any party. Let truth be preached in love, with a brotherly appreciation of all that is true and good in our religious neighbors, and the more meetings we have of this kind the better.

We were glad to see so many of our colleges represented. No class of men among us are exerting a profounder influence upon our cause than the teachers in our colleges, who come in direct contact with the young men and women who are to be leaders in a few years. Kentucky University was represented by President Cave and Professors Graham and Loos. Bethany was represented by its financial agent, J. L. Darsie, and some of its trustees, who were zealously pleading its cause. Hiram College was represented by its president, E. V. Zollars, who delivered the address on education—a strong presentation of the value of education and its relation to Christian work. Butler was ably represented by Jabez Hall, president of the Bible Department, and Prof. B. A. Jenkins, of the Chair of New Testament Theology, both of whom won additional renown by their addresses. Nor can we omit Jno. E. Pounds, financial agent of Butler, whose sermon at the Walnut St. Christian Church on Sunday morning called out the highest praise. Eureka College was well represented by its president, J. H. Hardin, who presided over the meeting of the Home Board, and who preached a strong sermon on Sunday night at the Walnut St. Christian Church. Drake University was not represented by any of its teachers, but Gen. Drake, the founder, was present, and H. O. Breeden and perhaps others of its board of trustees. Add-Ran University, Waco, Tex., was represented by Prof. J. B. Sweeney, who has had much to do with the later prosperity of the institution. The Bible work in connection with the state universities was represented by such men as C. A. Young who, by the way, made a strong address on the value of such work before the C. W. B. M. Convention, Bro. Forrest, of Ann Arbor, and Hiram Van Kirk, now associated with the Divinity House of the Disciples in the University of Chicago. The convention could ill have spared the presence of these men from its proceedings.

Two steps were taken at the convention which look in the direction of greater unity and closer co-operation. One of these was the agreement of the secretaries of the various states on a uniform day for State Missions, the day selected being the first Lord's day in November. This action was ratified by the convention, and we hope will be generally ratified by the churches. Our general work cannot succeed if the state work be neglected, and the setting apart of one day for the collection in the various states will be certain to call more attention to the state work and secure for it the attention which its importance demands. The other step to which we refer was the appointment of a committee to arrange a uniform series of mid-week prayer-meeting topics for use in our various papers and publishing houses, with a view to their securing their adoption by the churches. We believe this is a step in the right direction. Such a uniform series, we believe, will tend to the improvement of the mid-week prayer-meeting, doing for that meeting what the uniform series of Sunday-school lessons has done for the Sunday-school. This committee is to take action at once, and have the new series of topics ready and published before the beginning of the new year. The topics issued by the Christian Publishing Company and used in this paper have been widely adopted, and calls are coming in for the next year's series. We shall be glad to co-operate in this union movement.

The adoption of Cincinnati as the place for the Jubilee Convention was done, not only with unanimity, but with enthusiasm. There was but one mind on that subject. We rise, however, to remark that the time to begin for that Jubilee Convention is now. If it is to realize what it ought to realize for the cause it represents, plans should be laid at once for the entire year's work. Let there be distribution of labor and responsibility, giving to each man his work and to each state its special task, if we would come up to the measure of our hopes. It should be a remarkable year in our history that will set the pace for the coming years. It has not yet entered into the heart of any of us what we could accomplish by united and universal effort. This year ought to be a revelation to us of the latent possibilities of our brotherhood. Let our leaders lead, and the rest of us will follow.

Editor's Easy Chair.

After a little flurry of winter, autumn has come with its blue sky, its hazy atmosphere, its hoary frosts, its bright colors, its falling leaves. What a strange and subtle relation is that which exists between sound and sentiment, or melody and mental images! Sitting in the parlor a few evenings since, listening to the tones of the sweet melody, "Woodland Echoes," as they rippled from the keys of the piano, we had but to close our eyes and the parlor became a vast woodland, the foliage of the trees wearing its autumnal tints and the autumn wind sighing through the branches of the trees. We seemed to hear the music of running brooklets and the sound of far-off waterfalls. We could hear the noise of the falling nuts, the chatter of squirrels laying in their winter store and the "caw" of the crow flying by on lazy wing in search of some of its ebony companions. And all this troop of mental images and sounds were born of a few notes of music! Who but a master of melody can thus join sound and sentiment in an everlasting wedlock?

The fact mentioned in the foregoing paragraph should receive far more consideration than it does in the matter of Christian worship. Music has a most important part to play in calling forth the purest and best sentiments of the heart, and in opening the mind to all holy and blessed influences. Some good people have imagined that there is no sort of connection between worship and what they call "mere sound;" but the truth is, there is no such thing as "mere sound." Sound is vocalized sentiment. All the birds and beasts of the field understand this, even if some good religious people do not. This being true, it should have a decided influence in the selection of tunes and melodies to be used in the public worship. What does it matter to put religious words to the air, "The Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane?" It is a musical misfit. The song will ever carry with it its old-time associations and sentiments. The religion is not all in the words. Even "Rock of Ages" sung to the tune of one of our modern ditties would lose all its religious value. Much remains yet to be done in the field of religious music to furnish a hymnology that will cultivate and be a fit expression of spiritual devotion and inspiration.

There is an astonishing amount of superstition, among even enlightened people, which influences their conduct in many ways. A great many people will not undertake a journey or inaugurate a work of any kind on Friday, believing it to be an "unlucky day." The number 13 is regarded by a great many intelligent people as an "unlucky number," and many refuse to sit down at a table if their presence makes the unlucky number. On a recent trip to Chicago and return, the Easy Chair editor, securing his berth late in the day, went and returned on successive nights, occupying lower 13. A friend coming on another road the same night, and securing his berth late, had lower 13. These facts seem to indicate that many people avoid that number, so that it is the last one chosen. Of course, this is the baldest kind of superstition, and no one could begin to give a reason for this prejudice against the number 13. But there it is as a force in modern life, influencing the actions and choices of men. Like all other kinds of superstition it should be discouraged, and, if possible, banished. It has no legitimate place, in civilized and especially in Christian society. The man who finds himself the victim of these superstitions should face them with the two-edged sword of faith and reason, and show them no quarters, until they are exterminated.

There is probably no better test of character than the manner in which one behaves under criticism. It cuts some people to the quick to have their statements called in question, and when their motives are impugned by some reckless scribe they are miserable and disconsolate. Is there not a good deal of intellectual or spiritual pride in this restiveness under adverse criticism? Why should it be thought to be so serious a matter that our theories are questioned, and our conclusions denied? Are we so infallible as that? There is always a bare possibility that our critics may be nearer right than ourselves. If, however, we feel a perfect confidence in the correctness of our position which has been assailed, why should we fret? If we are right, time will develop it. If a man does not love truth more than he fears criticism he is not likely to benefit the world much by his thinking. We long ago determined not to love a brother less because he differed from us or criticised our teaching, and not to be deterred from presenting any truth which we believed should be presented, through fear of criticism.

A Printing Press For Jamaica.

One of the conspicuous figures at the Chattanooga Convention was the man who has stood at the head of our missionary operations in the Island of Jamaica for several years, C. E. Randall. He is a heavy-built, square-shouldered specimen of the Anglo-Saxon race, his hair and full whiskers grizzled with gray, and his eyes bright with an intelligent and kindly glow. He has shown himself to be a man of unwavering fidelity and of practical wisdom in the management of the missions in Jamaica. He made an encouraging report of the progress of the work in the island, and of its outlook for the future. He also made a strong appeal for a cheap printing press which he could use to good purpose on the island in the dissemination of necessary information among the churches there. Some of his members could be easily trained to set the type, manage the press and do the necessary printing. He desires very much to make arrangement for this press during his visit in this country and to have it shipped before he returns. We have promised to assist Bro. R. in securing this press, which we are sure will be a most useful auxiliary to the work in Jamaica. On inquiry here we find that such a press can be secured for a very moderate sum, say from $200 to $300, and if necessary a second-hand press that will probably answer the purpose can be secured for even a less amount. We will be glad to receive donations from a number of our readers to assist Bro. Randall in the purchase of this press. Let those who feel disposed to assist in this enterprise report to the undersigned at this office at once, and we will agree to receive the funds, make report of same and assist Bro. Randall in the selection of a suitable press. Let us act promptly, and give Bro. Randall this assurance of our appreciation of his faithful services as the representative of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in the Island of Jamaica.

Our Budget.

—Discouragement is an element of weakness.

—Fellowship in suffering is an element of strength.

—Self-denial is an element of the divine nature.

—Nobody cares to take passage on an overloaded ship.

—There are other calls as divine as the call to preach.

—Christians cannot be whipped (scolded) into working harness.

—If men were more concerned about a good conscience and less about wealth, the world's condition would not long remain as it now is.

—"What to Eat," says that Dewey is about the only prominent American commander in the late war that "hasn't slopped over;" that is, talked too much for his own good.

—If some men in the religious world had as much "Holy Ghost" in their lives as they have in their religious language they would be ready for translation soon.

—If Christ were here on the Sabbath day would he attend church, or go to the park?—Living Words.

As to some of our city churches, if Christ's life on earth may be taken as a sign, he might prefer the park.

—In the recent death of Dr. C. E. Felton, at De Funick Springs, Fla., the Methodist Episcopal Church has lost an able, consecrated, godly man. We had the pleasure of knowing Dr. Felton in this city 14 years ago and have not forgotten his kind looks and words at the meetings of the Evangelical Alliance. Dr. Felton was a man loved by all who knew him and a benediction to any city or community.

—Bishop Chapelle, the newly appointed papal delegate to Cuba and Porto Rico, says that "as a thoroughly loyal American I may be able to help our government in the work of reconstruction." We wonder if our government has appealed to Mr. Chapelle or the Pope for assistance in this reconstruction business? We had naturally supposed that he was going to Cuba to help the Roman Catholic churches instead of "our government."

—Another artist has been heard from anent the late picture of Bishop Campbell. R. J. Tydings, Washington, D. C., writes that he was so struck with the picture that he sent to Bro. Goodrich for the original daguerreotype and has about completed a life-size oil painting which, he adds, " 'If I do say it myself, as oughtn't' (to quote Josiah Allen's wife) is, I think, something nice." We are glad to have helped in the multiplication of the portrait of this great reformer of the 19th century.

—"Can I Love my Enemies?" by N. J. Aylsworth, of Auburn, New York, is resumed this week. This is a vital question, and those who know Bro. Aylsworth's ability as a writer know how deeply interesting and profitable he can be on the spiritual side of a hard question.

—Our Subscription Department is in receipt of a letter from Thos. V. Elmore, who forgets to give his postoffice address. Will he kindly supply this office with the missing information?

—Just as we close this paper news comes of a notable triumph of the gospel at Clarksville, Tenn., where Evangelist Romig is holding a meeting. The church, which has been divided for some time, has been happily united, all differences healed, and there is great joy among the saints in that place. Fuller particulars later.

—H. W. Everest, Dean of the Bible College of Drake University is again in the hands of his physicians for a season and A. M. Haggard, A. M., of Oskaloosa, has been called to assist Dean Everest for the remainder of this term of college work. Bro. Haggard will fill all of his previous engagements, reaching into the new year, except his meetings. These he will turn over to others. Teaching is not new work for Bro. Haggard. Since his 25th year he has taught nearly eight years in Iowa and Minnesota. He is our Iowa correspondent of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—Discouragement is everywhere recognized in God's Word as a source of weakness and of loss in the advancement of his kingdom. The apostles, following their Master, seek to infuse hope and confidence into the disciples of that early day, and to minimize the weight and force of whatever tends to take life and spirit out of God's people.—Sunday-school Times.

—The Christian Worker, publisbed weekly at Kinston, N. C., has doubled its size. It now has eight pages and they are well filled with news items and religious literature. We much prefer to hear of the increase than decrease of one of our well-edited church papers.

—We wish all parents, Bible-school teachers and other readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to call the attention of the children to the "Children's Column" in this paper. The writer of that column this week, J. Breckenridge Ellis, has outlined a plan whereby the children may be both amused and instructed if they will only join his band and follow his instructions, which we are sure they will gladly do when they read and see what he proposes for them. It is for this reason that we ask the older readers to call the attention of the children to this article and have them read it.

—Christian Work, a monthly paper published formerly by J. S. Shibley, Paris, Ark., is now edited and published at Siloam Springs, Ark., by L. C. Wilson, formerly of Iowa. The salutation pledges the paper to both the voice and the silence of the Bible. The paper has been and doubtless will continue to be the organ of the Arkansas State Mission Board.

—Bishop Chapelle, the newly appointed papal delegate to Cuba and Porto Rico, is reported to have said, "The Holy Father will welcome in the new territories the happy order of things under which the church has prospered in the United States. He believes in religious liberty before all things." We wonder why the present Pope and his predecessors never thought of introducing this happy order of things in Cuba and Porto Rico some years or centuries ago. Again, the Bishop says: "The United Staies will readily understand that their political and economical interests, as well as the honor of the country amongst nations, require that this work of reorganization shall be carried out with justice and equity to all." It will be amusing to watch and see just what the Bishop will ask of President McKinley under this plea of "justice and equity." A bid for the "temporary" support of the priests from the public treasury has already been made. But how much time may be pressed for under cover of this word "temporary" remains to be seen.

—We complain of pastorless churches and churchless pastors and attribute the condition, sometimes, to a lack of an adjusting machine. But here come churches blessed each with an episcopacy or other regulating board making the same complaint. May it not be that the cheapest man at the cheapest place and the poorest preacher at the poorest church, a plan that obtains generally in the religious world, is partly at fault. An oversight that would distribute preaching talent on a broader Christian basis might obviate some of the things complained of, especially as to cities. If a strong church would go to pieces under a poor preacher, how can a weak church be expected bear up under him.

—According to figures given by the Voice, the Raines law is not so much of a reform measure after all. It has shut up some of the lesser liquor stalls, but without decreasing the amount of liquor consumed in the state. And not only this, but the figures given by the Voice show an increase in arrests for drunkenness and other crimes directly attributable to this evil. If men mean what they say when they talk of controlling and curtailing the liquor traffic, why do they not enact a law that secures the result desired? It is the sheerest political nonsense to talk about reducing the "doggeries" and yet leave the way open to enlarge the traffic and its crimes. Some politicians talk about the liquor traffic as though it was the most sacred thing outside of heaven.

—Temperance is the Reform Bureau's topic for November. The Bureau's topic a month course is being widely adopted by the Y. M. C. A., W. C. T. U. and various clubs.

—In this paper you will find an article on the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses introductory to the second year's reading. An article will follow each week, as last year, from the authors of the handbooks—brethren Willett, Lhamon and Power—in their turn.

—DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—Am just up from my first delightful dip in waves rolled hitherward from the Chattanooga Convention by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and I am on my feet to say that the Eudeavor Society of the First Church of this town will pay $1.00 or more to the support of Bro. J. Z. Tyler as National Superintendent of C. E. It's the thing!

W. S. PRIEST.

Atchison, Kas.

—The Fourteenth Annual Report of the Bureau of Animal Industry gives the number and value of horses, mules, milch cows, oxen and other cattle, sheep and swine in the United States for the years 1867 to 1896, inclusive, and by states for the years 1870 to 1896, inclusive. These statistics, with those on the imports and exports of animals and animal products for the years 1892 to 1896, inclusive, make the volume valuable to all who desire to have such facts in form for ready reference. This volume is published by order of Congress for distribution by Senators and Representatives, to whom all requests should be made. It will be available for distribution about December 1, 1898.

—A distinguished member of a Baptist church, writing from New England, says: "I see evidence of religious progress here in the East, not so much a direct advance as a recognition on the part of Baptists and others that their traditional positions are unscriptural." By the "traditional positions" our correspondent, no doubt, means those little denominational peculiarities which have served to perpetuate divisions and impede religious progress, in the past, and which in certain minds have assumed more importance than the fundamentals of Christian faith. It is, indeed, a sign of progress that these are coming to be recognized as unscriptural traditions.

—The Journal and Messenger believes in the salvability of "the chief of sinners." It does not believe that any human soul ever went so far in sin that the grace of God could not reach and save it.

Of course not, since the grace of God reaches even the totally depraved. But if all men start life at total depravity, how can a sinner get farther away from God in sin?

—The article in this paper entitled, "A Love Feast of Evangelists," by Geo. F. Hall, is an interesting and important document because of its reference to a supposed breach or growing chasm between pastors and evangelists. Such a chasm or even coldness cannot exist except to the detriment of the church and its cause; but we have not understood that such a chasm or even the suspicion of one existed. The war, if such has been waged, has been against some of the methods used by evangelists to draw crowds and to get additions and not against evangelists as a class of workers in the Lord's vineyard. Objections have likewise been made against pastors for resorting to sensational methods in their work. Probably neither evangelists nor pastors, as a class, are above criticism in this respect and we make this note to keep the issue on its merits. There is constant need in these days for the admonition to "preach the word," and to teach sound doctrine for the conversion of men and the edification of the church.

—On our first page this week will be found the picture of B. B. Tyler, than whom but few preachers in our brotherhood are better known to-day. Dr. Tyler has not only been before the brotherhood for many years as a prominent preacher, pastor and evangelist, but also as an author and contributor to our religious journals. For several years he has been on the editorial staff of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and needs no introduction to our readers. Dr. Tyler has learned the art of keeping himself living on the sunny side of life and in a happy mood with all men. He has been doing the cause of Christ great good by his spiritual evangelism among the churches during the past two years.

—We call attention to the admirable article on "Our Gray-haired Pastors" in this paper. The article is written in a most lovely spirit and is full of that wisdom which is from above. The writer does not give his full name, is not a preacher, neither a citizen of the United States; but he is a citizen of the heavenly kingdom, an elder in Israel and a teacher among the faithful.

—The bill to abolish canteens and other government liquor selling, now on the House calendar and favorably reported, ought to be passed at the next session of Congress. A petition expressing this wish in the matter sent by you to your congressman and also to one of your senators will materially assist in the enactment of such a law. The bill is known as the Ellis bill, H. R. 7,937, to abolish liquor selling in "canteens," immigrant stations and government buildings. The same course should also be taken for the Hepburn bill, H. R. 1,598, to forbid the transmission by mail or interstate commerce, of pictures and descriptions of prize fights. This bill has also been favorably reported to the House and ought to become a law.

—Once upon a time we had a statesman in the United States Senate who declared that the TenCommandments and the Golden Rule had no place in politics and that the idea that they did have such a place was an "iridescent dream." He was soon retired to the shades of private life. Now Theodore Roosevelt, one of the candidates for Governor of New York—a state in which "Boss" Platt and "Boss" Croker reign over their respective parties—comes forward in a recent speech and says:

I will serve with all my might, so far as I can see my duty to do it, for the whole people. I shall feel that I can best serve my party by helping that party serve the state. There is one thing—one test—on which I shall insist if elected, and that is rigid honesty. I feel that the two great problems before this great nation nowadays are first to keep up the national honor abroad, and, second, and even more important, insist upon the highest standard of honesty at home. As for the course I shall pursue, it will be modeled upon those rules of conduct which you will find in the Ten Commandments and the Golden Rule. Loyal though I shall be to the principles for which I stand, the party principles, there are one or two rules of conduct that stand above any party principles, and they are included in the commandments, 'Thou shalt not steal,' and further, 'Nor shalt thou let any one else steal if thou canst help it.'

If Col. Roosevelt is elected on that kind of a platform his charge up San Juan Hill in the face of the Spanish fire cannot be compared with the charge he will have to make against the corrupt rings and bosses of New York City and state. But no one doubts he will make the fight if elected.

—According to the following information given out by the Chicago Record, the Emperor of Germany and the Sultan of Turkey is not without a common tie that binds their hearts—in ancestral ways—after all:

In Germany to-day no woman can control property; she cannot even control her own actions; whatever of value she has acquired in any way belongs to her father, her husband or her son, and the law requires her to obey their orders. Germany is the only country on earth that pretends to be civilized where the rights of women are so restricted. When a woman marries all her property passes into the ownership of her husband forever. He has the legal right to use or dispose of it in any manner he chooses, regardless of her wishes or protests. If they are divorced the property remains with him. When she assents to the marriage vow she forfeits independence and confers upon him absolute jurisdiction over her mind, body and estate. He can compel her to work or do anything else that is lawful for women to do, and she has no relief or protection except in public opinion. Some of the American heiresses who have married German barons have learned of this law to their sorrow, and others who may have an opportunity to assist in supporting the German army and restoring ancestral estates should look into the matter very carefully before they appoint the wedding day.

—If a man is a Baptist at all, should he not be a Baptist all over and all through and everywhere and all the time? Is it possible for one to be too much of a Baptist? Should not a Baptist be a straight Baptist and a sound Baptist and a strong Baptist? Of course a man may be a fool and prate and boast, but it is not the Baptist that is in him that causes him to do foolish and offensive things.

The above statements from the Word and Way raises some serious questions. For instance, if all were "a Baptist," then where were the Christian? Is madness ("a fool") one of the dangers of being too much of "a Baptist?" Why does not "the Baptist that is in him" drive out the fool? Who are the crooked, the unsound and weak Baptists implied in the third query? Will "a straight," "sound," "strong" Baptist admit that there is salvation in any other name? Will such a Baptist commune with one of another name? Is there any reason for a man being "a Baptist at all" in order to his salvation?

The State University and Skepticism.

In a circular sent out by President Clinton Lockhart, of Christian University at Canton, Mo., he says:

I have the undisputed report from many people, and especially from students of the State University themselves, past and present, that they find it almost impossible there to maintain even faith in God, and much harder to hold their zeal or their membership in the church. Now inasmuch as the church cannot now, and never will, have the power to select professors in state institutions, the question becomes a very plain one. Shall the Church of Christ fold its hands and leave the state to turn by wholesale our brightest minded and best educated young people into infidelity? If not, we must have our own university, and have it thoroughly endowed.

We, the people of Missouri, have "a university of our own" at Columbia, and if it be true that its moral and spiritual atmosphere is such that students "find it almost impossible to maintain even faith in God, and much harder to hold their zeal or their membership in the church," the Christian people of the state are to blame for it. They have the matter in their own hands—legislature, university and all. We believe, however, the above to be an exaggerated statement. The student that finds it difficult to maintain his faith in God in a town full of churches, and in a university whose president is a believer and a regular attendant at church services, and a majority of whose faculty at least are believers, and in connection with which there is a course of Bible lectures free to all, hasn't enough faith to grieve over when it is lost. We know, personally, that some young men going to the university as skeptics, have been cured of their skepticism by the Bible lectures and teaching of Dr. Moore.

So far as the Disciples of Christ are concerned, we do not intend to "fold our hands and leave the state to turn by wholesale our brightest minded and best educated young people into infidelity." We propose to furnish an antidote for whatever influence of that kind there may be at the University right on the ground, in the form of our Bible College. Bro. Lockhart cannot prevent these bright young men from going there by any university he can endow in a half century. Meanwhile the Bible College is our chief dependence for counteracting any dangerous influence that may be at work there and saving the young men to Christian faith.

Christian University, nor no other institution in the state, can further its own interests by disparaging the State University or the Bible College, whose aim is to acquaint its students with the Bible as an essential part of education. These colleges have their legitimate fields, and are doing good. They should be assisted by the people of the state. There is not the slightest ground for any jealousy or any war upon each other. The Bible College is meeting, or is an effort to meet, an imperative obligation we owe to the University and to its students. The marvel is that we did not begin it earlier, and have not supported it more liberally. It is bound to grow into favor with the people more and more as they come to understand its work and the need for it.

Clergyman's Statement

Nerve Strength Gained by Taking Hood's Sarsaparilla.

BRIGHTON, IOWA.—Rev. Bernard M. Shulick of this place, owing to weakness of the nerves, was for a time unable to attend to his duties. He makes this statement: "I have suffered for a long time from weak nerves. After I had taken a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I became quite well again. The weakness of the nerves has now wholly disappeared and I am able to attend to my duties again. I am therefore grateful to Hood's Sarsaparilla and I recommend it to everyone who suffers from weak nerves."

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best—in fact the One True Blood Purifier.

Hood's Pills are the only pills to take with Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The Truce of the Bear.

[Unfortunely, this poem, by Rudyard Kipling, is not an unfair representation of the impression made on the English mind by the Czar's proposal for a Peace Conference. Nor is England wholly to blame for this. Russia must be judged on her record. Nevertheless, we hope the conference will be held.—EDITOR.]

Horrible, hairy, human, with paws like hands in prayer,
Making his supplication, rose Adam-Zad the bear!
I looked at the swaying shoulders, at the paunch's swag and swing,
And my heart was touched with pity for the monstrous pleading thing.

Touched with pity and wonder, I did not fire then—
I have looked no more on women, I have walked no more with men.
Nearer he trotted and nearer, with paws like hands that pray—
From brow to jaw the steel-shod paw, it ripped my face away!

. . . . this is the time to fear,
When he stands up like a tired man, tottering near and near,
When he rears up as pleading, in monstrous man-brute guise,
When he veils the hate and cunning of the little swinish eyes,
When he shows as seeking quarters with paws like hands in prayer,
That this is the time of peril—the time of the truce of the Bear!

"SPIRITISM:" OTHER VIEW-POINTS.

JOSEPH H. MAC EL'REY.

"I have a bias, but I can be just." What the perspicuous and versatile Goethe said of himself is comprehensively true of the mass of our people in the fairness they accord to all in exercising the personal prerogative of their "bias," or opinions, in their own way. When they criticise they are supposed to do so in the best spirit and knowledge they possess, being willing to be measured by the same rule. The public desire plain statements, rather than tedious details; explanation of the principles involved, the presentation of the facts for clear conclusions, and thus to obtain sound instruction. The public wish to see justice done. Assertions without proofs, none but the merely biased, who do not wish to be just, will accept. It is dangerous for persons to appear in print, even after they have studied the pros and cons of their theme sufficiently to protect themselves from discovering the unwelcome fact that they are more ignorant than they thought they were. This is the guantlet those must run who will venture criticism or dogmatism upon important topics which they desire to promulgate.

The present writer has been an observer of "isms" in the past, and is likely so to be. Therefore, the most notable "isms" of the present century has attracted a fair share of his attention, as it has of many who wish to possess an up-to-date intelligence concerning one of the earliest displays of the many mysteries of man, and almost constantly in some degree developing in every age and place, and now remarkably spreading, and thought to be worthy the study of the ablest students of nature, science, history, art and man, is constantly being more and more searchingly examined upon the several alleged phases of this protean ism. It has concreted into a religion as well as a philosophy, which challenges domination of the present common and by many termed "miscalled Christianity and Christian ethics."

These issues are anything but trivial, and it is a great mistake so to rate and treat them, when they are so frequently occupying large space in most widely read daily papers, and also in high-grade monthly and quarterly periodicals, by able critics, leading clergy, M. D.s, jurists, university professors and noted scientists of many specialties.

An able critic recently had, quite properly, ample room in your liberal columns to discuss "Spiritism" in every variety which his taste inclined him to pursue. Hence he "briefly" but severely assailed Spiritualists, and Spiritualism, and Christian Science healers upon every item of their ethical, psychological, speculative, philosophical, religious and moral views and deportment, but particularly so upon this latter item—their moral conduct. This is always a dangerous item to attack successfully in aiming to fasten general moral discredit upon a whole fraternity, and also the odium theologicum—the enmity peculiar to religionists.

It is all as far-off proper tone in a philosophical, psychological analysis of spiritual, occult, psychic forces, "requiring the scientific mind properly to exploit them," as for a genius in such studies, where in the Empyrean abodes of divine Zeus and the other supreme gods, after imbibing with them their own ambrosia and saturating his superior faculties with their sublime inspirations, to suddenly and ingloriously plunge into the dark earth-levels of the Empyreuma, there to sense the fetid exhalations of decomposing "cabbage, turnips, leeks and onions," as among which Mr. Lhamon mixes himself up in his peculiarly conglomerated effort at associating and disassociating the vegetable and animal genera and species, "with hypnotism, clairvoyance, mind-reading, Christian Science healing, Spiritualism and witchcraft," all in one heterogeneity, such as he admits "requires the scientific mind to discover their kinship."

True, indeed, and Mr. Lhamon may discover that such a scientific mind has not yet materalized, or that if he has, he has explained far more to be mere "psychological unconscious cerebation," and nothing more than Mr. Lhamon and millions more are ready to accept on their present basis of Bible spiritism, spirit intercourse, dreams, trances, inspirations, experiences and faiths. But as I do not propose to "hypnotize" the reader by any art of "suggestion," that assumed talisman of hypnotic, clairvoyant, mesmeric witchery, we will enter as speedily as the obstructions Mr. Lhamon has placed about it, "the crucible of scientific investigation" of these isms, at the mortal risk of appearing after that fusion only "as dross." "Every work shall be tried by fire." "It is already kindled." Although Mr. Lhamon did not say in what degree of authority he uses the Bible as a test of "Spiritism and kindred fallacies and delusions," I think it well for me to positively state what my view-points for criticism of his production are. I shall deal with the Bible as plenarily inspired of God, and in which there is no mixture of error. I shall not argue this position, but assume it, as the basis for everything it contains on faith and morals especially. I do not know how to be more explicit than this. I shall use Spiritualism as it develops itself, and shall treat what is passing for Christianity in a similar manner.

If as Mr. Lhamon states it, "Spiritualism or witchcraft and Christian Science healing," are all of one, they are too immense now to be slurred, sneered, ridiculed, ignored, or as a last resort persecuted out of existence. Indeed, Mr. Lhamon must be aware that those treatments have been through many centuries tried on every kind of spiritism and have not annihilated them, and as he admits cannot now be used upon them. Nothing but the scientific crucible can be used now. Hail to this inestimable freedom!

As regards the moral status of the organizations assailed by Mr. Lhamon, I shall treat that comparatively, of course, with other religious and ethical organisms on the commonly accepted view that this and other countries called Christian are uninfluenced perceptibily for good or bad by the superstitious, inane degenerates Mr. Lhamon thus esteems. Let their degraded characteristics define and distinguish them. They cannot be those to whose immoralities the public press makes reiterated reference as a few following items indicate.

Mr. Lhamon accepts the postulate that this is a Christian country, ignoring the isms he has characterized. Very well. "Crime is increasing in all Christian countries and so is poverty, beyond the increase of the natural populations." "Over seventeen thousand killings in this country the year before the present, and one hundred and three legal executions for those homicides." High-toned editors, like the Philadelphia Ledger, ask: "Have old-time commercial integrity, the honorable discharge of moral duties, the keeping of business promises, been retired to the dark recesses of moral desuetude? This is the general query on the outlook over these epidemics of financial and moral falls of institutions and men thought to be invulnerable."

Take a broad, wholesale case, in that of the "Methodist BookConcern," lately before the investigating committee of senators. The fiducial engineer of the claim against the government for money damages did, as it appears, some very crooked work, amounting substantially to perjury. Replying to questions, he said he did not act under the motive of obtaining any money reward, but only for the good of the "Book Concern" of the church. He had not done worse than some Bible characters who were pardoned, like Peter, Paul and others, who repented and were pardoned through the merits of Jesus' blood, etc. Now, I do not censure the whole church with this crime, but the legal rule is that the act of the agent is the act of the employer, and it appears that the church got the money claimed and thus endorsed the act of their agent. The vicarious-atonement doctrine has, it seems, a commercial value in some churches as well as a spiritual value. Since "going astray," as it is now termed, has become so common in financial concerns as not to be shocking, the question has often been asked through the papers, "What churches do they belong to?" As the reports of their falls came out, one paper took to ferreting out for reply and said, "We find Mr. ——— a ruling elder in Dr. ———'s church. Mr. ——— is Sunday-school superintendent in the ——— church. Mr. ——— is a deacon in the ——— church, and Mr. ——— is local preacher in Grace M——— church, and Mr. ———is a man of the world and yet in his sins." I of course reserve names. "The secular press" is not afraid to call a spade a spade. A very prominent sacred paper lately, did "sadly lament the avidity of the general press for spreading the weaknesses of otherwise worthy people, before the eyes of the young!"

Even His Holiness lately begged the press to cease publishing their daily catalogues of crimes, and particularly not to put church troubles upon the wings of the printing press. Well, it is not pleasant, although it should be powerfully instructive reading! Crime exists among Christian communions in proportions larger according to their claims of orthodoxy and zeal in propagating themselves. The cool retorts of criminal court records and prison statistics are generally admonitions to the champions of the superior moralities of Christian professors not to boast too loudly of their practice of our most excellent Christian theories. The smaller religious bodies—Untarians, New Jerusalem, Universalits, Old Christians, Free

Baptists, United Brethren, Reformed Episcopalians, Hebrews, Disciples of Christ, Spiritualists, Christian Science Healers, Free Christians—are superior in morals to those not honored by the self-styled orthodox as worthy to mingle with them in communion. The "orthodox" decry "mere morality," as if offensive to God and of no avail among men. They exalt whatever they mean by "faith," as divinely superior to conduct.

Now this is a Christian nation, practically and nominally. Cranks and imbeciles, Spiritualists, cut no figure in it. What it is, it is independently of these. Specialists in social evils assert that if Christians would do their well-known and admitted duty legal drunkenness and "the social evil" could not exist in Christian countries beyond a very few years. Thus, whatever the latent potentiality may be, the applied power is nil. In what sense is this a Christian country? In faith? Without works? Devils damned have just such faith, and are devils still!

If this nation be not as drunken as any other nation, is the other one Christian? And where is it? What we might or would be without what of Christianity we have we do not know, but to find out that, what nation shall we compare moral conditions with?

Note the following few items taken near the center of the intellectual belt of the well-cultured North concerning the ethical status of a few inland cities of the Empire State, New York. I quote "Annual Debauch of Firemen of our State at Binghampton, the Parlor City"—disgusting orgies, paid for by the taxpayers of the state:

"These conventions, always disgraceful, have this year here, and at Cortland, been more so, if possible, than ever. Incorporated under the laws of the state, the protection and the expenditures are ever ample. The Parlor City has, in the character of the preparations and the carrying out of the program for the gathering, fully merited the new name, 'The Slum City.' No city could secure one of these 'meets' unless it were guaranteed beforehand that everything would be run 'wide open.' The city of Schenectedy won the honor last year over Binghampton, as the latter city had the name of being too high up in moral tone. Judgde Downs, of this city, dispelled that illusion in his speech proposing Binghampton for the happy time of '98, by assuring the boys that, in his own pledged words, 'Binghampton would give them even more than they wanted of every kind.' The honorable Judge particularized items to a degree too plain to quote. The wholesale promise has been kept, and to spare. No visitant of the great convention left it with the idea that Binghampton has any moral tone. Mark: Two weeks before the opening wide there was an invasion of the city by 'the perennial beauties' promised by Judge Downs. The one hundred and twenty-five drink saloons in the city, in addition to the elegant hotel 'houses,' duplicated many times their bar places, and 'special accommodation apartments,' stowing away all furniture except beds, tables and chairs, replaced the carpets with sawdust and sand, that joy might abound! In a word, it was a saturnalia of unstinted licentiousness."

Residing for many years near to beautiful Binghampton, it was thought then to be a Christian city, and there were very few spiritualists or witchcrafters in it. It has several costly and wealthy churches, hotels and saloons, theatres, dance halls, etc. There is a fine inebriate asylum near it and an insane asylum. I visited them several times, and found a fair proportion of Christians and preachers, legal and medical inmates there, but no Spiritualists, although there are many Spiritualists in the state of New York.

Of the progress of Christianity in New York City and surrounding cities, the most wide-awake clergy there tell us that the profession does not, per capita, hold its own, and that the iniquities of "the cities of the plains" of Bible-making times were purity itself compared with the mature, gigantic and multitudinous infamies of those many - hued, festering, cankering, cancer-eating Sodoms, and even in the one termed, as if in caricature, "the city of churches," their every-day crimes and their spiritual wickedness in high and low places are not behind any of the cities. "The whole state has been permeated by the virus of viciousness in the metropolis." Well, does it mitigate the condition of the entire case a whit to blame it on other parts of the Christian compact? When I went West I was told at DesMoines that "there was very little Sabbath west of the Mississippi." I said, "Well, this is supposed to be a Christian nation." By and by I found salesmen for most prominent church leaders in Philadelphia selling their wares by sample in the hotels on the Sabbath days. I saw it done. None of the parties were Spiritualists or Christian Science healers. One agent, knowing me in Philadelphia, came to hear me. Calling that afternoon I was ushered into the sale rooms, and found my friend with other agents and quite a company of retail buyers at work. My friend said, "This is our best day. . . . Yes, our pious employers at home know that." Now, of course Christianity is not blamable for all or any of these things. But are those calling themselves Christians and teachers of Christianity blamable? Christianity in theory is as like Christianity practiced as merchandising in theory is like merchandising practiced. Neither is worth anything in only theory. Put the two together.

Select a collection of those Mr. Lhamon has set at naught for everything but duplicity, and if between their profession and their moral conduct they create a chasm as wide and deep as Christians thus create, let them fall into it, because they but cumber the land!

Mr. L. will admit that Christianity has no more power in this world than is exerted by the mediums, and that is true of all powers or forces. Causes are known only through their effects. We will not quibble or higgle over nothings. The facts will do us. The tree is known by the fruit. We have thousands of names of persons distinguished in every department of learning and leadership in all the world who have been convinced that the phenomena Mr. Lhamon terms witchcraft are done by discarnated spirits. Ten thousand times as many equally eminent names who may say they do not belive it could be no evidence against spirit existence and verification to persons in this world, because negations are nothings. The doctrine of the sphericity of the earth stood a twelve hundred years' campaign against Christian Scientists like Eusebius, Lactantius, Cosmas and everybody's St. Augustine. Their scientific weapons were mighty enough to drive men to death, and as they believed, to eternal hell. The "infidels" finally triumphed. The earth is round now to all. But next, it was infidel to say the earth revolved. It now revolves. It is instructive to read the uses they made of Scripture to prove that the earth does not revolve, that it is flat, that the sun passes around it, etc., that "nothing could live under it except damned souls!"

The canons of our now science were then as absurd to the theologians of that time as are the experiences of those now "whose efforts are not needed" to help overcome the materialism of this age.

Luther said, referring to the destructive doctrines of Nicholas Copernick: "People gave ear to an upstart astrologer who strove to show that the earth revolves, not the heavens and the firmament, the sun and the moon. Whoever wishes to appear clever must devise some new system. This fool wishes to reverse the whole science of astronomy. But sacred Scripture tells us that Joshua commanded the sun to stand still, and not the earth." The mild Melancthon, too, was as harsh in this instance as his chief in slandering Copernick, putting the sting into his heart: "It is dishonest and indecent to assert openly the pernicious deception that the earth revolves, when our eyes are witnesses that the heavens revolve in the space of twenty-four hours. It is the part of a good mind to accept the truth of God and acquiesce in it."

Things come by contrasts and opposites. To know one history with its philosophy you must study two histories of the same events.

Christian saints and Bible defenders who knew nothing of any science but that of the metaphysics of logomachy and abuse of whatever they did not like, thus by mental affinity took to such defenses of the Bible and religion as seemed to agree with their lack of natural science and the scientific trend. Cosmas thus defended the Bible against "the astrologers" (he could not use the respectable word astronomers) by diagraming "the table and ark of the covenant," etc. He took to the Jew trend, who never displayed mechanical skill, and could not construct their own temple. The abusers of the scientists called them atheists, Pythagorean and Zoroastrian infidels, lovers of heathen philosophers, etc. (See Jowett's Plato, Timæus 62, Phædo 449; Cicero, Acad.; Whewell, Ind. sc. v. 1,185.) These men had the idea of rotundity and antipodes. To the Christian Fathers these ideas were damnable (Leckey, Hist. Ref. N. T. v. 1, 279). Mr. L. says, "Egyptians and Romans courted clairvoyants and fortunetellers. Jews peremptorily forbade them." Much so. "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." As if in regret for lack of the power to be "peremptory" he adds, "In this age we neither worship nor prohibit such things." "I will not kill thee, but will give thee a bad name," and then cried, "maddog!" Such tactics will not kill Spiritualism.

CAN I LOVE MY ENEMIES?

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

III.

We have seen that the spirit of human brotherhood has grown to be, especially in this country, a mighty force, and that it embraces in its activity not only the downtrodden and depressed, but even certain classes of enemies. It still remains true, however, that the usual attitude toward a personal enemy is one of hatred. The reason of this is to be found in the fact that human sympathy in this case comes into more direct conflict with self-love and self-interest, for which it proves no equal match. A closer inspection, however, will reveal the fact that there has been a change of feeling even towards the personal enemy. Precisely what this is can be best understood by considering another fact of our mental experience.

Our feelings are generally composite. Especially with the civilized man it is rarely that any particular occurrence, with the emotion it tends to excite, has complete and undivided possession of the soul. Memory and foresight are ever yielding a varied fund of motive. The event which tends to excite a particular emotion has its connection with the past and future or with some deeper insight of the present, and out of these there arise various incitements to feeling, blending with and modifying the original emotion. It is not the single tone of the lute, but the modern music of many parts. That complex of feeling making up a man's spirit is often a symphony of emotion. As colors are often the composite of many shades, some strong and others of such delicacy of tint as to be scarcely perceptible, yet modifying the general result, so is that color of the soul called the spirit woven of many pigments.

This is less so with the unreflecting savage, who abandons himself without reserve to the the passion of the moment, and least of all with the animal creation, whose reasoning powers cannot take them out of the present; but with the intelligent man a wide world of circumstances is ever playing its motives upon his heart.

Some of these incitements to feeling are of a contrary nature, and act with a restraining power upon each other, struggling for ascendency. Such are love and revenge, or hatred. Philosophically speaking, a man may love and hate an enemy at the same time. You may resent a wrong and feel like retaliating, but you do not feel like crucifying the offender, and your whole heart would revolt against any inhuman act of torture. This is because the humane feeling—which is a species of love—has not been extinguished even toward this enemy. This feeble love does not exert a controlling influence in your mind or on your conduct, but is consumed in restraining your hatred. It is here that there has been a vast change in the attitude toward the personal enemy. He is still hated, but in the face of a struggling human sympathy, which weakens the virulence of hate and transforms it often into a composite of many contending emotions. The growth of human love, which has reached such remarkable efflorescence in many departments of modern life, has not failed to reach even the personal enemy, and is exerting a powerful influence on our feelings and conduct toward him. When an object falls to the earth we see the action of gravity, which is the controlling force in the result, though the air resists in some measure and retards the fall; but when the cyclone lifts objects from the earth and bears them aloft in its fury, gravity is not seen as acting, though it is doing so quite as much as before, and its power is expended in limiting and restraining the force of the tornado. In this sense of a masked sympathy there are few who do not now love their enemies in some degree, but this does not fill out the measure of Christ's requirement. He demands that this love shall be the controlling force in feeling and the shaping force in conduct. Yet the situation is one of vast encouragement. That we have already stepped on the first rung of the ladder reveals both the possibility and the method of ascent. We need but rise higher in the same direction and the summit will be reached.

If the first step in the loving of an enemy is taken when the heart can say, "I cannot inhumanly torture him," the next step is taken when you can say, "I wish him no harm." If you wish your enemy no harm, you do not desire to do him any harm, and your revenge has disappeared. A burning sense of wrong may be felt and an anger with him, but you do not desire to injure him, though your heart may not prompt you to go farther. "Let him go his way, and I will go mine, I do not feel like having anything to do with him." The general benevolence of your spirit has brought you to this point, but this is not called loving your enemy, because love is not in evidence as the controlling force. Yet, let us give it due credit for what it is. It may not command our admiration, but it is love scoring a victory, and driving hatred within its intrenchments. The man whose heart lets him say this has traveled far towards Christ's ideal; and I believe there are many who can to-day say this very thing.

Are there not many who can take another step and say, "I wish him well?" If you can sincerely say this, you have reached a point where you can put that wish into a prayer and pray for your enemy (Luke 6: 28), and into an act and do him good (v. 27). If you can do this you have reaced Christ's goal, and your spirit is Christian.

Such a state of mind is not incompatible with a keen sense of the wrong done and indignation at it; nor does a struggling feeling of resentment entirely exclude it. There is sometimes a well-nigh evenhanded contest between the two passions. At times, as the greatness of the wrong done passes in review, the spirit of resentment rises, soon to be subdued by the kindlier feelings born of nobler reflections. To deny these facts would be to be untrue to the life of the human heart as it is. The human soul is not a statue, whose features know no change. A mother, weary and vexed, may strike her child unkindly. Does she love it? Let danger threaten, and she will rush to lay down her life for its safety. Equanimity of spirit is a virtue to be cultivated, but flitting resentments do not prove that there is not love in the heart. They are the breaking wave caps on the surface of the sea fretted by the gusts of incidents, but the great quiet ocean sleeps below. Let love hear its summons, and it rises to the occasion and moves the mighty wheels of life.

It is often said that men are liable to be deceived regarding the deeper motives of the heart, and to think themselves righteous while they are, in their deeper life, selfish and unworthy. But the truth has another side; the deeper heart may be nobler than we think. What we do is the best test of this deeper life.

I may say in passing that this struggling feeling of resentment in the heart is not wholly an evil. It is the relief against which our love of enemies becomes sublime. A character so servile and spiritless as to feel no recoil against injustice or abuse does not command our admiration; but a man smarting under a keen sense of wrong inflicted and still rising up to bless the foe that smote him presents a sublime spectacle. It is because it costs us something to love our enemies, that it is so noble. It belongs to the heroisms, and that is why, like all other heroism, it thrills us, and moves with such transforming power upon the object of its exercise. The offender sees in the other party a man of like passions with himself rising above the lower instincts, and returning blessing for cursing, kindness for injury, and it awes him and subdues him to a nobler spirit. But let him see in all this a mere weak servility, and he despises his victim. It is only as he sees in the other all that belongs to his own nature plus something grander that he is smitten. He bows to a crowned king wielding that strange sceptre—heroic love.

It should be further said that we must not make the mistake of supposing that all love evidences itself as a glowing and pleasurable emotion. The eye cannot see itself, and there are some feelings so much a part of our inmost selves that we are scarcely aware of them. This presence is to be determined by suitable tests. Nor is love always pleasurable. If the object loved suffers, love is pain—sympathy; that is, suffering with another. If he is fallen in character, love may be compassion. The love of complacency is never possible toward an enemy; for we cannot be pleased with his wrongdoing against us. This is not the love that Christ requires; for our love is to be like God's, who does not look with complacency on the wicked. The love of the enemy is always love with a thorn in its breast. But it is love. It is a yearning desire to bless; it is the outgoing of the heart towards an erring brother.

In speaking of the "Jews at the Close of the Century," the Menorah, a Jewish monthly, says:

The prosperity of the country not only does not suffer by the competition of the Jew, but is enhanced by his enterprise, energy and push. What if, occasionaly, a hotel keeper or the proprietor of a residence who caters to the spirit of aristocratic snobbishness refuses to admit the Jew? "There are others," the ordinary citizen would reply, "who are glad of the patronage of the Jew." If anybody works into the hands of the anti-Semites, it is the short-sighted, misled leader of the Zionistic movement. If anything would please the hard-boiled anti-Semite, it would be the establishment of the Jewish state. They know that they would fight among themselves a more bitter fight than anti-Semites ever offered them. Is not the Greek nation an example that should be a warning to those who attempt to set up another petty nationality? The Greeks are on classical grounds, they own a country and nevertheless are a constant apple of discord to even their Christian friends. Anti-Semitism, in spite of the picture of Dr. Nordau, drawn gray in gray, is not by far as gloomy and disheartening as it is painted. It could not be expected that the incomparable success of the Jew since he left the Ghetto should be accepted with equanimity by thosewho are distanced by him in the struggle for existance. But the same force which has achieved the success and has maid the Jew in every civilized country an equal among equals, a power in the land, will also bring about his social equality; the name of that force is education.

New York Letter.

The program of the Disciples' Club, of New York, is just out, giving the outline of work for the entire season. The Club meets the fourth Tuesday evening in each month from October to May (except December, when it is moved back one week), in the church of the Disciples on West 56th Street. Perhaps the items of the program may be of interest to many. They are as follows: Oct. 25th—"Current Events," Clarence M. Aden; Paper: "European Armament and Disarmament," Col. A. C. Fisk; Book Review, Mrs. E. B. Grannis. Nov. 22nd—"Current Events," S. W. Hoke; Paper: "Imperialism," J. H. Banton; discussion led by G. W. Kramer; Book Review, Chilton Dean. Dec. 20th—"Current Events," Isaac Van Beuschoten; Paper: "Critical Study of Isaiah," W. C. Payne; discussion led by J. M. Philputt; Book Review, F. Applegate. Jan. 24th—"Current Events," R. E. The last will and testament of the late Dr. John Hall, of this city, has just been filed for probate in the surrogate's office, and presents some items of interest to preachers and church people generally. A close friend says the estate is worth about $100,000. To each of his six brothers and sisters he bequeathed £100, and to each of his stepsons a similar amount. His watch and books he gave to the Rev. Thos. C. Hall, and his real estate in Kansas he bequeathed to his son, Robert W. Hall. After the distribution of minor bequests to relatives and friends, Dr. Hall gives the residue of his estate to his widow, Emily Hall, during her life. At her death her estate goes to the five children in equal parts. Dr. Hall received a salary of $15,000 a year, and his handsome home on Fifth Avenue was owned by the church, and was rent free. In the course of his life he received many valuable presents, and the sums he received as wedding fees and other presents were notable, although the amount given to Dr. Hall in this way has been exaggerated a great deal, so it is said. When William Sloane, who was the treasurer of the church, died he left to Dr. Hall $30,000. Alexander Stewart also left to him $10,000. Mrs. Ford left to him an annuity of $3,000 a year as long as he lived. Dr. Hall received similar presents, but of less value. It is the general belief that $100,000 will be near the amount of the estate.

Hundreds of Disciples in these days are living in the pleasant memories of the great Chattanooga Conventions, which in many particulars were better than all that have gone before. Home Missions certainly did come to the front this time with tremendous enthusiasm. We are beginning to see the imperative need of turning America to Christ. It is absolutely necessary in order to evangelize the whole world. And more than this, we are awaking to the fact that the conversion of America means the evangelization of our cities. But to reach our Eastern cities, at least, we must employ the common-sense methods of patiently teaching the gospel. There is no better mission field to-day in the United States than the city of New York, but cyclonic evangelism would not avail anything here. These people must be reached. if at all, by the hand-picking process. Perhaps the best and surest way to reach New York, and especially the North Side, is by planting Sunday-schools as branches of church work. We rejoice at the unmistakable dawning of a brighter day for American missions.

The sessions of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society were none the less enthusiastic. The reports of the past year exceed by far every record of the past. The splendid addresses following these reports led us to the very mountain top of Christian experience and blessed fellowship as coworkers with God in the salvation of the world. One of the most delightful features of the Foreign Missionary Convention came to us in the presence and greetings of so many of our heroic workers from the field: Mr. C. E. Randall, Miss Olivia A. Baldwin, Miss Oldham, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon, Dr. Butchart and Mr. R. W. Hunt. These all delighted us with their evident joy in the service of the Lord. Unquestionably our convention was of one mind as to the efficiency of all our secretaries; they are doing noble service for the Lord, and we take just pride in the success of their work. The standard for this year is $150,000 for Foreign Missions! For American Missions the work set before us is $100,000! Beloved, these works are easily within our reach. Let us ever go far beyond them in the grace of giving to the Lord's cause—the salvation of men. We must not fail, either, along the line of Church Extension. That $250,000 must be in this fund by the end of 1900. It was shown by the reports that the Disciples of Christ, with their comparative paltry sums, are doing relatively seven times more in turning men to the Lord than any other people in this country. If the simple gospel as the Disciples preach it wins men so readily, should we not support that gospel even more liberally than ever before?

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions showed the best year's work of their glorious history. Their missions are all prospering and hopeful. Their work is constantly growing, both in America and foreign lands. Greater emphasis was laid upon their English Bible Chair work than usual, which was a natural result of the substantial encouragement recently given to that work at the Virginia University. Bro. Cary, of Richmond, son of the late Col. John B. Cary, of blessed memory, has given recently $10,000 toward a fund of $50,000 for the support of the English Bible Chair work at Charlottesville. This fitting monument to the memory of Bro. John B. Cary, the foundation of which is laid by a grateful son, should be speedily completed. We are glad to hear of this good work at Charlottesville. It will do our cause good throughout Virginia.

One of the most blessed of all the General Convention privileges is the spiritual and social fellowship afforded those in attendance. The old-time acquaintances are renewed, and new ones are formed, which in succeeding conventions will be sweetened and strengthened. The Chattanooga Convention was especially delightful to me because of having lived and labored in that city as pastor at one time. Many friends of former days were there, but some have gone on before to the general assembly and church of the first born in heaven. Chattanooga entertained the convention right royally. Cincinnati says we must have 10,000 delegates at the semi-centennial in 1899.

Pittsburgh Letter.

The annunl convention of the Disciples of Christ in Western Pennsylvania was held in the bustling little city of Connelsville, Sept. 20 to 22. Owing to your scribe's typewriter being out of repair the report has been delayed, but hope it will be none the less acceptable even at this late date.

The Pittsburgh contingent, about sixty strong, left Pittsburgh in a special car headed by the ever energetic and Christly hearted president of the society, Robert S. Latimer, assisted by the imperturbable W. H. Hanna, of Carnegie, who hustled the tickets and change as though he had never preached a sermon or sung a gospel solo. The delegation was met at the train in Connelsville by representatives of the church who took good care of each and all, so that when the evening session opened, every one was safely housed and homed with the warm-hearted Connelsvilleians. Hearts and homes of these good people were alike open and the days of work and intellectual and spiritual feasting will long be remembered.

The Connelsville church edifice is a thing of beauty, a joy forever. It has only recently been completed, at a cost of nearly $30,000. From a small, struggling congregation the church has grown to be a power in the community. Great preachers have ministered here. Men who have entered into their rest, but who, being dead, still speak. Alexander Campbell won much of his fame in this district and made for himself the honored name and memory that follows him. Bro. W. R. Warren, a graduate of old Bethany, now labors here and is doing heroic work in what is known as a hard field.

The convention opened with an address by Herbert Yeull, of Banksville, with the suggestive theme: "The Coming Church: Its Relation to the Social Problems." Bro. Yeull made a strong and radical address, showing wide reading and careful preparation. He said the church of the future will be a New Testament church, on broadest line, reaching and helping all classes, even as did the Lord Christ in the days agone.

Bro. Warren, in the evening of that beautiful first day of the convention, gave as the keynote John 16:14, glorifying Christ.

An address by O. H. Philipps on "The Strength and Weakness of the Disciples" was, from a literary standing point, most masterly and scholarly. With careful conservative thought he pointed out the strength of the Disciples in their loyalty to the Word and their evangelistic spirit and obedience to the commands of Christ. No less carefully did he speak of our weaknesses. His address must have been prepared while in the spirit of prayer.

Your scribe then had the pleasure of presenting a stereopticon sermon on baptism.

Wednesday morning President Latimer made his annual address. For ten years he has been president of the W. P. C. M. S. In that time over 40 churches have been organized, with over 5,000 additions as a result.

The reports of Financial Secretary Bullard and Treasurer Errett were received, showing that during the year there has been a total of $1,690 raised for work in the district. Nine mission points have been established, of which seven, with an approximate membership of 787, raised over $10,000 to carry on their work. The report showed that 94 cents of every dollar contributed to the work is applied directly to the field, the remaining six cents being used for car fare, postage, etc., by the financial secretary.

During the year four new buildings have been erected and dedicated—Confluence, Scotdale, Beaver and Connelsville.

Dr. I. A. Thayer gave a timely address on the making of a preacher, that fairly bristled with good points.

Wednesday afternoon was devoted to the C. W. B. M. The ever faithful secretary, Mrs.

C. L. Thurgood (thoroughly good, some people call her) reported a membership of 1,005, representing 54 societies. Reported $1,937.61 sent to Lois White and Mrs. Julia A. Evans. The Junior Bands, through Mrs. F. F. Bullard, presented an interesting report, showing 1,590 enlisted in the work and 90 added to the church during the year. The sum of $895.31 was raised by the Juniors for the work, both state and national.

The old board of officers, consisting of Mrs. T. W. Philipps, president; Mrs. C. L. Thurgood, secretary; Mrs. F. F. Bullard, superintendent of Mission Bands; Mrs. Julia A. Evans, treasurer, was re-elected.

Wednesday evening Bro. W. L. Hayden, the veteran, who was present as a happy bridegroom, and introducing to all his bride, made a great success with his now widely known address on Alexander Campbell.

Thursday morning Bro. Marshall, of Belle Vernon, enthusiastically told the story of the devotion of the Apostle Paul to his work, inciting his hearers to emulate the noble example of the great missionary of the cross.

The Y. P. S. C. E. and the Sunday-school sessions were great features of the convention, and many valuable suggestions were made as to the furtherance of the work.

The convention closed on Thursday evening with ringing addresses by W. H. Hanna, on "The Quiet Hour;" C. L. Thurgood, on "The Tenth Legion," and W. J. Lhamon, on "Americanism and the Endeavor Movement."

The following officers were elected: President, R. S. Latimer; vice-presidents, T. J. Allen, D. C. Evans, W. H. Graham, T. W. Philipps, John Barge; secretary, J. H. Craig; treasurer, W. R. Errett; corresponding secretary, W. H. Hanna; superintendent of Bible-school work, John A. Jayne; superintendent of C. E. work, Mahlon H. Wilson; superintendent of Children's Home Mission work, Miss May Netting; chairman program committee, W. J. Lhamon.

Two preachers have taken unto themselves brides recently and were present, W. L. Hayden, of Edinburgh, and E. A. Hibbler, now located at Johnstown.

The enrollment committee presented their report, showing 144 present as delegates and 35 places not represented.

PITTSBURGH POINTS.

The Knights' Templar Conclave was a great success, from an artistic, electric and financial standing point. More than 2,000,000 people were estimated to be in the city the day of the great parade. Pittsburgh knows how to handle a crowd.

J. H. McSparren, formerly of Glouster, begins work with the W. P. C. M. S. as evangelist, with a meeting at Scotdale.

O. H. Richards, of Beaver Falls, has returned from the Klondike.

F. A. Wright has taken up the work at Homestead, while J. F. Futcher has gone to Duquesne.

John L. Darsle has taken up the work of raising funds for Bethany College.

Kansas City Letter.

If any readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST have missed my accustomed letter for the past month or so (and what scribe does not try to persuade himself that his silence is noted?) they will perhaps be interested in knowing that I have been laid up for a few weeks by a severe hurt to my right knee and ankle. The accident came just in time to prevent my attendance at our state convention at Nevada, and national conventions at Chattanooga. I have been rejoiced to learn of the goodly attendance, splendid reports and unbroken harmony that characterized both these gatherings.

I have not spoken for some time of our local affairs, and it will be in order to report progress in our Kansas City churches. Bro. Geo. H. Combs is steadily leading his splendid church at Sixth and Prospect, up to higher ideals and accomplishments. This church has now the largest membership of all our congregations. Bro. H. A. Northcutt begins a meeting with them in a week or two, and they are hoping and praying for large results.

Bro. A. W. Kokendoffer has been for many years the beoved pastor of Forest avenue church, and each year seems to strengthen the bone between him and his people. His church is steadily growing, and is the second in point of membership among our churches in this city.

Bro. E. W. Thornton is proving the right man in the right place, in his work with the South Prospect church, and the good people of that congregation are learning to esteem him very highly in love, for his work's sake. There is every reason for encouragement as to the future of his labors here.

Bro. T. P. Haley has been serving the Springfield avenue church as pastor during the past year, to their unbounded joy and profit. This is one of the mission churches of our city whose history has been one of constant struggle for existence. The strong leadership, wise direction and inspiring preaching of Bro. Haley have given new heart to the faithful workers, and the membership has already been substantially increased. Their outlook is brighter than ever before in their history.

The West Side church is being ministered to by Bro. B. M. Easter, perhaps the youngest pastor that Kansas City has ever had. He is doing a very fine work there, and is developing much power as preacher and pastor.

Our City Missionary, Bro. F. L. Bowen, has done a wonderful work during the past year, and our three missions are constantly growing in every way, through his ministry. He has added over a hundred by baptism during the year. We expect to continue his work next year, and anticipate yet larger results.

Bro. T. J. Dickson has been preaching for the Westport and Sheffield churches for a few months, and the interest is growing at both places. They anticipate an excellent winter's work.

Our brethren across the state line, in Kansas City, Kansas, have five congregations, including the suburbs of Armourdale and Argentine. Three of these have houses of worship, and all have or expect very soon to have pastors. Bro. J. M. Kersey, of Washington, Pa., has been secured as pastor by the Central Church, and begins his work December 1st. Bro. C. M. Wickham has just dedicated a new chapel on the north side of the city, and his congregation is rapidly growing. The Armourdale church, so long and acceptably served by Bro. W. H. Embry, is now enjoying the ministry of Bro. Elmer Davis, whose labors promise to be entirely satisfactory. Bro. Hanley and Bro. Phillips are preaching for the Argentine and Riverview churches, and we hear good reports of their work. All in all, the cause of primitive Christianity seems full of promise in these twin cities.

The State Christian Endeavor Convention was held in our city last week, the sessions being held simultaneously in the First Christian and First Congregational churches. Much of the time both churches were crowded to overflowing, and the spirit of the meetings was all that could be desired. The societies of our own churches were well represented, and brethren A. B. Phillips, of Fulton, C. M. Chilton, of St. Joseph, and W. H. McClain, of St. Louis, filled creditably their places on the program. The state secretary reported 254 societies of the Christian Churches, the Presbyterians following with 153, the Cumberland Presbyterians with 97, and the Congregationalists with 60, placing us easily in the lead. But it is known that we have at least 400 societies in this stase, and nearly this number have reported to our own state secretary, Bro. F. R. Stutzman. If all these would have reported to the interdenominational secretary, our showing would have been correspondingly good. There are 1,226 C. E. Societies reported in the state, 436 of which are Juniors. No doubt the full number would reach over 2,000, if all reported. The feature of the report received with greatest enthusiasm was the conversion of 2,763 associate members during the year. What a blessed spiritual influence going out from our Endeavor Societies does this fact suggest!

A Resting Spell.

During the session of the district missionary convention in this city last week I heard, among many good things, an experience related by Eld. C. C. Smith, of the American Christiad Missionary Society, in his address before the convention, which will bear repetition. It was the occasion of the would-be resting spell of his, of a few days, on one of our Northern lakes, but I will endeavor, as well as I can remember, to quote Bro. Smith's own words, and I will only add that if his active spells were as effective in proportion as the resting spell, Bro. Smith must be a power for the promulgation of the "doctrine once delivered to the saints:"

"I was just starting off," Bro. Smith began, "on a little trip up the lake for a brief rest, and the steamer started pleasantly and gaily on her way. The day was superb, the scenery sublime, and all nature combined to render the occasion delightful to me. I knew nobody on the steamer and I was just now thankful for this fact, as you know, brethren, we are sometimes. I sat down on the deck resolved to take my ease, and to indeed let things go as they might—

'The world forgetting
And by the world forgot.'

In a few minutes an old gentleman came along by me and pushed a small paper in my hand saying, 'Read that.' I did not take to this disturbance of my was-to-be rest very much, but I took it and glanced at the title, which was, 'What Ingersoll has to say about the Presbyterians.' Well, with a sort of unexplained perversity which will sometimes impel humanity to seek to find out what somebody has to say about their neighbors I read it. After awhile the old gentleman came along again, and seeing me asked, 'Did you read that paper?' 'I did,' I answered. 'Well, what did you think of it?' querried he. 'Well, it's about like all emanations from Ingersoll,' I answered, 'a little truth mixed in with a great deal of error.' 'What! where is any error in that, sir?' snapped out my pumping interlocutor. Well, I saw I was in for it, and that I must meet the issue. I began with all the earnestness I could to show the fallacy of Ingersoll's reasoning, and the impregnable foundation of Christianity, and I suppose before I was scarcely aware of it I was hammering away pretty lively. Anyway, in a very few moments I discovered that I was backed up against the outside of the cabin and was surrounded by nearly the entire number of people on board the little steamer, some two hundred or upwards, who stood around with evident and opened-mouthed interest. When I saw that my rest for the time, at least, was thus knocked into smithereens I told the old gentleman that as he had started me into this thing he had to give me half an hour in which I would tell what Jesus and his gospel had done for humanity, and then I wanted him in another half-hour to tell what Ingersollism or infidelity had done for the people. He agreed, because he saw from the looks of the bystanders that it would be best to do so, and I put in my best licks for that time in doing so, and to a most attentive audience. When I got through the old gentleman used but very little time. He didn't seem to have as much to say as he thought he had. Most all he said was of a sneering and sarcastic nature concerning creeds, their human origin, hypocrites, etc., and finished by asking with his best attempt at withering scorn, 'Now what's your creed; I know you've got one?' Brethren, didn't I feel good just then? Here was when our noble plea stood me well in hand, and I endeavored to use it for all it was worth. 'I have no creed,' I answered. An honest confession of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and obedience to his commands is all that I or my people ask, and a plain, common-sense interpretation of the New Testament is sufficient for every intelligent human being to be well informed as to his duty.' My auditors crowded around me with questions as to my church or my people whose tenets seemed entirely new to them, and I verily believe there was not another person on board that vessel that was acquainted with the Disciples of Christ save myself. I answered all to the best of my ability and after a while, when the crowd had about dispersed, the old gentleman who started the affair came along back by where I was sitting, glanced at me and said: 'I had a confab awhile ago on religion with a fellow up here on deck and I want to see him again.' 'Well,' said I, 'I guess I am the fellow.' 'Why, I didn't know ye,' said he; 'you've got your hat off.' Then I realized that I had been doing all this talking and preaching with my hat on! He said he wanted to show me the pictures of his two little grandchildren and to tell me that he hoped that I wouldn't think him in every respect bad. Ah, my hearers, my heart gave a leap for the cause of the blessed Jesus which I had tried to uphold. Ah, thought I, his conscience is galled from his late experience in trying to belittle all that is good of this day and age, and he is trying to make amends for it. I looked at the pictures and talked to him the best I could to make a friend instead of a foe of him, and I think I succeeded, for at the moment of separation, at the landing, where we were all to disembark, he took me to one side and asked me to advise him about a boarding house and the best way to use a few spare days, etc. From that hour's talk until the end of the two or three days' voyage my time was taken up with explanations of our plea, and in making many new acquaintances, quite a number of whom were pleasant indeed; but my resting spell was completely used up in the old gent's assault on me, but I do not look back upon that experience with any degree of regret that such was the case."

The Other Side.

There is a large and increasing class of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who will not rest satisfied with the sentiments expressed by B. B. T. under the caption, "The Possession and Use of Property," in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for Aug. 4.

Let it be understood that we esteem B. B. T. as a brother beloved and a father in our Israel, but at the same time maintain with firmness that his sentiments regarding the rich do not answer to the urgent call of property reform.

"Abraham," says he, "was rich, Isaac was rich, Jacob was rich. Their descendants now possess enormous wealth. The obituary of David in the Holy Bible reads as follows: 'He died in good old age, full of days, riches and honor.' David was full of days, full of riches, full of honor. And it is said of his son Solomon that he 'passed all kings of the earth in riches.' * * * There is not an intimation that in the possession of wealth they sinned. Jesus spoke of them, but not to condemn on this account."

These men were also polygamists and slave-owners, yet where is the intimation in the Bible that such semi-civilized practices were not all right? What kind of use is this to make of Bible history, anyway, to make its record of an imperfect moral society seem to be the sanction of God on practices far below the level of the true ideal?

The writer continues: "Paul's knowledge of the gospel came by special revelation. He was not taught by man. The Lord Jesus instructed Paul. In his doctrine he correctly represented his Master. It is the opinion of some students that Saul of Tarsus was a gentleman of ample means. He said much about money—its use and abuse."

Poor Paul! We were shocked recently by being told that in Athens he "trimmed" his discourse to suit his audience, and now, for a purpose, he is classed with the rich—a millionaire, perhaps! It may be that he had a monopoly of supplying the Roman army with tents and got immensely rich by a wise "management." Hear his words of burning sarcasm and indignation:

Already are ye filled, already ye are become rich. Ye have reigned without us. Yea, and I would that ye did reign, that we might also reign with you. For I think God hath set forth us the apostles last of all, as men doomed to death. * * * Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling-place; and we toil, working with our hands (1 Cor. 4:8-12).

As poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing and yet possessing all thing (2 Cor. 6:10).

This is the "gentleman of ample means;" and listen to what he says:

Godliness with contentment is great gain, for we brought nothing into the world, for neither can we carry anything out; but having food and covering we shall be therewith content. But they that desire to be rich fall into temptation and a snare and many foolish and hurtful lusts, such as drown men in destruction and perdition. For the love of money is the root of all kinds of evil; which some reaching after have been led astray from the faith, and have pierced themselves through with many sorrows. But thou, O man of God, flee these things (1 Tim. 6:7-11).

Hear James, who was also instructed by the Lord Jesus:

Hearken, my beloved brethren, did not God choose them that are poor as to the world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which he promised to them that love him? But ye have dishonored the poor man. Do not the rich oppress you, and themselves drag you before the judgment seats? Go to now, ye rich, weep and howl for your miseries that are coming upon you! Your riches are corrupted and your garments are motheaten. Your gold and your silver are rusted, and their rust shall eat your flesh as fire (Jas. 2:5, 6; 5:1).

And to quote the writer, "This is in perfect harmony with Jesus when said:"

Woe unto you that are rich! for ye have received your consolation. Woe unto you that are full now! for ye shall hunger (Luke 6:24, 25).

We make these quotations of Scripture to show how easy it may be to plead on both sides of a question if we choose to pursue the [such] methods. It is an improper use to make of the Bible, and no one should know this better than the venerable brother who has thus used it in making a special plea.

The great need of the day is not an apology for wealth or an eulogy on poverty, but the earnest and complete preservation of God's truth touching social and economic righteousness, that a public conscience may be created which will undo so much of the present industrial system as makes it possible for a few men to become immensely rich at the expense of the laboring people. And it will never be done by mild repetitions of commonplace precepts touching the duties of the rich to the poor and to the general public.

There are many rich sinners in the churches who have gotten their wealth by robbing, or the inheritance of spoil, who will applaud these precepts and even wipe the tear of sympathy from their eyes at the portrayal of human misery and need, and flatter themselves that they are doing great things in the way of benevolence, but let an attempt be made to change the conditions whereby the masses are shut off from access to the natural sources of wealth and they will become as thoroughly enraged as the steady-going religionists who brought Jesus to the cross!

Iowa Letter.

Usually Iowa sends a delegation of fifty or seventy-five to our National Conventions. This year it must be much smaller. I did not go, and I hear of hardly a dozen who are there from our state. Among these are H. O. Breeden and wife, W. W. Williams and daughter, Miss Jessie, Capt. M. T. Russell and wife, Mrs. D. A. Wickizer, Annette Newcomber, D. F. Givens, and J. M. Lowe, all of Des Moines; A. F. Sanderson, of Keokuk, Sumner T. Martin, of Mason City, and W. A. Moore, of Webster City. Of course Cedar Rapids has its usual delegation there, but I have not learned the names.

The thirteenth annual convention of Iowa Christian Endeavorers meets in Marshalltown on October 25th to 27th. Our workers have a goodly share of places on the program. I. N. McCash, of University Place Church, delivered one of the three evening addresses. It is entitled, "The Hill We Climb." E. L. Leek, of Prescott, speaks on "Popular Amusements." Pastor C. C. Rowlison, of Marshalltown, conducts a Bible study and leads a meeting at another time. D. A. Wickizer has charge of our ("denominational") rally. Alice M. Wickizer conducts a conference on Missionary Committee of the Y. P. S. C. E. It is generally conceded that one of our brethren should have the presidency for the coming year. Des Moines has chartered a special train for the convention.

The October number of the Christian Worker, H. O. Breeden editor and Geo. A. Jewett manager, gives an extended account of the institutional work of the Central Christian Church. Dr. Breeden while abroad made this kind of work a special study. For years he has been observing it and in his church work practicing parts of it. But now he and his helpers have launched a complete scheme. The departments mentioned in the Worker are as follows: Reading Room, Bible Studies, Sewing School, Cooking School, Day Nursery, Gymnasium and Bath Rooms, Music, Language and Elocution. His officers and teachers are competent and determined. Dr. Breeden realizes the dangers and extremes into which this kind of work is liable to fall and has safeguarded it on every hand. Send to him for his neat pamphlet giving full sketch of his work.

Hermon P. Williams, late pastor at Ames, now Chaplain of the 51st Iowa, came home on furlough and has gone again, but not alone. Miss Beulah McFarland, of Iowa City, took upon her the Williams name and goes with her husband to the Philippines next week. If he has as good a wife as she has a husband, it is a match—a splendid match. God bless them on life's journey.

Mark Williams, brother of the chaplain, has also been home on account of sickness.

Allen Hickey, the Iowa correspondent of the Oracle, has gone to Camp Presidio, California, to see his grandson, who is sick. The dear boy is also of Co. F., 51st Iowa.

My work until Jan. 1, 1899, is as follows, unless some dates are changed: Oct. 23rd, dedication of the enlarged house at Fremont. More than $1,000 has been expended on the renewing and addition. Oct. 30th, dedication of the new house at Central City in Linn County, followed by a short meeting. In November I hope to dedicate at Eddyville and at Anita. At the latter place I will follow with a meeting which may last till the new year.

Bruce Brown, of Chicago, late of Iowa, is rejoicing over 100 additions to the West Side Church since his work there began.

Ex-Gov. F. M. Drake was elected president-emeritus for life by the late Iowa convention.

R. E. Dunlap, of Washington state, attended the Iowa convention and spent a few days with me in Oskaloosa. He then went on to Missouri to visit with Simpson Ely and other friends and relatives. I have known Bro. Dunlap since 1882. It was a great privilege to renew our acquaintance. He is a famous man in prohibition work as well as in other gospel work. He preached one sermon in Oskaloosa, which was greatly enjoyed.

Last week Mrs. Geo. Turner, of Marshalltown, passed away. This is a great loss to a beautiful and a hitherto happy home. She leaves a noble husband, a lovely daughter and a promising son to mourn her departure. A host of friends will mourn with these. But a beautiful hope—a hope as strong as beautiful—will sustain them.

Mrs. C. C. Rowlison, of Marshalltown, will conduct a great Sunday-school rally in Oskaloosa on Oct. 30th. A. M. HAGGARD.

The Bible College at Columbia.

Are the members of the Christian Churches of Missouri awake to their educational opportunities? It is difficult to believe they are. What are the facts?

It is not my purpose to call in question the usefulness of other colleges, or to interfere in the slightest degree with any support they may command. Indeed, I should like to know that all our colleges in the state are in a most prosperous condition. There is no need for rivalry with respect to any of our institutions. There is room for all, and there is use for all, provided they can secure the necessary support. But it must be apparent to the merest tyro in educational matters that too much division, in this respect, is as bad as too much division in anything else. It is better to have one or two good colleges, thoroughly equipped and liberally sustained than to have fifty half-manned and half-starved. Nevertheless, the plea which I am about to make has little or nothing to do with the other colleges of the state. The "Bible College of Missouri" occupies a unique position. Its work does not come in conflict with other colleges at all, but practically supplements them. This will appear evident to any one who will take the trouble to investigate the facts of the case. The time has come when these facts should be clearly made known.

During the two years and a half of the Bible College's existence 467 pupils matriculated, without counting the present year's enrollment. At the close of the present year the grand total will not be less than six hundred. This, I venture to say, is the best showing ever made in a similar institution; and yet this number might have been increased very largely, if I had encouraged the attendance of young men who wished to take the Bible study, but who were not sufficiently advanced to enter the University, or else did not care to take academic studies at all. I could have had a hundred young men at this time in the Bible College studying for the ministry on the following conditions:

(1) These young men to be allowed to enter the Bible College without taking academic work at all, or else taking only a partial course in the University.

(2) These young men to be supplied with preaching stations, or else some other means secured by which they could pay their way while at Columbia.

(3) These young men to be guaranteed the Bible College diploma within two years, provided they should make reasonable progress.

Now I want the brethren of the state to know that I have rigidly set my face against this whole business, and expect to discourage it as long as I occupy the position I do. Indeed, I do not hesitate to say that I prefer to have one single student each year studying for the ministry, who will at the same time take the academic course in the University, than to have a hundred less than half-educated young men who are seeking the advantages of the Bible College as a sort of introduction and recommendation to a ministry which must, in the present age, be largely a failure, though it may answer the ends of an ambition which has neither the courage nor the insight which is necessary to eminent success.

These remarks must not be construed as in the slightest degree reflecting upon the brave, earnest and useful preachers who have done so much to make our reformatory movement wha it now is, notwithstanding many of them have had little or no academic education, such as is within the reach of every young man who now aspires to the ministry. The men who served the past generation cannot serve the present one. We must now have an educated ministry or we cannot hold our place in the van of religious movements.

What, then, can be said in favor of the Bible College at Columbia? This much if nothing more: It has placed at its disposal, for academic purposes, a University with an equipment which would cost at least five millions of dollars. Now, if it can be shown that the use which we may have of this University serves us better than if we owned it ourselves, surely that fact alone ought to justify the location of the Bible College near to it. If we owned the University we should have to find the money and the men to keep it going; we should have all the anxiety of investment, management, discipline, etc., etc. But none of these things trouble us now. We have all the advantages with none of the disadvantages. If there are any blessings we have these "without money and without price;" if there are any troubles the University authorities must dispose of these as best they can—we have nothing at all to do with them.

It is simply impossible to provide a University like this unless we have millions of dollars to invest in it; and yet, without something equal to it in educational facilities we cannot educate our young men for the ministry in a manner commensurate with the needs of the age. The time for our little half-equipped colleges has passed. We have reached the day of great universities. Whoever does not understand this fact fails to perceive the most prominent characteristic of the age.

What, then, will our brethren in the state do? The usefulness of the Bible College could be almost immeasureably augmented if we had suitable buildings erected upon the lot which has been purchased for that purpose. Considering the number and wealth of the brethren in this great state it is difficult to understand how a problem like this can remain unsolved for a single day. It seems to me that there ought to be a spontaneous contribution of at least a hundred thousand dollars to this enterprise the moment our brethren in the state can be made to understand its importance. Other religious people are already planning to take possession of this important field. The Presbyterians and Baptists may soon be here. We are already on the spot.

Possession is not only nine points in law, but it is more than nine points in this case. We must not lose our opportunity. What do our brethren in the state say to these things?

A Love Feast of Evangelists.

DEAR EDITOR:—I wish to tell you about a love feast which was held in the Chamber of Commerce, at Chattanooga, one night, after the regular convention session. It was one which will make history. Evangelists were the participators, principally, but there were many sympathizers present.

It is well known that for years past our papers have permitted thrusts at evangelists to appear from time to time. No names, of course, have been mentioned, but in some instances the references were too plain to be mistaken. The word "professional" as applied to evangelists has become a common club which numerous disgruntled pastors use with evident delight. The result is seen in a widening breach between pastors and evangelists. It is worthy of note in passing that not one of our leading evangelists has ever written one word for publication detrimental to any pastor or the pastoral relation, but on the other hand hundreds of "write-ups" have appeared from their pens commendatory. There is no doubt now and then an unworthy evangelist. But are there not unworthy pastors? And because some weak brother belies his profession occasionally, must the many noble men who have given the best years of their lives to the rallying of thousands of souls to the cross be branded wholesale as a class that will bear watching?

Again, there is a little fad springing up in favor of what is termed spiritual revivals. No additions, but a good, sweet little time with the church folks, pastors of other churches participating, etc. Such meetings always have and always will prove failures, not even accomplishing their advertised purpose in many instances. Any pioneer preacher among us can vouch for the statement that there is nothing in this world that will so edify a congregation in every way as a genuine, old-fashioned protracted meeting, with scores of additions.

But, arguments aside, a number of us came to the conclusion that if evangelists were an excrescence, fit only for the pruning knife of public opinion, or to change the figure, an expensive piece of unnecessary furniture in the house of God, the sooner we all quit the field and assume pastorates the better. Many have already done so from various reasons, and the rest are willing to do so if it is wrong to continue the work they have been trying to do. In order to arrive at some understanding of the situation, a meeting was called at the Walnut Street Church for four o'clock on Monday afternoon, at which all evangelists and those interested in evangelists were

The woman who is weak, nervous, tired and exhausted; who has a poor and variable appetite and no strength or nerve; who suffers from pains and aches, dragging down and burning sensations; and who recognizes, herself, that she has become irritable, cross, blue and despondent, is in almost every case suffering from weakness and disease of the delicate and important organs that bear the burdens of maternity.

Thousands of women suffer in this way and do not recognize the cause, or if they do understand their condition, neglect it rather than submit to the obnoxious examinations and local treatment insisted upon by the average physician. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a wonderful medicine for women who suffer in this way. It does away with the necessity for these trying ordeals, and may be used in the privacy of the home. It acts directly on the delicate organs concerned, and makes them strong, vigorous and healthy. It banishes the discomforts of the expectant period and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It transforms weak, nervous, petulant invalids into happy wives and mothers. Thousands of women have testified, over their own signatures, to this fact. The "Favorite Prescription" may be procured from any good medicine dealer. Any woman who will write to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y., may have the advice of an eminent and skillful specialist without charge.

Mrs. Cora M. McLaurin, of Rockport, Copiah Co., Miss., writes: "I had displacement and inflammation of the uterus. I was under the treatment of our family physician for a long time, but received no benefit. I had falling of internal organs with ulceration and enlargement. I commenced using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, 'Golden Medical Discovery,' 'Pleasant Pellets' and 'Extract of Smart-Weed.' From the first day I began to improve, and in a short time I was able to do all my housework. If it had not been for your medicines I would have been dead long ago."

Stomach and liver troubles with sluggish action of the bowels are cured by Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

assured a welcome. A goodly number attended this meeting, among whom now recall J. V. Updike, S. M. Martin, H. F. MacLane, Victor W. Dorris, B. B. Tyler, E. C. Browning, C. G. McNeil J. P. Lichtenberger, W. J. Wright, J. G. M. Luttenberger, E. W. Darst, A. McMillan, T. S. Buckingham, G. A. Hoffmann, N. S. Haynes and O. P. Spiegel. J. V. Updike was called to the chair and Geo. F. Hall was elected secretary of the meeting. Two hours was consumed in a general discussion, which at times became quite warm. A committee of four was finally appointed to draft a plan of organization and report at the adjourned meeting mentioned in the first paragraph. The committee, which consisted of S. M. Martin, H. F. MacLane, Victor W. Dorris and Geo. F. Hall, met and deliberated, and at the meeting reported that it seemed to them unwise to create another organization, feeling that it would only accentuate the difficulties existing and widen the breach already too wide. But it was urged that the pastors and evangelists ought to get together at every General Convention and talk over their work with a view to a better understanding of each other and the creation of warmer ties of fellowship. It was also the sense of all present that we ought to have representation on each annual program. Our people are pre-eminently an evangelistic people, and our evangelists are perhaps doing more than any other class of workers to foster the interests of all departments of our co-operative work, and yet an address on evangelism is an unheard-of thing in one of our national gatherings. S. M. Martin, therefore, offered the following resolution, which was carried unanimously:

That it is the sense of this meeting that we ask for at least thirty minutes on the annual programs of our General Convention for the presentation of the subject of evangelism by one of our leading successful evangelists.

Bro. B. L. Smith, secretary of the Home Board, suggested that no doubt hereafter our gatherings would be so large that we would be obliged to break up into sections, and he saw no reason why we should not have a half day for a general conference or open parliament, and it is hoped that such an arrangement may be effected for our Jubilee Convention next year. At this juncture of the meeting extremes began to meet, and the feeling prevailed that bygones should be bygones, and evangelists and pastors should fully realize that their work was one. Bro. Smith proposed a few prayers, and we had them—petitions of power, full of the spirit of our common Master. It was a veritable love feast. Long will those tender moments be remembered by those whose good fortune it was to be present. Long will the influence of that hour continue to sweeten and vivify the work of the consecrated men whose voices blended in the Lord's prayer as the final petition.

Bro. Lichtenberger at our afternoon meeting proposed that we take a collection and put up a banner in the auditorium—"100,000 souls for Christ in our Jubilee Year." The money was forthcoming, and the banner looked down on the assembled host the next morning. It is worthy of remark right here that two years ago our statistical secretary reported our gain at 80,000. One year ago it had dropped to 47,000. This year only 40,000. With our increased facilities every way and growing popularity as a people this is not as it should be. May not the clash between pastors and evangelists have had something to do with the decrease? But let us hope that we will never hear any more of this. God forbid that we should ever cease to be evangelistic to the utmost. God forbid that we should ever regard any work so great as that of soul-gathering and soul-saving. It is an age of specialties. There is a place for the man who devotes his entire powers to evangelistic effort. May the specimen not become extinct through torture, but may there be a mighty increase in the numbers of those who will adorn the profession of true, pure, high-grade evangelism. GEO. F. HALL.

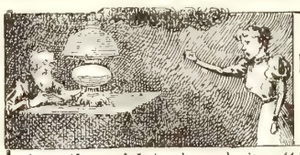
Are We Overloading?



In a previous article we pointed out what seems to be a dangerous tendency in evangelical churches. In some of these churches it sometimes requires as much time to make the announcements for the week as it formerly required an apostle to preach a gospel sermon. One of the results of this crowding process we think is to dishearten church members and to scare away sinners. A few saints may have grace enough to stand the pressure, but the ordinary church member and common laborer whose time from Monday morning to Saturday night is required to earn bread for his family will not likely keep spiritually warm under the load. But we have other burdens than those mentioned, to which we invite attention in this paper.

We mention, first, the care of the poor. Somehow it has come to be generally believed that it is the duty of the church to assume the entire care of the poor, the sick, the unfortunate, the widow and the orphan. This is certainly a dangerous doctrine. Much of the poverty, distress and suffering in the land comes from bad legislation and legalized evils. To make the church a dumping ground for the results of corrupt legislation and corrupt governments has not the shadow of righteousness in it. And for godless politicians to run governments in such a way as to grind out a continual stream of paupers, dependents, widows, orphans and others, expecting churches to care for them and then decry Christianity should they not care for them is a species of audacity too brazen, base and barbarous to be for a moment conceived of as a part of any civilization, much less of Christianity. The state should care for its own products, and if the burden is too great, let the proper steps be taken to decrease it and not put its bad results on the church under the name of charity. Such a doctrine let loose would soon of itself become a burden which all the churches combined could not carry.

That such poor ones should be cared for until such conditions can be prevented is unquestionable, and that church members should share in the burden as citizens of the state is just, but that the church should assume the whole burden of caring for all that the operations of unjust laws or legalized evils have made poor, sick, unfortunate, husbandless and fatherless in the land, is neither reasonable nor just. This is the function of the state, and the churches have burdens enough of their own without assuming these at present alarming ones. The churches should inculcate that spirit in the hearts of their communicants and of all people that builds homes, hospitals, institutes, schools and other charitable institutions for the unfortunate, but they ought not to be expected to assume the entire cost of building and maintaining such institutions.

Neither should the churches be made cities of refuge for those reduced to penury and want by the oppression of capital, syndicated or otherwise. For organized capital to press wages to a point below living expenses and then expect the churches to supply to these pinched laborers their lack through charity is to put Christianity to a test that is out of all reason. The church should not be called upon to help men to work at starvation wages for the convenience and profit of capital. Capital should have more conscience than to crowd the wages of its employees to a point below the actual necessities of life with the expectation that the churches will supply the lack through charity or look after the results. Christianity teaches men to be economical in their living, but not for the sake of those who employ labor. The mercenary spirit of capital sees this and seeks to take advantage of it, but it should not be so indulged. The sense of justness is not very strongly developed in a business firm that will work men for years at barely living wages and then when unable to work from sickness turn them over to the sweet charity of the churches or of the community. For humanity's sake the churches assume burdens of this kind, but they are not morally bound to play the role of a mule train for the convenience of capital, neither are they able to carry the load. The churches can be more helpful to the world in other ways.

Another danger that should not pass observation in this discussion is the number of incompetent preachers who are getting their living off the churches. Some churches have a rule of hiring the cheapest preacher that comes along, and this becomes an inducement for men who cannot earn a living at anything else to preach. It is a common saying that ignorant and lazy men seek the ministry. Such a man is an imposition upon a church or a community. Some of them are sincere, no doubt, but sincerity is not the only qualification needed for a successful ministry. A man who will leave his family in destitute circumstances to preach the gospel violates one of the first laws of nature and of the gospel, and it is an imposition upon any church or community to have to support such a man and his family. The greatest burden of these men to the churches, however, is not the salary they receive so much as it is their hinderance to the gospel. They put Christianity in a humiliating position before the world.

These remarks apply also to professional preachers. Men should not go into the ministry for a living. It is an imposition upon the churches and a hinderance to Christianity. There are other callings as divine as the ministry.

Next to an excess of incompetent and professional ministers carried by the churches is the overproduction of denominational schools. They are generally called colleges, seminaries and universities, but many of them scarcely rank with the public high schools of the cities in which they are located. But few of them have a living endowment; most of them have no endowment at all. In many cities there are a number of these rival schools. There is probably not a religious denomination not burdened with more schools of this kind than they are supporting or can support. Here again a closer co-operation with the state would be more wise, efficient and economical. State and church schools have too much in common to justify so complete a separation as now obtains.

But probably one of the heaviest and most discouraging burdens of the churches to-day is the vast accumulation of unconverted material which they have taken aboard. This dead weight is composed of those who have joined the church for the loaves and fishes, for society, for a cloak for their sins, for influence or for gain. They themselves are not burden bearers, but burdens in their hinderance to the cause they profess to have espoused. This burden upon the churches is enormous, and unless leavened or thrown overboard may lead to serious results. And now we leave the question, Are we overloading? for you to answer. We have tried to present the situation as it is seen and discussed in the lower ranks. In our next we shall point out another from this point of view, seemingly hindering cause, to wit, harmful antagonisms.

Texas Letter.

F. N. Calvin, of Waco, after a long pastorate in that important city, resigns his work. There is some talk of his leaving the state, which we hope is not true, for we need just such men in this new field.

B. B. Sanders takes the field as financial agent under the state board. His former success in this sphere inspires the hope that our mission work will now receive a new impetus. Sanders is a strong man, well known and much loved, and we expect this hope to be realized.

J. V. Coombs, of Indiana, is assisting C. McPherson, of the First Church of Fort Worth, in a good meeting. We are glad to have a new man from that region come down into "Dixie," and we hope he will come again.

The death of Dr. Henry Biddle, our medical missionary to Africa, is a sad thing to all, but especially to us down here in Texas. His companion, Ellsworth Faris, a Texas boy, and son of a Texas preacher, is now left alone in the heart of the Dark Continent; and yet he is not alone, for God is with him. Our prayers go out for the sorrowing ones who have lost a loved one, and for the brave, consecrated boy, bereft of his colaborer.

J. F. Newton, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Paris, has resigned and united with the First Christian Church, of that city. He is a young man of twenty-two years, and graduated at Hardy Institute in 1893, and at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, of Louisville, Ky., in 1897. Bros. Faris and Holsapple, who know him well, speak in high terms of his character as a man and of his power and promise as a preacher, and say that his investigations after truth have led him to take this step. We bid him a hearty welcome and wish him the greatest success in his new field.

At Georgetown recently an old man went forward and grasped the hand of the preacher, Bro. Naylor, his own blind son, and made "the good confession." It was a most affecting scene. This reminds me that my father made this confession after he had passed his threescore and ten years.

The San Antonio church, under the direction of their pastor, Geo. B. Ranshaw, has organized a Gentleman's Aid Society, which holds regular prayer-meetings for men only. The ladies of the church abbreviate the title, and smile when they call it the G. A. S. Society.

Miss Bertha Mason, of Houston, becomes C. W. B. M. organizer in place of Dr. Olivia Baldwin, who returns to the foreign field. Miss Bertha is popular, consecrated and industrious, and hence will succeed.

R. B. Harwood, one of the Central deacons, has a godly house. He and his Christian wife train their children in the nurture of the Lord. A beautiful evidence of this was seen in the Sunday-school a few days since. The baby was taken to the school the first time. She was much interested and seemed somewhat disappointed, and after gazing all about the room, she looked into mamma's face, and asked, "Mamma, where is Jesus?" She had heard so much about Jesus in connection with the Sunday-school and church that she expected to see him there.

S. M. Martin, the beloved evangelist of California, is in his second meeting with us at the Central Church. He was here six years ago, and we had a fine meeting. We are hoping for a better one now, and it begins well.

The Bethany C. E. Reading Courses.

The management of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses takes pleasure in announcing that the second year of its regular work is openir g under very favorable auspices. Although there have been some unavoidable delays in issuing the books for the second year's readings, they are now ready for delivery, and they will sustain the high standard set by the handbooks for the first year. In planning these reading courses, the attempt is made to give a bird's-eye view of each field, in the introductory handbook for each course, and then to take up in each field for special study the subjects of most value and interest to our own people; just as an intelligent traveler visiting Boston, for instance, would first ascend the Bunker Hill monument to secure a bird's-eye view of Boston and the bay and the surrounding towns, and then descend to give special attention to points of special interest.

In pursuance of this plan, our introductory book to Bible study entitled, "A Guide to Bible Study," gives a bird's-eye view of the entire Bible, from Genesis to Revelation. Its sixty-six books pass in rapid review under the skillful hand of Professor McGarvey. Our introductory book to the study of missions, prepared by A. McLean and entitled, "A Handbook of Missions," gives a bird's-eye view of Christian missions from New Testament times to the present. It is a masterful condensation and presentation of this profoundly interesting subject. It has been pronounced by competent judges the best book of its kind in the English language. Our introductory handbook to the study of our own plea for a return to the old paths, gives a bird's-eye view of the religious conditions necessitating the plea, the heroic pioneers who made it, the principles which guided them, the success which attended their labors, the subsequent rapid growth of the movement and its present status. This handbook was prepared by B. B. Tyler and is entitled, "Concerning the Disciples." It is an excellent summary. These are the three books with which all readers should begin. One dollar pays for a year's subscription to the Bethany C. E. Bulletin, a sixteen-page quarterly, and these three books. All orders should be sent to the Bethany C. E. Company, 798 Republic Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

The handbooks of the second year, present subjects of chief interest in our three chosen fields. In our Bible study, for instance, we take up the life and teachings of Jesus, and use the handbook bearing that title, prepared by Professor H. L. Willett. The handbook is divided into two equal parts: Part I. presents the life of Jesus in its outward activities, and Part II. presents a summary of his incomparable teachings, grouped under such titles as "Jesus' Teachings Regarding God," "Jesus' Teaching Regarding Man," "Jesus' Teaching Regarding Himself," "Jesus' Teaching Regarding the Kingdom," "Jesus and Judaism," "Jesus' Teaching Regarding the Future," "Jesus' Teaching About the Holy Spirit."

The mere mention of the subjects ought to awaken a widespread desire to read this handbook. In our study of missions for the second year, we have a handbook entitled, "Missionary Fields and Forces of the Disciples of Christ." This handbook has been prepared by that devout student of missions, our own W. J. Lhamon. This handbook tells what we are doing, where are doing it, through whom we are doing it, and how we are doing it in every department of our missionary enterprises at home and abroad. Never before in our history have we had such a complete and concise presentation of our missionary fields and forces. In addition to its charming narrative concerning our own work, it has five brief but admirable chapters on the various forms of religious faith and superstition which confront our forces on foreign fields. In our study of the Disciples for the second year, we have a handbood entitled, "Sketches of Our Pioneers," prepared by F. D. Power, of Washington City, and who among us is better fitted to write such a handbook? It is a graphic rehearsal of our heroic period. Before us pass Stone, the Campbells, Walter Scott, followed by John T. Johnson, John Smith, Samuel Rogers, the Creaths, Bently, Henry, Raines, Hayden, O'Kane, Goodwin, Hoshour, Mathes, Allen, Hopson, Lard, Burnet, Richardson, Shepard, Pendleton, Bullard, Coleman, Shelburne and Isaac Errett. How important that all our people, old as well as young, cherish the memory of these eminent servants of the Lord! Who can estimate the value of such a study to our young people and to the cause which they must soon represent before the world? These handbooks and the Bethany C. E. Bulletin are sent to any address for one dollar. All orders should be sent to the Bethany C. E. Company, 798 Republic St., Cleveland, O.

It would be a great mistake to limit these readings to our Christian Endeavor Societies and to our young people. They are suited to all. They deal with subjects concerning which all our people should be informed. These handbooks are meant to create a demand for larger and more exhaustive works. They are placed at the lowest possible price, in order to put them within the reach of all. The plan of reading undertakes to utilize the spare moments in busy lives so as to enrich them with definite knowledge. Even where circles cannot be formed, these readings can be successfully carried on. Many pastors are finding it very helpful to preach on the subjects presented in the handbooks, and thus sustain the interest of the members of the churches in their private reading. In many places the C. W. B. M. auxiliaries takes oversight of the work. In a few places the Bible reading is carried on in connection with the Sunday-school. The management of those courses has no stereotyped plan to suggest, but prefers leaving that

FOR YOU

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common-sense way, that is, by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

in its details to the judgment of those concerned in our local societies and churches. While the year begins nominally on the first of October, the readings may be taken up at any time. Those who are not able to take all three courses are at liberty to select one or two. Pastors who have not already done so are requested to bring this whole matter to the attention of all their people at once, and then, as promptly as possible, send in their reports to the Bethany C. The Rainy River Colony.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST:—"Quite a few" (as the Canadians say) have asked me why some people who come to join our Rainy River Colony leave never to come back. In answer I will say, there seems to be many reasons, some of which I shall try to enumerate. First, some come to get homes (we all come for that), but their idea of a home is a place to sit down and rest and warm their feet and eat a hearty meal when they are hungry. They don't find it (none of us do), and the task seems to be so tremendous to conquer this vast domain of wilderness that they prefer to return to where they can enjoy the fruits of some one else's labor. Second, in opposition or antithesis to the lazy ones there are some who are entirely too industrious. They think they can move the earth without Galileo's lever (if they have plenty of borrowed capital), so in spite of warning to the contrary by the old settlers they scatter their money broadcast, buying everything in sight except things needed for cultivating the soil, and expect the land to bring them an income above expenses the first year. But when they find they have planted potatoes on the flat land instead of the rolling, and they can't borrow a plow to cultivate them only when it is too wet or the flies are too bad for anybody else to work, by and by they become discouraged and seek some one (Adamlike) to blame for their failure. Their "business complications" in distant parts demand their immediate attention, and they sell out (and give away) at a great sacrifice, the purchaser reaping a great harvest on account of this folly.

Others come expecting to find use for a kit of carpenter, cabinet or blacksmith tools, or painter's or paper hanger's outfit; and some even seem to expect a "call to preach" at a good salary. Now the fact is, the "woods are full" of the sort of carpenters we shall need, for awhile at least, and we have no objection to men of any trade or profession coming among us who can lay off their long coats and plug hats, and swing the axe till the forest is changed to the field and the product thereof into material of which to make houses to paint and paper.

But no doubt some are caused to go off disappointed by not finding what overzealous friends of the enterprise have led them to expect. For instance, one man having been here in winter writes of the beautiful, level roads, and says "the land is so much like prairie in places that it can almost be mowed without a bit of clearing," but when they see the roads almost as bad as in any other new country and what was thought to be prairie is mush they are discouraged and see nothing they can admire. One has come here on the advice of a man who has been all over the continent nearly—"Go North, by all means, and avoid the insect pests;" and when he sees the flies and mosquitoes fully as bad as they were in Illinois and Indiana he almost wishes to exchange them for the centipedes and and tarantulas or even scorpions of Texas, for he thinks he has been deceived. Then again, when men come expecting to find a hack line, boarding house and sawmill in full operation and are compelled to walk out from Emo to a town site with not a stick amiss, and find no place to get a meal or even lie down and rest, they almost wish they could do as the Quaker did when he laid aside his broad brim and gray coat till he whipped a man that told him a—falsehood. But be patient, dear brother. When that promise was made the promiser really hoped to have these things, but those of us who have had the work to do have had our hands full helping to make the roads and get a little clearing done so as to put up our houses. We have made the start and the line is ready for the hack, and the boarding house is in process of construction, and we hope to have the sawmill in the near future. There is a great future for this country, and we ought to take advantage of this opening to make ourselves felt as an important factor of that future. To this end we should be very careful not to make any mistakes. Don't come for selfish purposes alone, and if we can't "endure hardness as a good soldier" we are not fit for a new country. Neither should we become so zealous as to overstate anything in connection with it. The plain, simple truth is what we as a people plead for, and when that is told every honest, industrious man will know he can have a home on the best of soil in a country very suitable for such an enterprise, with a climate as fine as can be desired.

Yours in Christ, J. CAREY SMITH.

Seventh Anniversary.

Last night the members and friends of the Main Street Christian Church, Mason City, Ia., gathered to celebrate their seventh anniversary. The house was full, the enthusiasm high, the rejoicing great, and never did a church have more reason for devout joy and gratitude. The year has abounded in blessings and peace, and good-will and activity has reigned supreme.

The report showed an increase of 237 new names during the year, 27 letters have been granted and six have passed over the river; net increase of 204. There were 693 names a year ago, making a total membership now of 897. Of these, 175 are non-residents. The clerk's report showed a steady and rapid growth since the organization, October 25th, 1891.

The treasurer's report showed that a little more than $3,500 had been raised and about $150 was paid to missions, not going through the regular channels. This is an increase of contributions of about $1,000 over last years. Added to this the amounts collected by the different departments of the church—Bible-school, C. W. B. M., Junior and Senior Endeavor Societies and Aid Societies—swells the offerings to a grand total of over $4,200, or an average of over $80 each week for the whole year, or about $5 from each man, woman and child in the congregation.

This is the more remarkable when it is remembered that there is not a rich man in the church, but that nearly all are in very moderate circumstances. The auditing committee reported the books and accounts of the clerk and treasurer carefully examined and everything found correct.

The Bible-school report showed an average attendance of officers 90 per cent., of teachers 82 per cent. In these two facts is the secret of much of the success the school has achieved. The total attendance for the year was 11,493, an average of 297 per Sunday. Ninety persons on an average carried a Bible each Sunday and the same number studied the lesson. The total receipts of the school were $291.83, or nearly $6 each Sunday.

The home department was organized in January, with 10 visitors, in as many districts. They have secured 109 scholars who agree to study the lesson at home. These have given $8.83. This work reaches the shut-ins and those unable or unwilling to attend church school, and no department of the school promises better results for the future.

The baby roll is another new departure. Already fifty babies are enrolled, thirteen under one year, twenty-one under two years and twelve under three years, and four who have passed their fourth birthday and will be ready for the primary class next year. The babies have contributed $1.04.

The three missions under the fostering care of the church were then reported. Bro. Walter L. Martin, the pastor at Lincoln and Burchinal, reported these. The Lincoln congregation has contributed $193.82 since their organization December 26 with forty-six members.

The Southside mission Bible-school was reported by the secretary and treasurer, Miss Ida Poyfair. The school was organized March 20, 1898. There has been an average attendance of sixty-two and an average weekly offering of 71 cents. Other money was received from socials, picnics, etc., making a total of $74.70 for the seven months of the schools existence.

The assistant pastor, Walter L. Martin, made some appropriate and feeling remarks at this point, explaining that his health made his resignation imperative. He expressed his high estimate of the church, and his enjoyment in its services. He leaves next week for his home in Kansas; then he goes to Vacaville, Cal., to begin his new work, the third Lord's day of November. There is universal regret at his departure. His character and services have endeared him to the whole church.

Mrs. Jennie Long sang a beautiful solo, after which Mrs. Hastings read the report of C. W. B. M. The auxiliary has ninety-five members and has contributed $150 for missions this year.

The Y. P. S. C. E. was reported by the secretary, Lola M. Martin, and shows a membership of ninety-one and $62.61 raised.

The Junior C. E. report was read by Alice Drake. It was of the most cheerful nature, showing a membership of one hundred and twenty-one, the largest in Iowa, and offerings for missions, Home and Foreign of $46.47. Mrs. Height is the efficient superintendent.

The two ladies' aid societies reported $115.96 raised, besides a large amount of charitable work done among the poor. Their latest gift to the church was the railing around the pulpit platform, and a most elegant set of pulpit furniture.

The pastor's report showed 150 sermons preached, 10 lectures delivered away from home, two protracted meetings held, 1,500 pastoral calls, 203 persons baptized, 35 received by letter, 13 marriages and 17 funerals. About $500 was contributed for missions. It is believed the church was never in better condition. He urged redoubled diligence for the coming year, and that the church should advance on its knees, with its hands in the hand of Omnipotence.—Mason City Times.

A Preacher Wanted.

Bro. W. T. Henson, who has served the church here for the past five years has resigned to take effect with the close of the year. Under his able ministry the church has prospered in all departments. Never in the history of the church has it had a preacher that was more popular with church and people. We regret to lose him and his faithful wife. The church will be open for engagement with some good man for one-half his time.

Sulphume has a vaporous and volcanic sound to it, and it certainly seems destined to "blow up" many of the nostrums that are accepted as remedies by this confiding public. Being the liquid form of sulphur obtained by a special process, known only to the Sulphume Co., Chicago, it has a genuine merit that was familiar even to our grandmothers. It is the one and only "blood purifier" that was never known to fail.

A New Circular.

David Husband, pastor of the church at Olivia, Minn., has designed a new circular for advertising a protracted meeting which they are just beginning with C. M. McCurdy, State Evangelist, preacher, and T. A. Meredith, song leader. The circular contains the names of all kinds of business in the form of a cross, with Christ over all, and Scripture references to principles upon which each should be conducted. It is unique and suggestive. It illustrates applied Christianity.

Jacksonville, Fla.

The Christian Church in Jacksonville, Fla., has recently secured a most excellent lot in a central part of the city, and will enter upon preparations to build in the near future. The lot procured is a very valuable one and most admirably located. It has a dwelling on it which will be remodeled and used for the present as a place of meeting and until the church is ready to build. Although but six months old, this church is manifesting much enterprise and is already wielding a marked influence in Jacksonville. There is a constant increase in attendance and the most favorable comment is heard from those attending the services. The church will be known as the Adams St. Christian Church.

Dedication.

On Lord's day, Oct. 16, I preached the opening sermon and dedicated a new and beautiful house of worship at Glen-Easton, Marshall county, W. Va. We raised money enough, cash in hand, to pay all debts, besides a handsome list of pledges, which can be used for church purposes. It was a day of mighty triumphs for the church at Glen-Easton. Several other new houses are being built in this part of West Virginia. A bright day has dawned upon the cause of primitive Christianity in West Virginia and the churches are making commendable progress.

Nebraska District Convention.

The meeting of the 10th Nebraska district was held at Gering, October 14, 15. This is a large district; some 17 counties, with but few churches and fewer preachers, so that the cause is not in the best shape. The attendance was small, but we have a few good workers. The convention went off smoothly. The office of corresponding secretary was left to be filled by the board when a suitable person can be found. Bro. B. F. Thomas, of Crawford, was selected as district organizer. Gering, Neb., is in need of a preacher. Bro. J. M. Eads has resigned and expects to go to Denver. This would be a good place for some young man who could accept small things and be willing to grow up with the cause.

Sound Preaching.

The Pike County Democrat, Pittisfield, Ill., speaks of the line of fruitful work being done by R. F. Thrapp, pastor of the Christian Church of that city:

The series of evening lecture sermons now being delivered by Elder R. F. Thrapp, of the Christian Church in this city, is attracting large audiences and proving of special interest to those who hear them. The general subject of the series is, "The Land and the Book." They deal with a new line of evidence to the authenticity of the Bible. Last Sunday evening he showed the exactness existing between the physical characteristics of the land and the statements of the book. Those to follow will deal with some of the wonderful discoveries made in Palestine, corroborating the facts of the book. They exhibit wide reading and much research in the realm of scientific discovery.

Those Church Institutes.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Dear brother, it is not often that I write for publication, but a short article in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Oct. 20, by Bro. F. N. Calvin, of Waco, Tex., entitled "Institute Work Among the Churches," attracted my attention in a special manner. I have for years observed the chaotic condition in which many of our churches have fallen. We have congregations of several hundred members without influence and hardly capable of doing any good in their present condition. The "big meetings" we have been having for more than a decade have added numbers to the faithful, but have failed to add force to the churches in proportionate measure. The rocks have been quarried out by the blast, but they have not been builded together and fitted in the great temple. Builders, and not hewers; drillmasters, and not recruiting officers is the present need of the church.

I have for a number of years practiced law and preached in the neighborhood on Sundays. And while doing that I took an active part in politics, and have learned to appreciate the wisdom of organization and order. I have been preaching regularly for these last two years, and feeling the necessity of a more complete organization in the churches I have prepared a series of discourses along the line suggested by Bro. Calvin.

I hope that the successful Waco preacher may soon launch himself out on this new phase of the Lord's work and that others may follow.

Board of Education.

The cause of education among us never did receive more or livelier attention than at the recent national convention in Chattanooga. The acting board of directors and the general convention supported the board's request for more representation on the state and national convention programs. Hereafter one full session (that is, a morning or afternoon or evening) will be devoted to the discussion of educational problems among us. This, as stated in the report, is not out of harmony with the original plan of Mr. Campbell, who felt the need in his own day of a common meeting-place where the cause of education, together with the cause of missions, would be defended. If this need was felt in that early day when all educational interests centered in one college under Mr. Campbell's personal supervision, how much more imperative is the need to-day when our colleges are scattered all over the country under varied conditions, and in accordance with various demands. The convention also felt and President Zollars in his address adequately proved that education is fundamental to missions, and is therefore appropriate to a missionary convention. The educational board appreciated the support which was given by so many of our prominent men in the attempt to give education its rightful place among our other interests.

Then the board was allowed a day in which to have the interests of education presented to the public through the pulpits of our people.

The board has selected the first Sunday in July as Educational Day. Special literature preparatory to this day will be sent to all preachers and a general attempt made to "educate our people upon the subject of education." The early part of July is especially good because just then the men of the college faculties are free to go out in behalf of education and at the same time, the young people are making arrangements for the fall school work. All of this organization and agitation means much work now and ultimately a man to devote his whole time to the work.

The new board at its first regular meeting appointed Mr. Hiram Van Kirk as secretary. During the summer he carrted on this work during the absence of the regular secretary and is therefore well acquainted with the purposes of the board. Mr. Van Kirk's extensive training and successful experience as a preacher make him especially capable both to conceive large things for education and to wisely bring these interests before our people. The board bespeaks for him the hearty support of all our preachers in any attempt he may make to help the cause of the Disciples by more fully bringing to our attention its educational interests.

Hiram College Jnbilee Endowment.

The great popular movement to adequately endow Hiram College on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary, through the courtesy of our religious papers has been inaugurated. The call for the army of 50,000 persons who will give from $1, to $1,000 for this great object has been made. The claims upon which this great call is based have been fully presented. In view of Hiram's past history, its work, its financial management and its traditions it is certainly worthy of all that it calls for; and the indications strongly point to a successful issue of this great movement. Already several hundred names have been secured. We confidently expect that before this article appears the first thousand milepost will have been passed. Do not neglect this matter or put it off for a more convenient season; send in your name at once. You can decide on the amount that you will give later, and if in the end you only choose to give $1, you will still have the satisfaction of feeling that you have given your name and influence in one of the most important movements that has been presented to our great brotherhood. The adequate endowment of our colleges is the most pressing matter that is before us at the present time. No money given in the line of benevolence will yield such returns in good accomplished. Send us your name. "He who speaks quickly speaks twice."

The New Watchword.

The new watchword coined by the Chattanooga Convention for the Foreign Christian Missionary Society is: $150,000 for Foreign Missions in this, the Jubilee Year. The receipts last year were $130,925.70, or a gain of $24,703.60. A gain this year of $19,074.30 will insure the $150,000. Let us make the Jubilee Year memorable by large offerings for world-wide missions. It is not too soon to begin planning to reach the $150,000. The friends of this cause should send personal offerings at once. Every church, Sunday-school and Endeavor Society will rejoice to have fellowship in this divine enterprise during this glad year. It is hoped many thousands of dollars will be turned over to the Foreign Society on the annuity plan. F. M. RAINS, Treas.

A Wonderful Endeavor Meeting.

The church at Murphysboro, Ill., is taking on new life. I was called here five weeks ago and have been very busy during this time in organizing and arranging our forces for work. We have about 175 members in all, some of whom have grown cold, which is but natural when a church is without a preacher. We have some faithful and earnest workers as I ever saw, and they are strong in "the faith."

We have a splendid church building, fully up to date in all of the modern conveniences. I have given each separate week to some one of the departments of our work.

Last week was given to the Endeavor work. Our society had dwindled to 21 members. In one week we added 32 more to our number, and eight or ten more names would have been given in but for sickness. Sister Lena Reynolds, the president of the society, proposed 15 names at the last meeting. Next Sunday we expect not less than 15 more. We are now ready for a protracted meeting and intend to begin next Lord's day. Pray for us and the work, that we may have a large ingathering.

W. H. WILLYARD, Minister.

State Mission Notes.

One of the important actions of the Chattanooga Convention was the appointment of a general State Mission Day, so that every state in the Union will take its offering at the same time, AND THIS STATE DAY IS THE FIRST SUNDAY IN NOVEMBER.

We believe this was a wise action, as it tends to the unification of our work, and it ought to bring about such an awakening on the importance of State Missions as will push this great work into a much greater prominence than now obtains. We must interest the people, not simply the ministers; we must interest the whole people, not simply a few. More and more we are being compelled to depend on the apportionment from the churches. When in 1892-'3 contributions for State Missions reached their high-water mark of $11,104 $2,450 came from life memberships alone. Bro. Quigley was financial agent and collected $2,467.48, and there were six general evangelists in the field whose collections were included in the money credited to State Missions, and this was $2,578.40. There was also in that year $662.45 credited to the State Mission treasury as being spent in St. Joe, making a total of $5,108.33. Then there was the annual members and the money raised at state convention, and district and county co-operations, so that the amount coming from the churches at large was not so great as it is now.

Now we have no financial agent; we employ no evangelists, whose collections swell the aggregate of the funds. Attempts to obtain life members are often met with the statement that they are paying through the churches, and the county and district conventions are, some of them, saying the same thing when asked for a collection for our work. Our receipts from life members last year is only a little over $600. We have no credits from St. Joe, like we had in 1892-'3, yet we raised more money than we did last year.

But the amount raised is totaly inadequate to the work to be done and we must enlist a larger number of our churches in the work of State Missions. Think of it: one church in Tennessee, and it is not a wealthy one, gives $500 for State Missions and to other missions in proportion. But it is not the large sum from the few that we are so anxious to obtain as a contribution large or small from every member of every congregation in the state.

Hence this National State Day has been appointed, and it is a good thing that it coincides exactly with the action taken by the Nevada convention, which recommended that the Missouri State Day be changed from the first Sunday in January to the first Sunday in November. Now let the preacher arm himself with facts concerning our great work and go before his people and present them and ask them for the apportionment. Let us put Missouri State Missions where they belong—in front. We are strong enough numerically, we are strong enough financially, to take the front rank in all this land in Missouri enterprises, and the more we push State Missions the more able we shall be for all other enterprises of like character. Let the rally cry of Missouri churches through November be—MISSOURI TO THE FRONT! Yours in His Name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

Light Bearers, gifts by individuals in behalf of a Band or Society, or other moneys, when sent to the Builders' Fund, be credited toward the payment of the shares apportioned to a Band or Society.

That a certificate of membership in the Builders' Fund, on which shall be inscribed the number of shares paid for during the year, shall be awarded to each organization paying for one or more shares.

That our young people be urged to make "a silver offering for the silver anniversary," giving their money toward their shares in the Builders' Fund; and that every young person giving one dollar for this work shall be awarded a certificate which shall be prepared for this purpose; and that the names of those securing these certificates be published in Junior Builders.

That the National Banner be awarded to the state that pays for the greatest number of shares above its apportionment; or, if no one succeeds in going beyond the apportionment, that the banner be awarded to the state that comes nearest reaching it.

That the basis of enrollment upon the Roll of Honor, i. e., that a Society or Band make a larger offering to our missionary work during the current missionary year than it did last year, remain unchanged.

That the Junior Builders be enlarged so that each number shall contain twenty pages, the size of its present page.

That the support of the children in the new orphanage be recommended to the Intermediate Societies especially; and that all the young people be urged to bring this important work to the attention of Aid Societies, King's Daughters' Circles, Sunday-school Classes, and similar organizations; and also that they urge individuals who are able to do so to undertake the support of one of these children.

That the orphanage, schoolhouse and sickward building at Deoghur and the dispensary at Mahoba, India, be builded as soon as possible; that the needed repairs in Jamaica be granted, and that the $1,500 asked for for the chapel at Oberlin be allowed if $300 additional be raised on the field; and that such other needed buildings be erected as the Builders' Fund will provide for.

That great attention be given to the work of organizing new Societies and Bands, and that untiring efforts be put forward to win those already existing not co-operating with the C. W. B. M. into fellowship with the Young People's Department, and that earnest efforts be made to secure a greater interest on the part of the Auxiliaries in the work of the young people.

Our Gray-haired Pastors.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Dear Brother—With great pleasure I observe that the attention of the brethren is being called to the existing condition of things in our midst with regard to our older pastors. The fund for the assistance of these tried and faithful pioneers of the Restoration movement, is practical evidence of our interest in and thought for them, and it certainly deserves greater prominence and larger support from our brethren. God bless the dear old men who have done so much to prepare the way for us to do more, and imbue us with the grace of giving to their assistance. But it is of the pastors referred to in your last issue (Oct. 20), gray-haired but unimpaired for Christ's service that I wish to write here. The disposition complained of, to shelve older men and to call in younger men to the pastorate, is neither local nor peculiar to any body of Christians, but rather to the present age in all Christendom, with, of course, a few happy exceptions. That it is unscriptural and un-Christlike, we all know, who give the matter due consideration, but a remedy for the wrong it is not perhaps easy to prescribe. Might it not be well, however, to search for the cause, finding which we may be better able to determine the best method of dealing with the trouble. There are perhaps two reasons why young men are in such demand, the first of which is economy. Many congregations are seeking a pastor, or rather a preacher, without having adequate means to support one, hence they call a young man, who either has not prepared himself for the work, or has just emerged from college, because they can secure his services cheap. The churches partake very much of the spirit of the times, and want their religion, like their drygoods, done up in bargain lots, and young untried men are eager to make an engagement at a salary that would not support a pastor with a family. But the second and chief reason for the neglect of older pastors for younger ones, even though the latter should dearer than the former, is the preponderance of young people in official positions and in the councils of our congregations. While it is true that the church for centuries sadly neglected the young people, it is equally true that the church of to-day has gone to the other extreme and given the young people undue prominence and importance, to the serious injury of the church as a whole. I do not lay the blame for this state of things at the door of the young people; it is probably the result partly of a reaction from the former condition, and partly of apathy and indifference among the older brethren. But from whatever combination of causes it comes, the result is an unevenly balanced church, and the result of this result is that the young people who largely control the congregations, will not have any but their own style of men for pastors, hence the neglect of the older men. Is there a remedy for this state of things? Undoubetedly there is. How is it to be accomplished? By getting more of the love of Jesus in our hearts, so that all, both young and old, will readily submit to whatever is for the honor of Christ's name and the advancement of his cause. How shall we secure this spirit of love? By thinking constantly of all that Jesus has done for us, of his great love to us; and then by thinking of the service that these older men have rendered, and the invaluable experience they have acquired. We shall be led to recognize their true work as pastors, and to continue them in the work until they are totally disabled. Another feature of this question is that many men are really worn out before they ought to be, because they commenced work too early. They were too impatient of training time, and the church was not careful for them. I honestly believe that for every year that a young man spends in active preaching before he is twenty-five, he loses two or even sometimes more years after he is forty. Let us begin to take more care of our young students, and instead of calling them to preach, give them full time and opportunity to prepare for their life work, and the next generation will rise up and call us blessed, for having preserved to them pastors of rich and ripe experience combined with vitality and power. Yours, J.

Over in Kansas.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I am taking a vacation from my home (Eureka, Kan.) congregation for a few weeks to attend the Kansas state meeting and to do a little work under the direction of the Kansas state board. I find Kansas conventions, boards and field superintendents, especially O. L. Cook, fully abreast of the times and wide awake. Am endeavoring to save the cause at Arkansas City—big debt, no pastor and a bad case of blues. One confession last night. Give us your prayers. Yours in the faith,

The churches of Jasper County met together two evenings and a day, Oct. 26th, 27th, at Webb City. Bro W. T. Hacker, the pastor, and his charge entertained royally, and there was a joyful time and a profitable. Bro. Abbott infused much of his "missionary conscience" into the meeting, and as always, was just the man for the emergency. The second evening the house was crowded and a deep interest manifested. The young people were in charge, all were enthused. Next meeting at Jasper City. District convention here Nov. 28th-30th. Fourteen counties, don't forget.

Changed Churches.

On last Lord's day, 23rd inst., the Rev. John A. Copeland, a prominent Methodist minister, was baptized by Bro. A. R. Miller, pastor of the old South Side Christian Church, Tonawanda, N. Y. The following local notice of the event appeared in the Evening News, of this city:

Rev. John A. Copeland, formerly a Methodist, was baptized last evening by Rev. A. R. Miller, of the South Side Christian Church. Rev. Copeland preached a very acceptable sermon to the congregation. He is well known as one of the most eloquent ministers in Western New York. He will enter the missionary field.

Bro. Copeland expects soon to visit the Middle and Western States, and it is hoped that the brethren will accord to him that Christian greeting due to his calling in the Lord's work. E. EVANS.

Evangelistic.

INDIANA.

Ladoga, Oct. 24.—Our meeting one week old. House crowded and many turned away. One confession to date. We expect a grand meeting. My singer, Prof. C. M. Hughes, can be had for another meeting before the close of the year. We have a large chorus class, with piano and cornet, and the music is one of the interesting features of the meeting. —W. T. BROOKS.

Jeffersonville, Oct. 25.—M. Myers has just closed the most interesting meeting in the history of our church during which a number of our most prominent citizens were baptized. Bro. C. C. Cline led the music. Bro. Myers is now holding a meeting at the Clifton Heights Church in Louisville. — HAYES L. SEWING.

Seymour, Oct. 27.—Our meeting here goes grandly on over all opposition. Voted last night to build at once. Will be here for two or three weeks longer. Last week I was called to Lexington, Ky., to solemnize the rites of matrimony between Mr. Jessie, of Bowling Green, Ky., and Miss Maye Taylor, sister to W. B. Taylor, of Chicago, and niece to the writer.—H. C. PATTERSON, state evangelist.

Morocco, Oct. 24.—There were two more additions to our church last Sunday afternoon. Our cause is growing rapidly in this community; 22 members have been added by baptism since we began our labors with this congregation in June, and 70 during the preceding year. We have not arranged definitely for our meeting in Morocco this fall, but expect to have it in November. The church house will no longer accommodate our Sunday-school, so we contemplate building in the spring.—R. L. CARTWRIGHT.

Franklin, Oct. 28.—Eight were buried with Christ in baptism at my last visit to Mt. Gilead. Our young people organized a Y. P. S. C. E. The first collection taken for Church Extension. Twenty have been buried with Christ during the month at the three churches for which I minister.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

CALIFORNIA.

L. Swindle, of Glendora, reports 24 additions to the church at that place during the past year.

MICHIGAN.

Shepherd, Oct. 25.—Just closed a three weeks' meeting at Clay Hill with 20 additions; five from Methodists and Methodist families. Left work in a prosperous condition.—MEADE E. DUTT, district evangelist.

MISSOURI.

Trenton, Oct. 23.—Three additions here since last report. I declined to entertain a call from the church here for another year. My work close with the year. The church is united and a good field for a good man.—GRANVILLE SNELL.

Lamonte, Oct. 24.—There have been six additions here since last report.—KING STARK.

DeKalb, Oct 24.—Our meeting at Wallace, Mo., was closed by the blizzard. Commenced meeting yesterday; one confession at morning service and one at night. Hope for large results.—JNO. P. JESSE.

Macedonia, Oct. 24.—Just closed a good meeting of two weeks, which resulted in 18 accessions; 13 by baptism and five from other churches. The preaching was done by Eld. W. A. Hopkins, of Liberty, Mo., and was with power and sympathy.—RICHARD OWINGS.

Paris, Oct. 23.—I held a ten days' meeting with the church at Illinois Bend, Adair Co., but had to close on account of bad weather. Have just received a telegram calling me back to continue the meeting; will return on next train. We had 31 additions up to the 15th Oct.; 25 by confession.—JACOB HUGLEY.

Bro. Winders, of Columbia, is assisting Bro. Phillips in a protracted meeting at Fulton, with large audiences and 14 additions to date.

Kansas City, Oct. 28.—Our meeting in Sheridan is booming; 70 additions and prospects fine for more. This is in the Nodaway Valley district. Bro. E. E. Lowe, who will graduate from Drake University in June, is pastor, and is aiding. His work has made such a meeting possible. I hope to give this district the best years of my life.—T. W. COTTINGHAM, district evangelist.

OKLAHOMA.

Oklahoma City, Oct. 24.—Coombs and Hunsaker are assisting O. P. McMahan in a meeting here.—A. O. HUNSAKER.

UTAH.

Ogden, Oct. 24.—We had one addition this week. Our work in this difficult field is doing reasonably well.—J. H. BAUSERMAN.

ARKANSAS.

Hebron, Oct. 20.—There were three added to the church at Gurdon in a meeting just closed.—E. S. ALLHANDS.

Springdale, Oct. 27.—At the morning service on Lord's day, Oct. 23rd, there were nine accessions to this congregation; three by letter and six by confession. At prayer service last night there were three confessions and seven baptisms. We have recently added a splendid brick baptistery, which was largely the gift of our brother, Prof. J. H. Shinn. We are greatly encouraged to go on.—CHAS. E. FREEMAN.

ILLINOIS.

Colchester, Oct. 23.—Our meeting closed after four weeks with 25 additions; 20 were by baptism. Bro. D. J. Elsea helped me the last two and a half weeks, and I recommend him to any one wanting the assistance of singer.—F. M. BRANIC.

Watseka, Oct. 26.—Four have been added to our numbers here during the last two weeks. The mission Sunday-school in West Watseka is full of promise; S. F. Swinford is superintendent and L. F. Watson assistant superintendent; both splendidly equipped men.—B. S. FERRALL, pastor.

Champaign, Oct. 28.—Baptized two at Ludlow recently.—DR. W. FRANK ROSS.

Clay City, Oct. 24.—Am in a meeting here two weeks old. House full of people, town full of prejudice, and myself full of rheumatism. Sixteen baptisms to date.—W. E. HARLOW.

Sumner, Oct. 27.—I closed a 10 days' meeting at Bone Gap, Ill., on the 26th with 13 accessions; 10 were heads of families.—FRANK S. HALTONE.

KENTUCKY.

Junction City, Oct. 22.—My meeting at Junction City resulted in 31 additions. The preaching at Mt. Vernon resulted in 19 additions. I am now in a meeting at Petersburg.—IRA M. BORWELL.

Stanford, Oct. 29.—Twenty-six additions to date. My next meeting will be with Bro. Geo. H. Combs in Kansas City, Mo.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

KANSAS.

Council Grove, Oct. 24.—One confession yesterday. We will protract over 30th if not longer. Much better prospect for success than we had in our eight days' meeting in August, which resulted in six baptisms. The membership here is 12 larger than at the begining of my work, early last June. O. L. Cook will be with us 26th, 27th and 28th.—J. A. WALTERS.

Mina, Oct. 20.—F. L. Pettit held a meeting for us closing, Oct. 2nd, with 11 additions. We generally had a full house, especially at the close. Bro. Pettit held a meeting for us about a year ago with 21 additions.—H. F. DETWEILER.

NEBRASKA.

Arapahoe, Oct. 28.—I spent the third Lord's day in October with the brethren at Stanford in Harlan County. Had two additions; one from the Baptists and one confession. I am now ready for protracted meetings wherever I may be called. Address Arapahoe, Neb.—C. F. EVANS.

MINNESOTA.

Cleveland.—Our meeting closed last night with a full house. Results of meeting, 25 added by letter, statement and confession besides results that cannot be estimated. We go to Le Sueur.—S. GREGG, T. H. SWEETMAN.

Let Me Try.

Wise Duty moves me to believe
'Tis noble only to achieve;
Attempting draws a blessing nigh
To brave the hearts of all who try.

What if life-storms dissolve in air,
Our luring prospects growing fair?
There's peace defeat cannot deny
To bless the unknown souls who try.

One's great as what he tries to do,
And good as his conviction's true;
Men gauge us by the heights we scale,
But God by what we try, tho' fail.

If others soar the topmost height,
And we've not wings for lofty flight,
Let's climb the summit ere we die,
And learn God helps the weak who try.

No earnest effort proves in vain,
For e'en through failure's fires we drain
The dross that cankers sterling worth,
And leaves the purest coin of earth.

If marble shaft do not proclaim:
"He lives immortal here with Fame,"
This nobler tribute's not denied
To any striving soul: "He Tried!"

Text Stories—XVI.

THE OBEDIENT TEST HIS PROMISES AND FIND THEM TRUE.

BY ALICE CURTICE MOYER.

And being fully persuaded that what he had promised he was able also to perform.—Rom. 4:21.

"Standing on the promises that cannot fail,
When the howling storms of doubt and fears assail,
By the loving Word of God I shall prevail,
Standing on the promises of God."

The clear tenor of the young lawyer, whose office joined that of Judge Black, was most pleasing; but the judge smiled at the sentiment of the song.

Then came the chorus:

"Standing, standing,
Standing on the promises of God my Savior;
Standing, standing,
I'm standing on the promises of God."

"Standing on the promises of God, indeed!" exclaimed the judge. "I wonder what Smith has gained by it. I have never stood on them and yet I am called a successful man. How much of my wealth did God help me to gain? Not one cent. I have stood alone. I am under obligations to neither God nor man. I have earned every penny I possess alone and unaided. I ask no favors and extend none."

"Foolish man!" whispered the still, small voice of the soul. "To whom do you owe the health, strength and ability by which you have been able to gain these possessions?"

The judge shrugged his shoulders, and at this moment there was a tap at the door and his young neighbor, whose custom it was to consult with his elder and wiser friend on knotty problems of the law, entered.

The judge looked up, saying: "You seem happy this morning, Smith."

"I am always happy," was the reply.

"I believe you are. Would you mind telling me the secret of such happiness?"

"Not in the least. I don't believe I ever was one of the gloomy sort; but the date of my real joy began when I attended a funeral several years ago."

"A funeral!" echoed the judge.

"Yes; the funeral of Old Man Sin."

"Oh, I see!" said the judge, smiling. "You mean that your happiness comes from being a Christian."

"I do."

"Well, Christianity may be very well in its way. But what is there to be gained by it?"

"Life eternal."

"Oh, pshaw, Smith! You know what I mean. What is there to be gained from a worldly point of view? What have you gained by it? You are not rich."

"Not in the treasures of this world; no."

"You are unknown."

"Save to him who said: 'I am the good Shepherd and know my sheep, and I am known of mine.' "

"Are you Christians not rather conceited to feel so sure of your footing?" asked the judge.

"We are told to be ever ready to give an answer to every man that asks a reason of the hope that is within us."

"Oh!" said the judge; and then, after a moment's silence:

"Speaking of reasons, let me hear some of your best personal ones for being a Christian. I have plenty for not being, but I am willing to hear your side of the case."

"Well, some of the reasons that now come to my mind are, because I cannot live without Christ in this world of sin and sorrow and disappointment. I need his Spirit to keep me joyous and sweet-tempered and to give me patience in cross-bearing; because it would be dishonoring the Heavenly Father to refuse to accept the salvation he has provided for us; because religion makes me a kinder husband, a more affectionate father and a better citizen; because the Christian life is the only truly successful life and the only life that will lead me to eternal happiness. I may be always unknown; I may be poor always; but what will it profit a man to gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

"You talk like a preacher, Smith; and I believe you are sincere, but it must require a great deal of faith to believe all this."

"Faith is one of the great Christian requisites. Indeed, we must have faith; without it we can do nothing. But believing that God's promises are sure, he will do according to his Word to them that keep his commandments. Knowing this, the Christian does not fear to undertake anything wherein he sees that good may come of it. By faith he removes mountains of difficulties; through faith he steps right out on the promises of God, and of course he cannot fail. Like Solomon he can say, 'There hath not failed one word of all his good promise.' To wholly believe in him is to sojourn in the 'land of promise' where, through faith, we are led on and on, reaping the bountiful harvest that faith alone can yield."

"Well, Smith, I can but admire your sincerity. No doubt you believe all you profess, but you are simply laboring under a delusion. I cannot see wherein I am remiss; I have never cheated anybody out of a penny; I am not a willful liar; I am a moral man. What more can you ask?"

"One thing yet thou lackest — obedience."

"And that is something I will not render if it means all this nonsense and fol-de-rol that it takes to get into the church. I stand on my morals, and when the time comes I expect to fare as well as anybody else."

The young lawyer's face flushed with feeling. Judge Black was a valuable friend. Dare he risk the loss of his friendship, the loss of his influence? Could he risk all in the defense of the cause he loved? Feeling that he must speak, 'though the heavens fall,' he said:

"My dear sir, you have been a good, true friend to me, and I thank you for it, but I must speak, and I trust you will understand that I mean no disrespect. First of all, I must tell you that the old theory of standing on our morals is worn threadbare—too threadbare to call forth the arguments that always destroy it. Second, that the expression of such a sentiment not only involves the utter lack of any consciousness of ill desert, but shows forth a most deplorable narrowness and shallowness of nature. What must be the condition of the man who is content to measure himself by his fellows, who rests perfectly satisfied in the belief that he is just as good as the rest of them, and expects to fare as well in the world to come? What a despicable display of self-righteousness! The Pharisees are not all in the church, my friend. Good-by."

Desperate cases require heroic remedies. All the argument on earth, as his young friend well knew, would not have had half the effect on this arrogant, self-sufficient man that these few words of righteous indignation had.

He sat perfectly quiet for a time, feeling decidedly small. Then, stepping to the door and locking it, he began a mental introspection of himself. He held himself up in all his littleness, and saw himself in all his narrowness. He weighed himself in the balance and found that he was sadly wanting.

"Smith is right," he said as last. "I acknowledge it. Strange I never saw it before. 'As good as other people,' indeed! What flimsy excuse! How little I must seem in the eyes of broad-minded people! How little I seem in my own eyes! However, as there is no convenient augerhole in which to conceal myself, the next best thing I can do is to become so large with new resolves as to burst this old shell of Pharisaical self-satisfaction and to come forth into the light of a broader life and of future usefulness. If the good Lord will accept me at this eleventh hour and will show me what to do, henceforth I, too, will stand on his promises." Then, for the first time since childhood, a prayer passed his lips:

"Lord, consecrate me to thy service.
Whate'er I have is no longer mine;
My life, my all, henceforth shall all be thine."

The sequel can be easily guessed. When we reach a point at which we can sincerely say, "Here, Lord, take me; let me no longer be a cumberer of the earth," we are going to do some good in the world. Like Judge Black, we are going to dig up our talents, rusty from long burial, and use them in the service of the Lord.

Even though our faith at the beginning may be small; as we try God more and more and find that he is indeed able to perform all that he has promised, our mustard seed of faith will grow until it is like unto a great tree of spreading, fruit-laden branches, inviting the passer-by to find shelter thereneath and influencing all who come near to consecrate themselves—their wealth, talents, occupation—to the great cause of Christianity; to sojourn in the "land of promise."

Just Laura Ann.

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

It's not because she's pretty,
And it's not because she's good—
For I've known her, at times, to rouse the neighborhood—
It's not the golden in her hair,
The heaven in her eyes—
Though sometimes you can see it dawn, a sweet surprise—
Not for this I love her well,
For no reason I can tell,
Except that she's Just
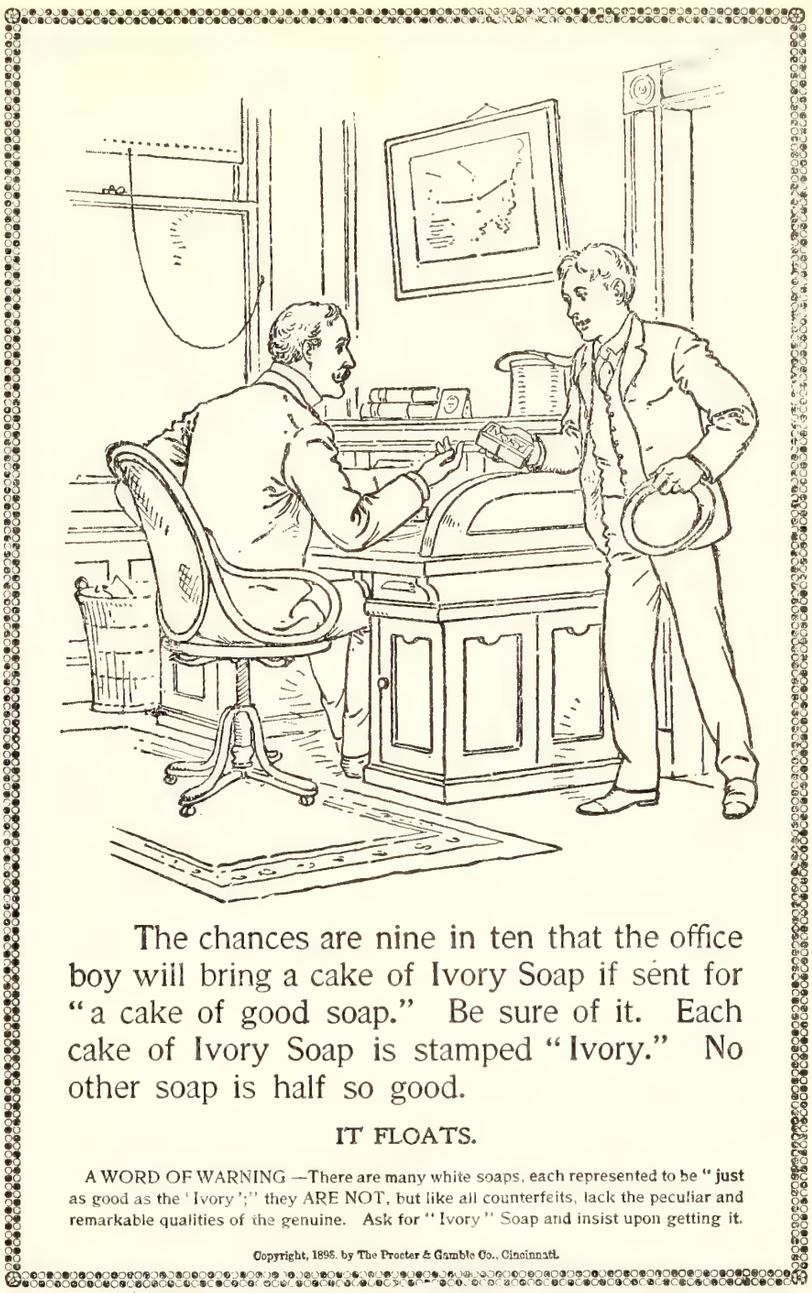
Laura
Ann.



I have three other children;
The oldest one is ten—
As steady as the government is Ben;
And Fanny minds the baby well,
And never does complain,
Though she's but eight—when sitting long is pain.
The baby dosn't cry,
And that's the reason why
It's strange how I began
Loving so much
My Laura
Ann.

She cried straight from her birthday,
Till she was two years old;
Then all the sicknesses in town took hold.
And she destroyed more furniture
Than any other tot—
Needed more spankings which she never got;
Tore, broke, and would declare
She didn't care!
Till it was strange a man
Could put up with Bad
Laura
Ann.

When she gets so very headstrong
That she won't obey command,
The neighbors look they'd like to lend a hand.
And she's got the name of being
The worst child in the town,
For five years old, and has the crossest frown.
The kinfolks say how Ben
Will make the best of men,
And the baby—only wait!—
Will be famous in the state.
And they kiss my little Fan,
But no word for Poor
Laura
Ann.

But when the day is over,
From labor I am free,
Who do you think comes, climbs upon my knee¿
Who puts her arms about me
And shows the last sore place—
Tells how she fell into her last disgrace?
With head upon my breast,
Says she loves "papa" best,
But "mamma" just as well—
s there any need to tell?
No other than Just
Laura
Ann.

The Slanderer.

J. W. LOWBER.

Evil-speaking, which is the language of the Bible for slander, is a crime of the deepest dye; it is cruel and properly ranks with theft and murder. We frequently hear these epithets, describing its malignity: "To rob one of his good name;" "to stab one's reputation;" thus stealing, slandering, stabbing, are closely associated in guilt.

In the slanderer you will always find the presence of a malignant spirit. It is a premeditated purpose to work ruin of character. The slanderer does not appreciate character as he has none of his own. He is extremely shy of his nefarious conduct. He shrugs the shoulder, and secretly acts out the villainy which he has not the courage to utter. He will quietly pour into your ear vile and detractive language, which is calculated to injure another, without letting you know the wicked intent. There is nothing meaner than the effort to injure another without the possibility of benefit on your part.

The slanderer frequently does his cruel work under the guise of friendship, as Iago proceeds to awaken suspicions on the part of Othello. The foul aspersions of the serpentine Iago against the guiltless Desdemona, so graphically pictured by the great dramatist, are realized almost every day in the drama of human life. The demoniacal person under the guise of disinterested friendship, stimulated with base envy, will sometimes cause great injury to the most innocent persons. It was through envy that the Son of God was slandered and delivered up to be crucified. If the Master was thus slandered, it is not surprising that his disciples meet with a similar fate.

The slanderer has not even one redeeming feature in his character. His work is one of selfishness, maliciousness and evil intent. A young man starts with fair prospects in life, but the slanderer determines if possible to defeat him. All at once, in a quarter vital to his prosperity, some adverse influence begins to operate. It is some time before he discovers that the poisoned breath of the secret slanderer has been doing the work. It is difficult for me to form a conception of a worse demon than the man or woman who, through envy, will secretly try to injure another.—Christian Courier.

A Geographical Rhyme.

The brewers should to Malta go, the Boobies
all to Scilly;
The Quakers to the Friendly Isles, the Furriers
to Chili;
The little crying, caroling babes, that break
our nightly rest,
Should be packed off to Babylon, to Lapland or to Brest.
To Spithead cooks go or to Greece, and while the miser waits,
His passage to the Guinea Coast, Spendthrifts are in the Straits.

Spinsters should to the Needles go, Wine-bibbers to Burgundy, Gourmanda to lunch at Sandwich Isles, Wags to the Bay of Fundy,
Bachelors to the United States, Maids to the Isle of Man;
Let gardeners go to Botany Bay, and Shoeblacks to Japan.
Thus emigrate and misplaced men would then no longer vex us,
And all who are not provided for had better go to Texas.

The Influence of Flowers.

Flowers not only are nature's "sweetest gift to man," but their fragrant presence quickens all the better impulses of the human heart. Philosophic students of natural laws are coming more and more to recognize the importance of the part played by environment in the drama of life, and of all the softening influences which may be found along mankind's rugged pathway, none possesses quite the power which it is given to flowers to wield.

The rythmic ripple of the smooth-flowing river charms never so soothingly as when its way lies between banks overhung with foliage and flowers. As the same river becomes a raging torrent, rushing madly through mountain gorge and canon, in impatient haste to reach its mighty destiny, the sea, suddenly its turbulence is quelled as it glides, none the less swtftly by reason of its noiselessness, through some flower-bedecked plain.

And so we find the mightier current of passion and desire which flows from every human heart yielding to the holy influence of flowers as it will to nothing else in all its environments. The man so fortunate as to have the fragrance of a flower-garden among his boyhood memories may be touched and softened through the medium of flowers, whatever the bitterness and iconoclasm the weary way of life may have forced into his heart. Even death, the universal conqueror, loses his arrogance as he sees the sting of his victory relieved by the flowers offered as the last tribute of love for the departed.

Flowers are always evidence of the rpesence of the spirit of kindness and purity, and the homes in which they are grown are homes where refinement and happines reign. The constant increase of interest in floriculture is the strongest possible argument in support of the belief that the world is growing better.

"The mission of flowers is to ennoble and unlift," we are often told, and it follows that those who extend in any way the borders of the floral kingdom are engaged in work that will tell forever for the benefit of human kind. Remember, then, that the pleasure you derive from your flowers is by no means the full measure of the good they may do. Whether it is in the crowded window of a poverty-stricken tenement or in the magnificent conservatory of a mansion, a collection of flowers is ever the source of an iufluence of purity, kindness and justice, which will extend afar, like sound-waves, if it is but given the opportunity.

"Not useless are ye, flowers, though made for pleasure,
Blooming in the field by day and night,
From every source your presence bids me treasure
Harmless delight.

"Your voiceless lips, O flowers, are living preachers;
Each cup a pulpit, every leaf a book,
Supplying to my fancy numerous teachers
From loneliest nook.

"Were I, O God, in churchless lands remaining,
Far from all voice of teachers or divines,
My soul would find in flowers of Thy ordaining, Priests, sermons, shrines."

—How to Grow Flowers.

Kings of England.

Those who have once learned this jingle, which gives the names of England's kings and queens since the Conquest, have, no doubt, found it very useful. We suggest to teachers especially the helpfulness of such aids to memory as this old rhyme:

First, William the Norman, then William, his son;
Henry, Stephen and Henry, then Richard and John;
Next, Henry the Third, Edwards one, two and three;
And again, after Richard, three Henrys we see.
Two Edwards, third Richard, if rightly I guess;
Two Henrys, sixth Edward, Queen Mary, Queen Bess;
Then Jamie the Scotchman, then Charles, whom they slew,
Yet received after Cromwell, another Charles too.
Next, James the Second ascended the throne;
Then good William and Mary together came on;
Till Anne, Georges four, and fourth William all past;
God gave us Victoria—may she long be the last!

The Bridge Was Done.

Spurgeon was fond of this story, taken from our Civil War:

Once when the Union soldiers were retreating from the Valley of Virginia, they burnt a bridge over the Shenandoah. Stonewall Jackson, who wanted to pursue them, sent for his old bridge-builder. "Sir," he said, "you must keep men at work all day and all night, and finish that bridge by to-morrow morning. My engineer shall give you a plan." Old Miles saluted and withdrew.

Early the next morning the general sent for Miles again. "Well, sir," said Jackson, "did the engineer give you the plan for the bridge?"

"General," said the old man slowly, "the bridge is done; I don't know whether the picture is or not!"

Now that is the kind of bridge-builders Mr. Spurgeon says we want in the church—men to go right ahead with their own work, no matter what their neighbors are doing.

Strong Testimony for Prayer.

I have found prayer a blessing far beyond my power to describe in the afflictions and sorrows of life. I can truly say that from a child God has sweetened many a bitter cup, sanctified to me many a deep distress. If I had my life to live over again I would not hesitate to commit it to the same God, who has so graciously cared for me.

If I could write the most charming poetry, and the most fascinating music, I could not produce a song fit to sing the praises of God's goodness to me in trial and affliction. No tongue can tell the wonders of God's grace displayed to his children in answer to prayer when the night was dark and the storm beat hard. If the cup was bitter, it mattered less to know that this dear hand held it to our trembling lips. If the way was long and hard, it was made a thousandfold more pleasant to know that, though invisible, the Master walked at my side. And when the way led down among the death-shadows and through the vale of tears where the heart ached, and the spirit was heavy with grief, and where we laid to rest the loved ones to whom our lives were knit with love, it helped us to say, when he drew near in answer to prayer: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."—Rev. A. S. Gumbart, in the Standard.

"We Live in Deeds."

Length of life is not measured by years,
But by the good deeds we have done,
By the eyes we have kissed of their tears,
By the victories o'er self we have won.
And they have lived life to its full,
Let their years have been many or few,
Who are mourned for and loved by one soul
They had taught to be tender and true.

Scientific Philanthropy.

WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Superintendent of the Reform Bureau, Washington, D. C.

Production has become a science, but distribution is haphazard. The capitalist has hundreds, often thousands, of skilled brains to aid him in production, but seldom even one skilled assistant to aid him in the wise distribution of the wealth God gives him. One of the arguments against the undue concentration of wealth is that a millionaire, with ten times as much to dispense as a man with $100,000, has even less time to consider how it can be used most wisely. Almost the only scientific aspect of distribution is tithe-giving, which is the custom of much less than a tithe of the church members. From the days of Adam and Abraham God has taught men that one-seventh of time and one-tenth of property are sacred against selfish uses. We may give more of both, but that much is not ours to keep. It is God's part as our partner not taken for himself ultimately, but for ourselves really, our nobler selves, and for the uses of brotherhood. "Liberty under the gospel" surely does not mean liberty to be meaner than the Jews. How easy is giving when it is not a new struggle every time, but only a draft on "the Lord's money!"

But it is too often assumed that the problem is solved when one has decided to give at least a tenth. "For what?" is a question no less important. One preacher has been preaching a series of sermons to prove out of the Bible that the whole tithe should be given to one's denomination. If in our day the denominations, as in the Jewish church, took charge of all the education and charities and reforms there would be something in the claim, but to-day much of the Christian work is done and by its very nature must be done by Christians of many denominations unitedly. One's own denomination should come first in the giving, but even denominational resolutions point us to union movements. Shall Christian tithe-givers contribute nothing to such home missionary work as the defence of the Sabbath and the overthrow of drink? Nothing to such a work as the crusade of Anthony Comstock against the cancer-planters, who would poison the purity of youth? Because it is the habit of Christians to give only locally and denominationally Mr. Comstock's truly missionary work is greatly hampered by debt, and many other reform societies are in like case. An ounce of reform prevents the need of a pound of charity, and yet a quarter million recently bequeathed to Dr. Parkhurst's society is the only bequest worth mentioning to any reform society in a dozen years. Let us make our distribution cover the whole gospel as Christ preached it at Nazareth, which included social reform. In giving to philanthropic movements those who follow ruts without thought often bestow everything in charity and nothing in reforms, overlooking the fact that reform is preventive charity. When Mr. Roosevelt closed the saloons of New York on Sunday he thinned out the hospitals, reduced the calls for relief and increased the deposits in savings banks. If by more vigorous reform work we could stop or greatly reduce drinking, gambling, lust and Sabbath breaking, most of the hospitals and asylums could be turned into schoolhouses, of which we are short because preventable vices call for so many shelters that it uses up our taxes. It is easier and wiser to prevent than to repent.

Chenille Rugs.

ELSIE GRAY.

There is nothing that will improve the appearance of a room so much as several pretty rugs. It requires very little skill to get a good combination of colors, and when that is done very pretty and artistic effects may be produced. The rug I shall describe is a woven one, twenty-seven inches wide and one and one-half yards long. It is made of soft woolen pieces, scraps from the sewing basket, little bits that were left after piecing woolen quilts, children's old dresses and other things that could be used in no other way. They were cut in bias strips one and one-half inches wide and gathered through the middle on coarse thread. It is not necessary to sew the pieces together; simply lap the edges and gather through them. This twists upon the thread and looks like chenille. When one thread is gathered full another is tied to it and the work proceeds as before. It is better to cut all the rags and mix them thoroughly before any sewing is done, so the colors will be nicely blended. When you have enough material prepared, take it to a weaver who will furnish the chain, and weave it like rag carpet, except that only half the usual amount of chain is required, one thread of the chain being used for two in a carpet. This rug has cardinal, crimson, garnet, dark green, navy blue and several shades of brown, with a border across the ends of plain brown. The border and most of the other rags were dyed the colors required with diamond dye, and although it has been used constantly for several years, it is as pretty as when new. Light colors may be beautiful in themselve, but they should not be mixed with the rich dark shades, but gathered together and used for another rug. A pretty rug has a plain brown center, with a border composed of two shades of red and green on either end. Other combinations may be used to correspond with the furnishings of the room.

Pray for Others.

Have you grown weary of prayer, young Christian? Have you become careless? If you have, you are making the greatest mistake of your life.

Perhaps your selfishness has been developed by your praying; that is, you have prayed for yourself, prayed for your own needs, and confessed your own sins so much that you have grown more selfish. Begin to pray more for others. You have a desire to help others, and prayer is a successful way to do it.

"More things are wrought by prayer Than this world dreams of. Wherefore, let thy voice,
Rise like a fountain for me night and day.
For what are men better than sheep and goats,
That nourish a blind life within the brain,
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer,
Both for themselves and those who call them friend?
For so, the whole round earth is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God."

With The Children.

Who Will Join?

Children, are you listening? That's right, because I am talking to you, and not to grown up men and women. Who of you would like to join the Advance Society? You don't know anything about it. Of course not. But I am going to tell you. It is a curious kind of society; you don't have to go anywhere to meet together; it doesn't matter if there is only one member in a town, and you are that member. There isn't any president or treasurer; there are secretaries, for every member is a secretary. This is how it is:

Any one wishing to join must make five resolutions. He determines to—1. Read five pages of history or biography every week—textbooks do not count; 2. Memorize every week a quotation from a standard author; 3. Read once a week a poem of not less than thirty lines; 4. Read a verse of the Bible every day; 5. Have a blank book in which to record the amount of work done—in other words, be one's own secretary.

There you are—five resolutions. You merely say, "I will try." If you forget or neglect to do the work one week there is no great harm done. You can begin the next week. You can choose your own history, poem, biography or quotation; you may read in the Old or New Testament. You see you are not bound down by hard rules as in some societies. And when you have kept these resolutions for three months, send me your names, stating what books you have read and how many pages, and I will have your names printed in this paper in our list of honor. Now, remember, it is not fair to skip one week and then double your work the next. The aim of this society is to make people regular in reading and to get them to read the kind of books they ought to read. When you have kept the resolutions faithfully for twelve weeks, let me hear from you. It doesn't matter how much more you do than is required, but never do less. You will be surprised to find how much you can accomplish — good, solid reading, that will fit you to become wise and good and regular in thought.

While the society is for children, any one may join. You know there are grown-up people who always feel that they are grown up. They have forgotten how to play. That is the kind I meant when I said I was not talking to grown-up people. Now, children, you have seen big persons spend many hours with novels, who would be dreadfully bored over a history. That is because they did not get used to reading history when young. The Advance Society is to keep us from growing up just that way. Storybooks are all right. I like a good story when nobody dies at the end of it. But I take for granted you will read stories. No use to resolve to do that. And don't imagine the Advance Society will take your mind away from your studies. It won't take long to do everything required. Just an hour or so every seven days. That is not much to spend in training our minds for high things. Just as soon as you read this send me your name and age, telling me you will join the Advance Society. I will enter your name on the list of members in my own book. This is a society where no money is asked. If you want to make any suggestions or ask question, write to me, but be sure to enclose a stamp. I would like to hear from a hundred children in the next ten days. Will you not be one of these soldiers of progress?

But it is not all work in the Advance Society. We are going to have fun, and this is the way we are going to do it: I will name a subject for the members to write on, and those who care to will send me short articles on that subject. I will select from these and get up a splendid column or so in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST out of their pieces, giving credit, of course, to each author. Here is our first subject: "The Funniest Thing that Ever Happened." I want all members to write me a brief sketch, telling me about the funniest happenings or the funniest speech they know of; something they or their friends have seen or heard. Won't that make a fine piece? I will pick out the very funniest of the stories sent us, put them all in one article and have it printed in paper.

Now, children, don't write too long a piece. But don't fail to write. If you never knew anything funny to happen—the idea!—at least you have heard your little brother or sister say something that was funny. I know something that happened that was so funny, just to think of it makes me laugh aloud, even if I am hungry! Now, everybody look out for that first essay of the Advance Society, "The Funniest Thing that Ever Happened!" It will come out in a few weeks. And perhaps I will tell my funny story with the rest.

Who will join in the fun, the work and the play? A member doesn't have to write for our column unless he wishes to, but he will enjoy what the others write. Let me hear from you at once. Address

The pictures of all the foreign missionaries of the Christian Church, their homes and places of worship are among the illustrations. The author gives an account of what he saw, whom he saw, the many countries visited, the habits, customs, and peculiarities of the nations through which he passed. The book is written in a most fascinating manner, enabling the reader to feel as though he had made the trip with the writer. The author set out from Cincinnati, Ohio, crossing the American continent to San Francisco, then across the Pacific Ocean to Japan, stopping at Honolulu, then to China, India, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, European countries to London, across the Atlantic to America and then home. The book gives the social, political and religious phases of the many nations visited by the author.

Truth Stranger Than Fiction.

THE STORY OF A STRUGGLE AFTER THE TRUTH AS IT IS FOUND IN CHRIST.

By D. R. Dungan.

Many editions of this book have been sold, and the demand increases. It is the most popular book on FIRST PRINCIPLES ever published by our people.

This volume discusses no new themes, nor does it present novel ideas upon the old theme of Christianity. Its novelty is found in protesting against novelties in religion, and insisting upon the usages of the primitive Church. It adopts a method for the discussion of salvation from sin which is, it is hoped, adapted to the popular education on the religious issues of the day. It was written for the benefit of, and is dedicated to, the People, with the prayer and hope that it will be widely read, and that it will do them good.

The author has carefully avoided technical expressions and obscure phrases, in order that it might meet their wants. He has endeavored to take these questions from the exclusive hands of the theologians, and place them in the hands of the people for their own adjudication. Will they, like the Bereans, examine the Scriptures to see whether these things be so?

Literature.

MAGAZINES.

The Alkahest, of Atlanta, Ga., is a magazine with a mission beyond that of furnishing good literature. It inaugurated a practical plan for organizing lyceum coures in the smaller cities and progressive towns of the South. This will bring the educating advantages of the lecture platform within the reach of all, giving an intellectual stimulus that only the platform will give, by sending the greatest men of the nation to speak direct to the people.

The Treasury of Religious Thought for November, 1898, begins the second half year of the sixteenth volume of this attractive Christian magazine. Rev. S. A. Cornelious furnishes the initial sermon in an able discourse on "Dedication." This is followed by sermons and addresses by Rev. Dr. T. L. Cuyler, and his able successor, Rev. Dr. David Gregg, of Brooklin, and by Rev. Dr. W. H. Allbright, Boston, and outlines of sermons by Dr. G. B. F. Hallock, Dr. Joseph Parker, of London, Eng., Dr. Irwin, and the Rev. Clarence T. Wilson. The minor departments of the magazine are all well sustained, as usual, and the editor gives promise as to the future course of the magazine. E. B. Treat & Co., publishers, 241-243 West 23d St., New York.

The Pall Mall for November is up to its usual stand in every way. Daudet in Private Life, by Raffælli; The Renegade, by C. J. Cutcliffe Hyne; Gleeson White, paper on Frederick Sandys; Besant's South London and Tuna Fishing, by H. A. Vachell, are some of the interesting themes and strong writers of the present number.

The Living Age for October 22 translates from the leading Italian review, Nuova Antologia, a striking article on the Present Condition of Italy, which gives a vivid but despondent presentation of the social and political problems with which Italy is at this moment confronted.

In the series of articles on the problems of European nations appearing in the American Monthly Review of Reviews, "Ouida" contributes a chapter of eloquent censure entitled "An Impeachment of Modern Italy." In the same number of the Review (November) Signor Vecchia publishes a defense of the Italian Government on the various charges specified by "Ouida."

In going "From Denver to the Pacific," Walter A. Wyckoff, in Scribner's for November, reaches the end of his long journey across the continent as a day laborer. This installment, which closes "The Workers—The West," describes his adventures in the Colorado mining camps and across the plains, and concludes one of the most striking recent contributions to magazine literature.

Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly for November is the initial number in the new and improved form of this illustrated family magazine, with a handsome cover in colors and gold. Its price is reduced to ten cents, one dollar per annum. This is unquestionably a popular move on the part of the publishers that will greatly extend its circulation. The leading articles in the new form are interesting.

The Youth's Companion, Boston, Mass., is probably the only periodical in the world seventy-two years of age whose first subscriber is still living and still a constant reader of the paper. The subscriber who enjoys this unique distinction is Mrs. Hannah M. Parsons, of Brooklyn, New York, now in her 85th year. She was the little sister of a friend of Nathanael Willis, father of N. P. Willis, the poet, and founder of the Youth's Companion. When Mr. Willis had resolved upon publishing a new paper for young people, his friend had him put down his sister's name as the first subscriber. The Companion's first issue was dated April 16, 1827, and for more than 70 years this first subscriber has continued to read and enjoy it. The volume for 1899 will be the best the Companion has ever published.

TOPIC FOR NOV. 13.

CHRISTIAN RECREATION.

(Isa. 35: 1-10.)

Many people imagaine, especially perhaps young people, that in order to relax from work and welldoing, and to have a "good time," they must do something a little wicked. "Stolen fruit is sweetest," is a vicious saying. It is responsible for many a wrong, and many a heartache. It is never recreation to do wrong. Recreation is creating over again. When nerve force is spent, when tissue is burned up with work, then we need to be created over again, made new. But wrong-doing will never do this. Sin cuts nerves, pours out life force, brings weakness, lassitude and pain. One never commits a sin, but it tells on his physical life, and the wages of sin is death here and now. In proportion as we do evil, in that proportion we sow death. Wrongdoing is the opposite of recreation, it is destruction.

It follows naturally, then, that welldoing is recreation. Time need not be wasted or misspent in order that a worked-down frame may be made over. It is the most useful activities of life that are the pleasantest. It is the employment of our faculties in useful work, in welldoing that is most exhilarating. Nothing gives a child more pleasure than to race and run, to swing his arms and shout with his lungs, until the blood surges through his viens and all his body is aglow, and nothing could be more useful to him. It is his recreation and it is his work.

The most healthful thing a Christian can do for recreation, then, is to change from his usual vocation, to some avocation that will employ his powers, physical and mental, in some new way. Every Christian should have some chosen avocation to which he can turn in leisure hours for recreation, and turn eargerly. Some book should be kept near at hand which forever attracts us; some musical, athletic, photographic or other pursuit should always be waiting to allure our leisure into healthful activity. Evil thought will then find no roomt vicious and degrading amusements will not attract us.

With such wholesome activities, a life otherwise dreary or monotonous may be brightened. The wilderness and the solitary place may be glad for them, and the desert bloom and blossom as the rose. In this modern day when all things are furnished ready to hand for wholesome activity, no life need be tame or dull. "The joy of the working," as Mr. Kipling calls it, is the one great, abiding joy of life. The little poem with which he closes his volume of "The Seven Seas," is a healthy, exuberant expression of the belief that this joy is to be the keenest delight of heaven:

"When Earth's last picture is painted, and the tubes are twisted and dried,
When the oldest colors have faded, and the youngest critic has died,
We shall rest, and faith, we shall need it—lie down for an aeon or two,
Till the Master of all Good Workmen shall set us to work anew.

"And those that were good shall be happy: they shall sit in a golden chair;
They shall splash at a ten-league canvas with brushes of camel's hair;
They shall find real saints to draw from—Magdalene, Peter and Paul;
They shall work for an age at a sitting and never be tired at all!

"And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame;
And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame;
But each for the joy of the working, and each in his separate star Shall paint the thing as he sees it, for the God of ings as they are."

Mr. Kipling throws himself very earnestly into life. His very recreation is a change of work. He spent a summer vacation once, flat of his back under the trees, reading the dictionary. This might not be an advisable procedure for most Endeavorers, but it shows the spirit with which one should throw himself into his employment. Earnestness in working! Dr. Thomas Arnold, when he assumed charge of old Rugby school, had all the old, time-honored boards, bearing the rules of the school, chopped down. The other masters held their breath. Such desecration, to them, was awful. But Arnold said to the boys, "Remember, boys, from now on there is but one rule at Rugby, 'Be Earnest.'" The boys were happy under that rule, and they loved its author with an ardent love. To be earnest in our work is to enjoy it. To give our whole selves to our employment is recreation in itself. Many a man has been kept alive by his work Many a man has rusted out and died, because he has retired from work. To take a new lease of life, to be recreated, then, is to make a change in one's work.

NOTED EVENTS.

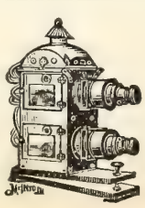
The degree of LL.D. was conferred upon William McKinley, President of the United States, by William Harper, President of the University of Chicago, in Kent Theatre, Chicago, Oct. 17th.

The Emperor and Empress of Germany arrived at Constantinople Oct. 17th, on their way to Jerusalem. The Sultan of Turkey extended the Emperor of Germany a royal welcome.

The Dowager Dutches of Sutherland was robbed of her jewel-case containing gems, the intrinsic value of which is placed at $200,000. The robbery was from a railway coach between Calais and Paris.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

The universal demand for wire nails, a product of American workmen, is shown by the fact that they go to every grand division of the globe, and to practically every country. Germany, France, Belgium, Netherlands, the United Kingdom, Canada, Central America, the West Indies, all the South American States, China, Japan, Asiastic Russia, British Australasia, French Oceanica, British and Portugese Africa; in fact, it is difficult to find a spot among the civilized and semi-civilized people of the globe where this recent product of American invention and American labor does not find a place. The exportation of wire nails from the United States has grown from 1,547,078 pounds in the fiscal year 1888 to 22,894,099 pounds in the fiscal year 1898.



Italy (Naples).

This province on the western coast of Italy has, since its formation more than 300 years B. C., belonged to many nations, and is therefore one of the most cosmopolitan divisions of the Italian kingdom.

The capital city, Naples, the most densely populated city in Europe, vies only with Constantinople as being the most beautifully situated city in the world. "See Naples and then die" has been the sentiment of many visitors who find no other place in the world combining, within the same compass, such natural beauty with so many objects of interest.

A most undesirable feature of Naples is the number of lazy mendicants, but they are gradually disappearing as manufactories and schools increase. On another page is shown a Neapolitan woman, in the provincial dress, using a Singer Sewing Machine in corset manufacture.

The Singer Manufacturing Co. has 70 offices in this sunny clime, its sewing machines being extensively used both in the family and the factory. Typical Italian women from other parts of Italy will be presented hereafter in this series of National Costume illustrations.

Scrofula Is Snake-Like

in its subtlety. It lies hidden for years in the ambush of the blood, and when it strikes it voids its venom alike on strength and beauty, disfiguring the one and undermining the other.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a specific for scrofula in its worst and most malignant forms. Scrofula is a blood disease. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a blood purifying medicine. Mineral medicines only drive scrofula below the surface. Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a vegetable remedy and it eradicates the disease. There is no remedy for scrofula equal to Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"I was cured of a long-standing case of scrofula by Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The disease first manifested itself when I was a child, by breaking out in red blotches all over my body. I was not free from the trouble until I took several bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. That effected a permanent cure."—Mrs. E. H. Snyder, Lehighton, Pa.

Sunday-School Literature

The matter of Sunday-school Literature is one of very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no importance, or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

We understand a few of our schools are using sectarian or union (so called) supplies, in order to save a few cents each quarter. Are you one of that number? Samples of our Supplies sent free.

ALLAN.

Joseph W. Allan was born in Lubec, Me., May 14, 1834 died at Kalamazoo, Mich., Oct. 18, 1898, aged 64 years, five months and four days. He leaves a wife and five children to mourn his departure. Bro. Allan became a Christian 31 years ago. When the Church of Christ was organized in Kalamazoo he became a charter member and served as deacon until his death. He took especial interest in the Sunday-school, of which he was superintendent several years. He loved Christ and his church. He has entered into the rest that is for the people of God. We will meet him on the other side of the river. C. M. KEENE.

BRIGGS.

Sister Minerva Briggs died in Stockton, Cal., Sept. 25, 1898, in her 74th year. She was born in Kentucky and came to California in 1863. In 1866 she was married to R. L. Briggs, of Yolo County. At an early age she became a Christian under the preaching of Thomas Allen and Henry Thomas. The surviving members of her family are Wm. H. Foreman, of Paris, Mo., Mrs. A. L. Chapman, of Santa Clara, and Mrs. M. S. Montgomery, of Stockton, Cal. A mother in Israel has passed away. She came to her grave in full age, "like a shock of corn cometh in his season." A. M. ELSTON.

CONYERS.

Mrs. Paulina Talbot Conyers, the subject of this sketch, was born in Boone County, Mo., August 7, 1823. When 14 years of age she moved with her mother to Monroe County, Mo. She was married to Jno. S. Conyers Sept. 10, 1840. She and her husband obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Bro. Henry Thomas in 1841. They were for many years active and useful members, and always liberal, charitable and hospitable. Many of our preachers in days agone have enjoyed their hospitable home. Among the number were Bros. Jacob Creath, D. P. Henderson, Alex. Procter and T. P. Haley. This noble couple had no children, but helped to raise and educate several orphan girls. They were members of the congregation at Paris many years, where by their upright lives and liberality they left an impression for good that will never be obliterated from the minds and hearts of that people. This noble couple adopted, in 1860, Miss Pauline Collier, then but a child of tender years, and she has ever since made her home with her adopted parents. Miss Pauline Collier was married to Jno. W. Irvine. This union was blessed with two daughters, who grew to womanhood, yet the tie of love seemed to have grown stronger all these years. These foster-grandchildren were as near to the hearts of this couple as the adopted daugher. Several years ago Bro. Conyers passed over on the other side to enjoy the the home prepared for him there. Then, for the first time, a dark cloud hung over this family—yet there was a silver lining, as all had a hope of meeting the loved one gone before. However, only a few years passed when death claimed one of the foster-grandchildren, and again gloom spread over this dear family. Only three of the household now remained, yet they were knit together by the ties of love. Sister Conyers now had reached a good old age, and was loved by every one who knew her on account of her beautiful life, and the lovely traits that adorned her character. In the quietude of her home in Paris, surrounded by relatives and dear friends, she calmly breathed her last Oct. 5, 1898. Thus closes the life of a pure Christian woman. While the relatives mourn on account of their loss, I trust they will never cease to praise God for this beautiful life and the heritage left them. The only brother and sister—D. H. Moss and Mrs. Kittie Edwards—were present at the death of this good woman. Sister Edwards has already reached her fourscore and seven years. Bro. Moss is much younger, but as time flies it will not be many years before this good man and this faithful woman, with all the consecrated relatives and friends will meet the loved one in heaven.

JACOB HUGLEY.

ECCLES.

Richard Laughlin Eccles was born in New Orleans, La., Oct. 14, 1856, and died in Metropolis City, Ill., Aug. 20, 1898. He became a member of the church in the fall of 1890, and was faithful in every good work from that time until the close of his life. He leaves a wife and three children. He has been called from life's toils to his reward while yet young in years. He will be greatly missed by his home congregation, but his works will still live. ALBERT NICHOLS.

Lincoln, Ill.

GORDON.

Rosetta S. Waters was born at Aledo, Mercer County, Ill., April 24, 1861, became the wife of Mr. J. B. Gordon, May 12, 1886, and departed this life Oct. 14, 1898, leaving a husband and four children and a host of friends to fondly remember her gentle life. One of the family, a little boy, a few years ago led the way to the better land, where the mother now awaits the divided family. Her departure was sad, as a babe but a few weeks old was left to be cared for by other hands. Sister Gordon united with the Christian Church five years ago. The family has the sympathy of a host of friends. The writer conducted the funeral services at the Dimond Grove cemetry, at Jacksonville where the remains were interred.

D. F. SEYSTER.

Lynnville, Ill.

HURST.

Sarah Lewis was born south of Centerville, Ind., Oct. 29, 1826. She gave her life to Christ at the early age of 17 and was baptized by Eld. A. Harland. March 23, 1848, she was united in marriage to Dixon Hurst. She was the mother of three children, Alice, Horace Lewis, and Mary. Her husband departed this life Jan. 12, 1857. For the last few years she has been almost a helpless invalid and a great care to her faithful daughter, Mrs. Alice Gresh. Death came as a sweet relief Oct. 18, 1898. The funeral service was conducted in the Milton Christian church by the writer.

T. A. HALL.

Milton, Ind.

JOHNSON.

James Perrin Johnson, a faithful member of the Christian Church at Hanibal, Mo., passed to rest in his home in that city, Oct. 15, 1898, aged 38 years. He leaves a wife and daughter and brother in the old home into which he always brought cheer and encouragement. Though in delicate health for years he discharged the duties of a responsible position and always looked on the bright side of life. He was loved and esteemed by all who came into touch with his life. He was a very companionable man, and will be sadly missed in the community. The family have the Christian hope. LEVI MARSHALL.

For Over Fifty Years

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhœa.

To be entirely relieved of aches and pains of rheumatism means a great deal, and Hood's Sarsaparilla does it.

DR. WILLIAM A. HAMMOND, the eminent specialist in nervous diseases, has written for the next volume of THE YOUTH'S COMPANION an article of absorbing interest on the wonderful things done by sleep-walkers, and shows that everybody, in some degree at least, is a sleep-walker. The COMPANION also announces articles by Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi on "The Growing Child," and on quarantine methods by Surgeon-General Wiman.

PIMPLES CURED BY CUTICURA SOAP

Before using CUTICURA SOAP, my face and hands were just as rough as could be and my face was all covered with pimples. I was unfit to look at, but after using CUTICURA SOAP three weeks, my face was equal to velvet.
Feb. 6, 1898. PAUL DUPRE, Chaler, La.

I suffered with blackheads and pimples for two or three years until it became chronic. I tried everything imaginable, but it did me no good. CUTICURA SOAP cured me.
Feb. 20, '98. L. V. GILLIAM, Oak P. O., Va.

I was troubled for eight years with pimples on the face. I commenced using CUTICURA SOAP. In a very short time the pimples all disappeared and my skin is now in a healthy condition. JAMES FOSTER,

Luxurious New Pullman Sleeping Cars.

BETWEEN
ST. LOUIS,
LOUISVILLE,
CINCINNATI,
WASHINGTON,
BALTIMORE,
PHILADELPHIA,
and NEW YORK.

The Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway always awake to the comfort of its patrons, have just added to their already handsome equipment, six luxurious new Sleeping Cars, to be operated in connection with its renowned "Royal Blue Trains" between the above-named cities. For elegance and comfort this new product of the Pullman Company surpasses all past records. The cars, while not on the elaborate order, are of the latest and most improved design, and plainly show the inventive genius of master workmen.

The cars are named "Claremont," "Deermont," "Beaumont," "Elkmont," and "Glenmont."

They are of the thirty-five ton class, with six-wheel truck, Pintsch gas system, and are painted the Pullman standard color on the outside.

They are full vestibuled, equipped with a series of air reservoirs worked by a governor from the air brake, which supplies all the toilet accessories.

The cars have twelve sections, a drawing room and smoking room, and the interior is California redwood, highly polished and beautifully inlaid. The seats are the quintessence of comfort and elegance, and are covered with plush in attractive colors with embossed centers, and carpets harmonizing in color.

The cars are now doing regular service in trains number 3 and 4.

Publishers' Notes.

"Plain Talks to Young Men on Vital Issues," by Peter Ainslie, is a book that parents should place in the hands of their sons and daughters. It speaks out in clear and forcible language concerning the evils attending Gambling, The Theater, Dancing, Swearing, and Lying, and closes with a chapter on Christian Service. It is handsomely bound, and the price is 60 cents, postpaid.

The story of the beautiful life of Esther has recently been written by M. M. Davis and published in a book by Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis. The title of this new work is "Queen Esther." It is bound in beautiful cloth, and the price is 75 cents postpaid. In this book the author has told the story in such a manner that the child will read it with delight, the parent will find much instruction, and the preacher material for sermons. It is bound in the latest style cloth, and it is 75 cents, postpaid.

SUPERIOR TO ANY.

Under date of Oct. 14, 1898, we have the following commendation of the Gospel Call song books: "We have received the Gospel Call song books ordered and our church and Sunday-school think them superior to any we have ever used. I think your advertisement, 'Superior to any book now on the market,' is every word true." A. L. MOORE, Cornetist.
Queen City, Mo.

In a recent issue of Public Opinion, New York, the editor gave a review of "Organic Evolution Considered," by Prof. A. Fairhurst, of Kentucky University. Not having space for the full article, we give the following extract from it: "We commend his work to the examination of students of biology because of its judicial spirit and good temper." 386 pages. Cloth, price $1.50.

If your Sunday-school expects to give a Thanksgiving entertainment, send to the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, for the "Harvest Home" concert. This is an appropriate concert for that occasion, and consists of familiar songs without the music, Scripture selections and recitations. It is easy to render and very entertaining. Price, single copies, 2 cents; or 25 cents per dozen copies, postpaid.

READY FOR ORDERS.

"Mary Ardmore" is just from our press, and shows a high order of the mechanical art. This is the latest work by J. H. Stark, author of "Hugh Carlin." "Mary Ardmore" is a strong moral and religious story of a high class. Its characters are all well chosen, and the story is unique in its plan, beautiful in thought, and charmingly interesting from beginning to close. It will please all, as it contains love, morality and religion. It is elegantly bound in high colored cloth, has 328 pages, and the price is $1.00 postpaid.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Bruce Brown, pastor West Side Christian Church, Chicago, Ill., has adopted the method of announcing his sermon themes a month ahead in primer type on large (8x10) cards.

Prof. J. W. McGarvey, of Lexington, Ky., is announced as the chief lecturer of the Texas Christian Lectureship to be held at Waxahachie, Nov. 14-17. The railroads will offer special rates and entertainment will be free for all that attend.

H. C. Patterson, state evangelist, has located at Irvington, Ind., to which place he asks all correspondence for him to be addressed.

B. F. Manire, who returned to St. Louis from the convention at Chatanooga, on account of the yellow fever at his home, Jackson, Miss., left last week for Memphis, where he will await the opportunity to return home.

C. B. Black, Salem, Ill., desires to change his field of labor, and will enter into correspondence with churches looking to this end. Bro. Black is highly recommended by the brethren who know him as a minister of a clean record and good ability as a preacher. Address him as above.

W. H. Bybee, of Bolivar, Mo., has been commended by the official board of that church as an earnest preacher. He desires a new field of labor and asks correspondence with some church wanting a preacher.

S. G. Battenfield has closed his ministry at Mattoon, Ill., and is free to engage for protracted meetings or a new pastorate. While at Matoon, two years, there were 82 additions to the church and other benefits along moral and spiritual lines.

S. M. Martin is now in a protracted meeting at Central Chrisitan Church, Dallas, Texas. The preacher is a large man, the audiences are large and large results are expected.

We find this in the Christian Courier, Oct. 27th: "Arthur O. Garrison has become editor of the Christian Oracle, of Chicago, his father, J. H. Garrison, having purchased a controlling interest in the paper. F. M. Kirkham, formerly of the Oracle, becomes editor of the Pacific Christian, having purchased the paper. The Pacific Coast was not favorable to A. O. Garrison's health. He is a vigorors and entertaining writer and the Courier wishes for the Oracle great prosperity under his editorial management. Wm. O. Broadhurst, a most capable man for the place, becomes business manager of the Oracle."

J. C. Stark, of Du Quoin, Ill,, author of "Hugh Carlin," was in the city last week and gave us a call. He is doing a good work at Du Quoin.

E. G. Shanklin, of Slater, Mo., and J. W. Blalock, of Stanbury, Mo., will exchange fields of labor for the year, beginning Nov. 1st. Bro. Shanklin has been preaching at Slater for over a year, and is greatly beloved for his work's sake. He had a unanimous call to remain at Slater indefinitely, but thought best to make a change. They go to Stanbury highly commended by the church and friends at Slater. The same is also true of Bro. Blalock and his work at Stanbury, and he goes to Slater with the esteem of all his people.

T. A. Wood, Rock, Mo., would like to engage with some church to preach part or all time for the next year.

Lawrence McCrea, of Iowa, is in a good meeting at Burnside.

A. J. Marshall, of Onawa, born on a foriegn mission field, is presented to the Home Board by his Iowa friends as a suitable man for our new mission work in Porto Rico or Cuba.

A. E. Cory taught Dean Everest's classes for one week.

A. M. Haggard, of Oskaloosa spent three days in Chicago last week.

T. C. McIntire, of Montezuma, Ia., preaches Oct. 30th at Garden Grove, Minn.

B. W. Pettit, of Avery, Ia., will preach at Oskaloosa on Nov. 6th. On 23rd this pulpit was filled by J. D. Gutherie.

B. S. Denny, the new Iowa secretary, is taking vigorous hold upon his work.

Mrs. B. W. Johnson, of Oskaloosa, Ia., is spending a few weeks in Northwest Missouri with her sister. She was also a St. Louis visitor recently.

F. N. Calvin, of Waco, Tex., will begin a three months' ministry for the church at Kankakee, Ill., Dec. 1st.

Geo. W. Campbell, of Chicago, recently filled the pulpit at Perry, Ia.

Dr. Albert Buxton, pastor of the church at Fairfield, Neb., paid his respects to this office on his way home from the Chattanooga Convention, via Milligan, Tenn., and Canton, Mo., at each of which places he lectured.

The Columbia Herald, Columbia, Mo., recently complimented the author of "In the Days of Jehu," as follows: "J. Breckenridge Ellis, of Plattsburg, takes us back to Hebrew history in his new work 'In the Days of Jehu.' It is the story of sacred Writ brought in modern fashion, a story of absorbing interest, however told, and Mr. Ellis is no mean story-teller. Ahab and Jezebel, Elijah and Jehu, are brought more vividly before us in this pleasant, profiting story. Mr. Ellis fills out the narrative where the Books of Kings give but a line. He has done his work carefully and well."

W. Bayard Craig, Chancellor of Drake University, is being prominently mentioned for President of the State University of Iowa, of which he is an alumnus. Chancellor Craig would make an almost ideal university president, but we should regret to see him taken from the place which he is now occupying with such excellent results to Drake University.

W. H. Waggoner has just concluded his 30th institute in behalf of systematic Bible study and world-wide missions, at Bedford, Ind., the home of Bro. Joseph Franklin, who is pastor of the church in that city, of whom and his work Bro. Waggoner speaks most favorably.

We regret to learn that Bro. W. F. Richardson, who was prevented from attending both the Missouri Convention and the National Convention at Chattanooga by an accident to his knee, is still on crutches and will probably be for several weeks. It is to be hoped that no permanent injury will result from the accident. Bro. Richardson is a man who is always greatly missed from the councils of his brethren.

M. L. Hoblit, C. W. B. M. missionary at Monterey, N. L. Mexico, has changed the name of his missionary paper. It is now called "The Memorandum" instead of "Go." This paper is published as a means of obtaining funds to keep his mission press at work printing gospel literature in the Spanish language. Subscription money and contributions to the press fund will be devoted to that object.

R. E. L. Prunty recently received an enthusiastic call from the congregation at Unionville, Mo., to remain with them another year, this being his fifth year with this excellent body of Disciples.

The official board of the First Christian Church, Beaver Falls, Pa., testifies to the very acceptable and able manner in which Eld. J. L. McDonald, of Hiram, O., conducted the services of the church during the eight months' absence of its regular pastor, Eld. O. A. Richards, in Alaska. It says: "Bro. McDonald is a conscientious, faithful man; well read, a deep thinker, thoroughly conversant with God's Word and will do a good work for any church requiring the services of either a pastor or evangelist."

W. C. Dimmitt has permanently located at Benjamin, Texas.

J. G. M. Luttenberger, Prohibition nominee for representative of the 36th Illinois congressional district has issued a campaign document bristling with prohibition facts and intemperance figures. It ought to be a good eye-opener to any voter. Bro. Luttenberger's home is at Dorchester, Ill.

T. H. Kuhn, of Kokomo, Ind., is now in a meeting in Ingalls and calls for sample copies of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGLLIST.

E. O. Sharpe will remain at Le Roy, Ill., another year at the request of the church.

CHANGES.

P. D. Gunter, Fortuna to California, Mo.
C. H. Plattenburg, Ashton, O., to Uniontown, Pa.
J. H. Hughes, San Jose to Chico, Cal.
H. F. Detweiler, Axtell to Mina, Kan.
H. P. Atkins, Cincinnati, O., to Harrodsburg, Ky.
E. B. Scofield, Columbus to 323 N. Del. St., Indianapolis, Ind.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

CURRENT EVENTS.

It had really begun to look as if England and France might be guilty of the unspeakable folly of going to war over the possession of Fashoda. Preparations for war have been going on actively, and England especially has been making a somewhat ostentatious display of her readiness for war. True, Major Marchand had already left Fashoda, but it was still a debatable question whether or not his personal departure implied his recall and the abandonment of the position which he had taken. The matter is, however, very materially clarified by Lord Salisbury's speech at the banquet given at the Mansion House in honor of Gen. Kitchener, the new hero of the Soudan. The prime minister stated distinctly that, although there were still differences of opinion between France and England in regard to their respective rights in Egypt, yet the immediate cause of friction had been removed by the decision of the French Cabinet, that the possession of Fashoda would bring to France more trouble and expense than advantage. "Doubtless there will be many discussions between us, but a somewhat acute and dangerous cause of differences has been removed," by the wise determination of France to abandon Fashoda. In his speech at the same banquet, Gen. Kitchener thus sums up the assets that remain to England as the outcome of his Egyptian expedition: "Six hundred miles of railway, gunboats, a flotilla of sailing craft and— the Soudan."

Lord Salisbury's speech may dispose of the Fashoda incident as a possible casus belli, but it still leaves unexplained the obvious fact that extraordinary preparations for service are being made in both army and navy. If the French occupation of this obscure Egyptian station is not the occasion of these preparations, then there must be some more important and serious reason for it. There could not well be one more insignificant. The report came only a few days ago that the ships of the British squadron at Wei-Hai-Wei had been ordered to clear for action. But even this, if true, does not afford any indication as to the identity of the enemy or the cause of the trouble, for a war between Great Britain and any other of the European powers would certainly involve naval operations in Chinese waters. The only solution of the mystery which immediately presents itself is that Great Britain is, as reported, about to proclaim a protectorate over Egypt, and is preparing to meet with force any possible objection which may be made in any quarter. It is certain that the Sultan, to whose possessions Egypt now nominally belongs, would do all in his power to make difficult the establishment of a British protectorate, and in anticipation of such an attempt he is already beginning to throw obstacles in its way by granting to France privileges in Egypt which will bring France still more directly into collision with any British protectorate which might be established. Great Britain will probably have plenty of need for her warships cleared for action.

The new French Cabinet formed, not without difficulty, by M. Dupuy as Premier, is as follows: M. Lebret, Minister of Justice; Dupuy, Premier and Minister of the Interior; De Freycinet, War; Lockroy, Marine; Delcasse, Foreign Affairs; Peytral, Finance; Leygus, Public Instruction; Deloncle, Commerce; Guillaine, Colonies; Vigier, Agriculture; Krantz, Public Works. The retention of the Minister of Foreign Affairs in the late Cabinet in the same position in the present Ministry is an element of strength. He will be likely to preserve pacific relations with England and the other powers if any one can. The new Minister of War is a civilian, and may be expected to exhibit a higher degree of sanity than his predecessor did, in his consideration of the "honor of the army" as affected by the revision of the Dreyfus case. Meanwhile, the work of revision is going on. The hopeful feature of the present situation is that the Court of Cassation, which has just begun a retrial of the Dreyfus case, is a civil tribunal, and therefore not, as the court-martial was, in bondage to the phantom of French military honor.

In spite of the official secrecy which surrounds the work of the Peace Commissioners now in session in Paris, we receive almost daily detailed reports which purport to give an accurate account of all that transpires in their meetings. Much of this, probably most of it, is doubtless the product of the fervid imagination of the enterprising correspondents, whose lack of authentic information is no check upon their zeal for the enlightenment of the public. Public opinion has to be molded, and as good a way as any to do it is to put into the mouths of the Commissioners the words which these molders of public opinion think ought to be said. However, it cannot be doubted that, along with much political exhortation, dressed in the garb of sober narrative, a grain of truth does occasionally filter through from the secret session to the general public. It is probably true that our Commissioners have filed a demand for permanent possession of the whole Philippine group, and that the only concession that has been offered in return is that the United States will reimburse the Spanish Government for her expenditures on internal improvements in the islands. This sum is very small as compared with the Philippine debt of forty millions, most of which was contracted by Spain to pay for putting down the insurrection there. We do not need to be told that Spain will not take kindly to this suggestion. There has, however, apparently been no threat of breaking off negotiations, and the attitude of the foreign press gives Spain no ground to hope that she can gain anything by appealing to the European powers.

Considering how frequent anarchistic attempts at regicide are becoming throughout Europe, it is not to be wondered at that one of the powers has taken the first step toward a concerted movement for the suppression of anarchy. The Italian Government has issued through its Secretary of State a proclamation addressed to all governments which have accredited representatives at Rome, calling on them to participate in a general congress to adopt "a common system of defense to annihilate forever the society known under the name of anarchy." It is expressed as the view of the Italian Government that no measures can be too severe to be put in force to check this great and growing danger. Obviously, existing laws are inadequate to protect society against this incarnation of the spirit of murder and disorganization. The ordinary checks upon criminality have no force over the individual who is willing to forfeit his own life for the sake of dealing a blow at society by the assassination of a king. There is in the thoroughgoing anarchist, as there was in the Madhists who fell before Gen. Kitchener in the Soudan, a fanatical zeal for "the cause," which breeds indifference to all possible punishments or even to death itself for the individual. It is insanity, but it is also an exhibition of supreme devotion to a principle. It would be heroic if it were not criminal. We are not troubled much in this country by anarchists of the assassinating sort. The typical American representative of zealous, well-meaning, murderous idiocy is the lynching mob. The two have many points in common and both must be suppressed.

Early in the next session of Congress the Nicaragua Canal will become a subject of discussion in the Senate. The Morgan bill, which is already on the Senate calendar, represents the interests of the Maritime Canal Company and proposes that the government back this company's plans by guaranteeing its bonds. The Maritime Company is chartered by the United States and has concessions from the Nicaraguan and the Costa Rican Governments. The concessions from Nicaragua expire in October, 1899; those from Costa Rica three years later. Opposition to the Morgan bill will come from three sources: First, there are those who doubt the utility and desirability of a canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, or who have a financial interest in opposing any project, as the transcontinental railways have. The railways which connect our Eastern and Western coasts will exert all their influence to keep out this new line of competition. Second, opposition will come from those who believe that the canal is needed, but that it ought to be constructed, owned and controlled solely by the government, ignoring the Maritime Company and all other private schemes. Of this class Senator Turpie is a representative, a friend of the canal, but of the plan for its construction proposed in the Morgan bill. Third, there will be those who will favor the claims of other companies. The Government of Nicaragua has been somewhat prodigal with its concessions. An English corporation, the Atlas Company, has received exclusive concessions which conflict with those held by the Maritime. Besides this, there is a report that within the past week concessions have been granted to another American company, to come in force at the expiration of those granted to the Maritime and thereby preventing their renewal. The Panama scheme is not dead yet either (see two interesting articles in the Forum for November), and there will be some to favor the abandonment of the Nicaraguan route and co-operation with the French Government for the construction of the canal by the shorter Panama route. A commission appointed by the President has spent the past six months in going over the ground with the services of more than fifty engineers, and its report, to be presented soon after the opening of the session, can be made the basis Congressional action.

It had been commonly assumed that polygamy among the Mormons in Utah was a thing of the past. The custom was formally abrogated with the most solemn pledges by the leaders and representatives of the Mormon Church, a few years ago, as a condition of the admission of Utah to statehood. There is reason to believe, however, that the pledge was not made in good faith, and that it is not now observed. Mr. Roberts, a high officer of Mormonism, and one of the chief authorities on its doctrine, is now a candidate on the Democratic ticket for a seat in Congress. Evidence is presented to prove that this high Mormon official and would-be congressman is a polygamist, and that he is so by consent of the church. He has not denied the charge, and the managers of his campaign have defended him only by making a countercharge that some of the nominees of the opposing party are guilty of the same offense. No specific evidence has been adduced, however, in support of the latter charge. As the matter stands, polygamy is practically a political issue in the campaign in Utah. If a man of so much prominence in the church has more than one wife, it can be assumed that the leaders of Mormonism know about it, and do not object. The outcome of the election will show whether or not they dare to declare themselves openly in favor of polygamy.

Dr. Lorimer has been given a royal welcome back to his church in Boston after a summer spent in England.

A DIVINE MISSION—WHAT?

I. CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.

Accepting as true the principle stated in a former article, that God's immanence in history is shown by the providential men and movements by which his kingdom is advanced on earth, and regarding the current movement urged by the Disciples of Christ as coming within the general scope of this principle, the inquiry as to God's purpose in this movement is pertinent and by no means irreverent. Nothing is more becoming God's rational creatures than an effort to understand the meaning of his dealings with them, and the nature of the work to which he has called them. The question which Saul of Tarsus asked when he was arrested on his way to Damascus by the manifestation of Christ, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" is a question which not only every Christian, but every body of Christians may well ask.

In seeking to ascertain what purposes God had in view to accomplish through the agency of this reformation of the nineteenth century, three sources of information are open to us: (1) The Bible as the literary record of God's revelations to men; (2) the conditions and needs of the religious world at the beginning and during the progress of this reformation, and (3) the history of the movement itself. The first of these will furnish the norm or the unchanging principles and truths by which all religious work must be guided; the second will suggest the application of these principles demanded by existing conditions, and the third will afford us that light without which we cannot understand God's will and way aright—the light of experience.

Putting ourselves back now in the beginning of the present century, what are the prevailing religious conditions? If the history of the period may be believed, it was a time of intense sectarian bitterness and strife. The various religious parties emphasized inordinately the peculiarities of their doctrinal beliefs, making them tests of fellowship and of communion. Men's minds and consciences were in bondage to church traditions and the speculative beliefs of their respective parties. The free, untrammeled, creative spirit which marked the first era of Christianity and which had been reproduced in a measure in various periods of reformation in the church had degenerated into a spirit of contentiousness about small things and to slavish conformity to the utterances and practices of other men in other times. As might be expected under such conditions piety was at a low ebb, and infidelily and irreligion prevailed to an alarming extent. Especially was this true among the young and educated classes.

If we turn the light of the New Testament on this condition of things, which was not unlike that which prevailed among the Jews in the time of our Savior, and also the light which subsequent history throws back upon the situation, the conclusion seems to be irresistible that God desired, first of all, to break the fetters of partisan bondage and assert once more the great principle of Christian liberty. Men must be made to feel free to think before the prevailing errors of the time, both ecclesiastical and theological, could be corrected. Liberty is the essential atmosphere of religious reform.

We feel justified, therefore, in saying that one of God's purposes in the reformation of the nineteenth century was to give a fresh assertion of the principle of Christian liberty. This did not mean liberty to reject truth or to ignore its claims in life and conduct; but it meant freedom from party tyranny; freedom from the authority of human creeds and traditions; freedom to look reverently into the Word of God to ascertain for themselves the way of life and salvation; freedom to stand erect under God's blue heavens and call no man master but Christ. It meant also freedom to be a Christian without wearing the collar or badge of any sect in Christendom.

This was a most astounding claim to the great body of religious people of that day. It is difficult for us to estimate the amount of moral heroism which was involved in the taking of such a position at that time. The idea that men could with impunity reject the venerable symbols of faith, which had come down from former generations, and undertake to read and understand the Bible for themselves, seemed sacrilegious in the eyes of many good people who had thoroughly identified their respective systems of belief with Christianity and were unable to make any distinction between them. And yet, wearied with the petty strifes and partisan contentions, and with the bondage of human opinions which everywhere prevailed, the men of God who inaugurated this reformation did issue a declaration of independence from all human authority in religion and asserted their purpose to henceforth be guided solely by divine authority in their religious faith and practice.

Loud and long as were the denunciations against this course, it is now apparent in the light of nearly a century of history that it was the only possible remedy for the evils that afflicted the church, and must have been the initial step in any religious movement that looked to the betterment of these conditions. When religious leaders come to exalt their traditions and speculative opinions to an equality with the Word of God and seek to make them binding on the consciences of men, and when the ecclesiastical lash is applied to any man who dares to think differently from these formulated opinions, it is evident that the time has come for a reformer to arise. There can be no religious progress without it. Such a time was the early part of the present century, and God, who is never taken by surprise, had prepared human agents by which he would free the church from its bondage to human creeds and traditionalism, and start it on a new career of freedom and of power.

Priceless to the church and to humanity is this boon of religious liberty. All honor to the men who, at the call of God, were willing to sacrifice personal popularity, the good opinion of their religious friends, their former religious associations, places of honor which might have been theirs, and devote themselves with single-heartedness to the advocacy and defense of a principle so unpalatable to the times in which they lived, but so vital to the interests of the church of God. It is through their labors and sacrifices that we have the privilege to-day of being Christ's freemen, wearing no man's name, acknowledging allegiance to no human creed, owning no man as master but Christ, and claiming to be evangelical without being sectarian. Who of us that have tasted the sweetness of this liberty, and felt the honor of this position, would exchange it for all the titulary honors, the lucrative positions and the sensual pleasures of earth?

When we look around us and see the spirit of religious liberty that prevails to a greater or less degree among all religious bodies, and notice the waning power of human creeds and the dropping out of sight of those tenets about which religious people once engaged in perpetual strife, we are prepared to appreciate the blessing, not to ourselves alone, but to the whole religious world, from this reassertion, in the present century, of the principle of Christian liberty.

A DAY IN THE HOME MISSION OFFICE.

The Chattanooga Convention continues! On a railway train from Chattanooga to Cincinnati three meetings were held. The topic in the first meeting was, "What Most Impressed me in the Convention." The topic in the second meeting was, "What I Intend to Do: Or, A Look Into the Future." This was an intensely interesting and profitable meeting. The foreign missionaries—W. R. Hunt, E. M. Gordon, Dr. Anna Gordon, Miss Lavinia Oldham, Dr. Olivia Baldwin, Mrs. Bertha F. Lohr, C. E. Randall and others—spoke in the third meeting. The secretaries, McLean and Rains, and President Loos, were in these meetings and added to their interest. At the conclusion, "Blest be the tie that binds" was sung and the parting hand was given to the missionaries. These were meetings never to be forgotten.

A report of the proceedings of the Chattanooga Convention was made in the Broadway Christian Church, Lexington, Ky., Sunday morning, October 23rd, after which a contribution was made to aid in the evangelization of destitute portions of Kentucky. The Chattanooga Convention continues! Since that meeting it is difficult to think, or speak, or write on any other topic than the evangelization of men.

Time spent in Cincinnati in the offices of the American Christian Missionary Society and the Foreign Christian Missionary Society was alike pleasant and profitable. At once it was seen that our secretaries are hard-working men. Their places are not sinecures. The men who preach once or even twice a day, have in comparison a holiday. There is not opportunity in the space allotted to this communication to do more than briefly note a few incidents in connection with a visit to the office of the Home Mission Society.

The office is in the Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O., and consists of two rooms. In one were the young ladies, Miss Elsie Smith, daughter of Geo. T. Smith, our missionary to Japan for a number of years. Miss Elsie is the stenographer of the Home Mission Department. Miss Gertrude Smith is the stenographer of her father, C. C. Smith, secretary of the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization, Miss S. B. Dormar is the bookkeeper. In this department she is so skilled and faithful in the discharge of her duties that not a single error in her work has been found during the year.

On the walls of the office occupied by the secretaries—Benj. L. Smith and C. C. Smith and their helpers—are pictures of Alexander Campbell, Isaac Errett and R. M. Bishop. A Disciple, born and bred, feels quite at home in this place.

This office is no place for loafers. The men and women in it are busy persons. Tremendous interests occupy their minds and employ their hands. The offices of our missionary secretaries are veritable workshops. The twenty-fourth day of October, the force was found hard at work preparing for Children's Rally for America, the new day appointed by the Chattanooga Convention, in which to instruct our children in Home Missions, both state and national.

It was a privilege to look into the mail. Extracts from some of the letters will not be out of place at this point. A lady, a physician, wrote: "I wish to enlist to win Puerto Rico for Christ. Enroll me in the army of invasion, and do not mind a part with the advance guard of the Rough Riders. I am a physician, a Harvard graduate, have had experience in treating yellow fever, and can make myself understood by Spaniards. Hoping to be called into this service, I am yours in Christ." Another wrote: "I am a member of the Christian Church, and an officer in 'the volunteers of America,' under Ballington Booth. My wife and I have given ourselves to the service of the Master wherever he calls. Can you use us anywhere? We would be willing to go. I am in charge of the volunteer post here." How can we use these persons for Christ? What would you do? How would you do it? Write to Benj. L. Smith about this. But here is another letter. Let us read: "We have called Brother ——— to be our pastor. Our only difficulty is the financial one and we want the Home Board to solve that. Will you pay half the salary?" Would you say "yes" without investigation? But investigation takes time, labor, expense. Nor can half the salary be paid if money is not sent in for the purpose. Have you sent a contribution? How much? "Jesus sat over against the treasury." He sits there now. He knows what is done and who does it. But let us continue to examine this mail. It contains revelations. A faithful minister of the Lord Jesus writes: "My helper in the work for Christ and humanity passed away on the third instant. I feel so weak alone, but I know his promise to be with me. My wife's health failed while in the employ of the General Board. She was never happier than when working for the church of our Lord. We think the best monument we could erect to her memory would be a church at ——— and we ask your help." God bless them and give them a church building! do you say? But who will furnish the money, or even a part of it? Wm. F. Cowden writes: "I have located Bro. G. L. Surber for three months at Boise, Idaho. Bro. Davis is at Lewiston, where they are about to build. F. B. Sapp gives splendid satisfaction as our new state evangelist. I dedicate at Enterprise, Oregon, soon; then to the Willamette Valley to assist Bro. Sicafoose. We need a number of good young preachers whose lives are above reproach, who have talent and energy, and who can succeed. We can pay about six hundred dollars a year, but the fields will soon grow to larger things; can you commend such men to us?"

The secretary said that this was about an average day's mail. The Board can answer, favorably, not more than a third of the urgent, worthy appeals made to them. The call of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR HOME MISSIONS is timely. If you could spend a day in the office of the American Christian Missionary Society and feel the pulse of the mighty demand for help you would be fired with missionary zeal as never before. This amount of money can be raised if we have a mind to give it. The wealth is in our hands. We are a mighty people. How will we use our wealth? In what direction will we exert our might?

B. B.T.

CHILDREN'S RALLY DAY FOR AMERICA.

The Convention at Cattanooga recommended that the Sunday preceding Thanksgiving be observed in our Sunday-schools as Children's Rally Day for America, the offering to be divided between Church Extension, State Missions and the American Christian Missionary Society. One-fifth to be given to Church Extension and two-fifths to the State Board in which state the Sunday-school is located and two-fifths to the A. C. M. S. This is exactly right. The State Boards have long felt they had some right to claim an interest in the Sunday-school offering and to claim the attention of the children to the needs of their own state; but in the multiplicity of days and interests this was exceedingly difficult. Again, it did not seem right that the young in our churches should have no education concerning the need of America for missionary work. How many of the children in the more favored part of our land know of the mighty mission fields in America? Do the children know that the Home field includes all the United States (only in a third of which have we any strength) and Canada and Alaska and Mexico and now, after our victories over Spain, many islands of the sea? This is Rally Day, not for the United States alone, but for America, and yet it does not forget the claims of the beloved state in which the school is located and the funds are used, not only to send messengers with the gospel, but to build church houses and chapels.

Then again, many of our wise men have for sometime felt that there has not been sufficient unity in our missionary work. This, then, is a movement in the right direction. The work of the American Christian Missionary Society and of the State Boards and of the Church Extension Society is alike in that it seeks to lift up the standard of primitive Christianity in America, and this unity of hands is hailed with satisfaction by all the friends of Home Missions.

Again, this seems a fortunate choice of days. It conflicts with no other interest, and how appropriate that we teach our children to express their thanksgiving for the blesings coming from the protection, peace and prosperity vouchsafed by our government, by giving to their beloved land the greater blessings found alone in the gospel of Jesus Christ. This should be a great day in all our schools; a day of thanksgiving and patriotism; a day of rejoicing and giving. Let the children come with singing and cast their offerings into the Lord's treasury in order that he may bless America. We hope the churches on this day will be decorated with the fruits of field, forest and orchard. What more appropriate than to bring to the eyes of the children the blessings which God has given them and teach them that their own offering is but an expression of thanksgiving for the blessings which their eyes behold. Make America's Day a great day this jubilee year.

"America" never meant so much to Americans and to the world as it means today. The stars on our flag never shone with quite so great a lustre as they do today. The Bible—the bedrock of our civil and religious liberty—was never so clearly recognized as being the source of all our nation's greatness. Let these great truths be impressed on the minds of the children on the "Children's Rally Day for America"—Lord's day, Nov. 20th.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Looking from my office window one day, not long ago, out upon a cross street, we beheld a sight which filled us first with pity, then with indignation. A man and a woman, presumably husband and wife, were engaged in a contest over a small boy, perhaps six or seven years of age. The father was trying to get the boy to go with him, but the little fellow clung to his mother and refused to be parted from her. The mother was pleading, the father was storming, the child was crying. At length the father seized the child in his arms, tore it from its mother's clasp and started down the street, the mother following and pleading and the little boy making vigorous efforts to extricate himself from his father's hold. Seeing he could not carry him farther, he let the boy down rather unceremoniously on the walk and began to kick him. Just as we were about to leave the office to interpose a man came along and engaged them in conversation, and after a few moments the three passed around the corner out of our sight, and we know not what was the end of the domestic tragedy. Let us hope that the poor little fellow was permitted to remain with his mother, and that whatever evil influence may have brought discord and strife in that family may be removed.

It has occurred to us, as we have thought upon that sad scene, that it is only a striking symbol of what is going on continually, especially in our towns and cities. There are two opposing influences contending for our boys. On the one hand there is parental love and on the other Satanic influences are seeking to draw them from the paths of virtue, of righteousness and purity into the downward way that leadeth to destruction. Satan wants the boys, and he cannot run his kingdom without them; and yet the home, the church and the state all require the boys, out of which to mold men that are to decide their future destiny. What a contest this is that is going on! How all heaven must be interested in it! Every saloon, every gaming table, every brothel, every ungodly home is an agent of the devil to entice our boys into his service. One of the problems of the age is how to overcome these evil forces and save the boys for the church, the state and the home. How poor and inadequate seem our methods and our zeal for the salvation of the boys, in view of the perils that surround them and the agencies seeking their ruin!

An agitation is now in progress in St. Louis, under the leadership of Mr. Hoagland, in favor of the enactment of the curfew ordinance, requiring boys and girls under fifteen years to be off the streets after eight o'clock. This ordinance has been tried in many towns and cities, and has worked most beneficently in the way of decreasing crime and promoting good order. It is one of the ways in which civil law can co-operate with the religious agencies to save our boys and girls from the snares of the evil one. It is to be regretted that many homes exercise little or no restraint in this direction, and it is all the more important that an ordinance of the city should reinforce the discipline of the home, both in preventing crime and in protecting the young. We trust the ordinance which has already passed through one branch of our city government may receive the approval of the other and become a law.* It will then become the duty of all good citizens to cooperate with the city authorities in its enforcement. The devil probably has no more successful school of vice than the streets of our cities and towns after nightfall.

He was a bright-faced, manly little fellow of eight or nine years of age who stood on the corner of the street on last Sunday morning, with his Sunday-school book in his hand, waiting for the car to carry him from the western part of the city to a down-town church. "Where do you go to Sunday-school?" we asked. "To the Compton Avenue Presbyterian Church," he replied. "That is a long way to go to Sunday-school," we said. "Here is a church just on the corner; why not go there?" "That is a Catholic Church," he replied, as if that were reason enough why a Presbyterian boy should not go there. "But there are other schools in the neighborhood," we said. "Yes," he replied, "but I have been so long a member of that church that I feel more at home there than anywhere else!" Just then the car came along, and we both stepped on board, each of us going to the Sunday-school where we would feel most at home. There was a boy who had religious convictions, and who had a love for his church and Sunday-school, and who had fixed habits of attending religious services, at the age of about eight or nine years. That boy is comparatively safe, even amid the temptations of city life. He is already anchored to home and church and school, and these anchors will probably hold him amid all the temptations and trials to which he may be exposed. It was an object-lesson on the value of early religious training. Ordinarily, we do not begin soon enough to plant the seeds of religious truth, and to weave the strands in the cable of good habits, which are to hold our boys and girls in the storms that are to overtake them later on.

Since the foregoing paragraphs about the boys were written, we took occasion, passing up Olive Street returning from our noon lunch, to study the faces of the people who throng that busy street at the noon hour. What a variety of types, and how varied the histories written thereon! There were comedy and tragedy and plain bestiality. How few young people stop to think that they are writing their biographies on their faces! You hide your deeds behind screens, do you, and under cover of darkness? Ah no, young man. You are writing them, and even your thoughts, all over your countenance. One of the men into whose face we looked, had almost white hair, and was well dressed; but his face looked as if its fire would light a match, and upon every feature was written the dominance of fleshly appetites, the supremacy of the baser passions. Does he imagine his secret life is known only to himself and a few intimates? It is written in letters of fire all over his face, and he that runs may read it. Learn it early young friends: there is no beautifier of the face like pure thoughts, high ideals, noble, unselfish deeds. Begin now to prepare for a beautiful old age.

*The ordinance has passed both houses and is now in force. The hours are eight in winter and nine in summer.

Hour of Prayer.

AGGRESSIVENESS OF SIN.

(Mid-week Prayer-meeting Topic, Nov. 16th.)

But evil men and impostors shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.—2 Tim. 3:13.

It is a fact taught in Scripture and confirmed by observation and experience, that while good men grow better evil men grow worse; that sin as well as righteousness is aggressive when it gets its seat in the heart of man. We believe it may be said with equal truth that, because of the weakness of the flesh and the depraved nature of men's appetites, sin makes headway more easily than does righteousness. It is easier to float down stream than it is to swim against the current. The context of the passage above quoted would seem to indicate that this is the apostle's thought. He had just been referring to his trials and persecutions and added, "Yea, and all that would live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. But evil men and impostors shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." It is not intimated that the latter class suffer any persecution. The world in which they live and move is congenial to their character and aims. They mistake the suspension of divine judgment upon their conduct for divine indifference, and go on sinning with impunity, waxing worse and worse.

Two classes of persons are here said to wax worse and worse, namely, "evil men" and "impostors." By the first we suppose is meant those who are open and aboveboard in their wickedness, making no pretensions whatever in the way of religion. Impostors are men who pretend to be what they are not. They have chosen "the livery of heaven to serve the devil in." They are professors of Christianity, but not possessors. They are Christians "for revenue only," or for a baser purpose. They are hypocrites, a class of men concerning whom Jesus uttered his most scathing denunciation. Of both these classes it is affirmed that their wickedness is of an aggressive character. They "wax worse and worse."

It is easy to see why this is so. Both these classes of men are acting contrary to their own convictions of right and truth. They ignore the voice of their conscience reproving them, until these consciences have become seared. They have resisted the higher promptings of their nature until that nature has become hard and callous. Few men are aware of the awful consequences to their moral nature of sinning against light and knowledge. Few, alas! understand the insidious nature of sin, which, if once admitted to the heart, spreads its poisonous influence, unless speedily checked, over the whole moral nature. It is a repetition of the story of the camel and the Arab. The camel only wanted permission at first to put its head in the Arab's hut. Gradually it drew its entire body inside the Arab's lowly dwelling, and once in, intimated to the Arab that as there was not room for both, the Arab must get out.

Such is the aggressive nature of sin. It is not content with controlling a part of one's thoughts and motives and actions, but once admitted it insists on complete dominance.

It is to be noticed, further, that these wicked classes not only deceive others in their attempts to carry out their wicked ends, but they are themselves deceived. Satan is a great deceiver. He promises wealth and gives poverty and penury. He promises pleasure and at last gives dishonor and wretchedness. He promises honor and power and at last gives dishonor and abject weakness. He promises life and gives death. Such are the wages of sin. Such are the deceptions of Satan.

The moral from this is very easy: Resist the first encroachments of sin. Refuse to compromise with it. Once you have felt its sting do not rest until you have found the antidote offered by the Great Physician. Do not tamper with you conscience. Every known violation of righteousness makes it easier to take the next downward step and more difficult to retrieve one's self. Do not rely upon your own strength to free yourself from the power of evil habit, but seek the strength which Christ offers, and in his name you can overcome.

PRAYER.

O, God our Father, we thank Thee, not only for the revelation of Thy love in Christ Jesus, but for the revelation of Thy righteous wrath against sin. We thank Thee for the power of the gospel, by which we are saved from the dominion of sin and its awful consequences, and come into possession of life eternal. Help us, we beseech Thee, to be more mindful of the insidious character and the awful ravages of sin, and to turn from its fascinating power before it has made us its complete bond servants. Instead of growing worse and worse, may it be our happy lot, under Thy divine leading, to grow more and more Christlike in our characters, until we shall be at last transformed into His image. For His Name's sake. Amen!

The Religious World.

The following interesting interview by Rev. E. A. Steiner, of Springfield, Ohio, appeared in the Advance, October 20th, and is republished here because of its interest and important bearing on a religious movement now attracting wide attention. —EDITOR.

An Interview with Dr. Herzl, the Leader of Zionism.

In the city of Vienna, opposite that piece of dainty Gothic architecture, the Votivkirche, is the office of Die Welt, the organ of Zionism, the new movement to solve an old problem in an old way. Dr. Theodor Herzl, the editor of the paper and the author of that epoch-making book, "The Jewish State," was there at an appointed hour; and to meet the man means to have faith in the movement in spite of one's incredulity as to the feasibility of his plans.

The first impression in meeting him is that of disappointment. I expected to meet a small copy of Michael Angelo's Moses, or a copy of my own image of Jeremiah; instead, I found a man with the face and bearing of a king, who repels one by his reserve, but fascinates by the dignity of his bearing and by the classic beauty of his figure and face. The fire of Sinai is in his eyes, though he bears none of its rugged features. The prophet's sadness has drawn its lines upon his face, but unlike our conception of the prophets, he is dressed in the height of fashion, and is surrounded by the comforts and luxuries of life.

Dr. Herzl is a lawyer by profession, but has chosen a literary career, in which he has been very successful. He is one of the editors of the Neue Frei Presse, one of the best German newspapers in Europe. He is the author of many books, and a dramatist of great promise.

"I am at your disposal," he said, throwing himself into a comfortable arm-chair, and in spite of his readiness to be interviewed, I was not very ready with my questions, and so he began:

"I suppose you would like to know what made me write that book."

"Yes," I said, "that's one of the questions I would like to ask you."

"That book wrote itself," he replied. "It forced itself upon me. I fought it, for it meant for me to show my colors, and to force the Jews of Europe to show their colors, and for a Jew in Austria to show himself a Jew, especially if he be a literary man, is dangerous to his reputation as an author, and still more perilous to the publication with which he is connected. The Jews here have played the game of hiding a long time. We have hidden our Old Testament names behind those of our New Testament enemies. We have shunned the synagogue, and have sprinkled ourselves with holy water, and have kept from our children the dreadful secret that their parents were Jews—and yet we were persecuted. We wanted to be Austrians or Germans; we delighted to mingle with our Gentile neighbors, but "Juden raus" was the cry in Germany. It was echoed in Austria, it was realized in Russia, and in Poland they are beating them to death by thousands. If we are to go, whither shall we go? If we cannot be citizens here in the land of our birth, where shall we be citizens? They can't kill us off. They have tried it for thousands of years; they have not succeeded; let them give us a land, no matter how small, but let it be our own land, where we may not only carry the burdens, but also have the privileges of citizenship."

"Do you think," I asked, "that the Jews will be willing to go to Palestine, even if you get the land?"

"No, not all at once," he replied. "The poor Jews of Russia and Poland will certainly be willing to go immediately. They will be the pioneers. They will till the soil, build roads and telegraphs, and then the merchants, manufacturers and artists will come of themselves."

"Do you believe that the Jews of Poland and Russia will make good pioneers? Are they not all traders?" I asked naturally.

"That is a great fallacy. The factories of these two countries are full of Jewish laborers, wherever work is given to them. They work industriously and faithfully. They are poisoned by the thousands in match factories, where they work for about twenty cents a day. They dig in the mines; they manufacture trimmings for the peasants' dress, buttons, optical goods, wagon grease—anything they can do, they do. The reason they cannot work in the fields is simply this: They cannot compete with the native laborers who can live on a still smaller pittance than the Jews.

"The Jew is in the majority in the sweatshops of the world. If he must be a sweater, and if he can do nothing else, he can at least do that in Palestine, and from there he can sell his clothes just as well as he can from London or Vienna."

"Have you any hope that the condition of the Jew in Europe will grow any better with the growing civilization?"

"No, indeed not," he said emphatically. "It will grow worse every day. Look at France, which sheltered the Jew when everybody else persecuted him—which up to ten years ago hadn't a shadow of anti-Semitism. See to what tremendous proportions it has grown now. In Hungary, where they are very prosperous, the Polish horrors will repeat themselves in the next ten years. In Austria the Jews' business is ruined; many hotels and coffee houses are closed against them, and such a thing as social relations with Gentiles is an unheard-of thing. In England the feeling against the Jews is growing daily. In Germany—cultured Germany—the Jew has as hard a condition to face as anywhere in the world."

"Do you think the Sultan will be willing to sell Palestine to the Jews?"

"No, not just now; but events are shaping themselves in such a way as at least to give us hope that he will be glad to let some neutral power have it. Take, for instance, the journey of the German Emperor to Jerusalem. It is turning the attention of the Powers to this little country. France doesn't like it a bit, and says so. Russia doesn't like it a bit better, but doesn't say anything. Austria doesn't like it at all, but doesn't care to say anything; and the Pope—well, you may imagine what he thinks about it. The Powers least favorable to the Jews, in a scramble which might ensue, will be only too willing to put the Jews in their old country, and so kill 1,000 birds with one stone; check the ambitions of the German Emperor and get rid of the vexing Jewish question."

"What if you fail in securing Palestine—you yourselves?"

"What if we fail? The movement itself cannot be a failure. It has already created, or recreated the Jewish state; it has caught the drifting, tossed Jew, and has given him a state if only in his dreams. It has brought him back to his faith and to his God, and that is worth all the trouble we have taken. But it will not fail. We may, in this generation; but Zionism will live until it is realized. It is what the Jew needs. It is what God wants.

"Just look at the men the movement has gathered: Max Nordau, Gustavus Keller, Bernhard Lazarus, Rabbi Moheleth and dozens of other men from all parts of the world. Our coming Basle Conference will bring together a larger concourse of celebrated Jews than have ever gathered since the balmy days of Judaism."

The few moments that the busy man could give me came to a close, and I went away thanking God that in this materialistic age he inspires men to forget self and listen to the voice of the Almighty One, and to the work he bids them to do. So we may yet live to see the realization of a nation's longing and weeping; see the end of Israel's exile, and behold the throne of David again occupied by one of his seed.

Our Budget.

—This is State Mission month.

—Has your church made its offering to this cause?

—Are you planning for such an offering during the present month?

—Do you vote for Christ and his righteousness?

—Is your own election to the kingdom of God sure?

—Did you study your politics from the Christian view-point?

—Is your Christianity founded on sound business principles?

—What does it take to constitute a Christian nation? is still a proper question.

—Truth cannot be created, and that that is is indestructible.

—"Christian Science" is not the only doctrine that is founded upon an eddy.

—The biblical instruction, to "lay hands suddenly on no man," is strictly adhered to in relation to the liquor traffic.

—The refusal of Roman Catholic authorities to endorse the plan for a congress of religions at the World's Fair in Paris in 1900, such as was held at Chicago, shows of what spirit they are where they have control.

—Some of our churches are planning to unite "Children's Rally Day for America," Nov. 20th, with the State Day for Missions in the church. This is a good plan where the offering has not been made.

—This combination is the more natural because a part of the children's collection goes to State Missions, and the whole of the church collection. It is all Home Missions. It brings the school and church into line on the same day in behalf of the same cause.

—The Word and Way asks, "Is your Christian work shaped after the right pattern?" How many patterns of Christian work are there? we should like to know.

—Next week we will offer our readers a symposium on the methods of conducting our National Conventions, and of the best means of making the Jubilee Convention a success. You will be interested in it. Look out for it.

—The qeestion is not so much, What shall we do with the Philippines? as, What shall we do with the Fillipinos? That is, it is not a question of getting more territory, but having the territory in our possession. Can we leave the inhabitants to Spain or to themselves? Are we not under obligations to help them to a better civilization and a better government? This seems to be the point of view of the administration, and it is one which the American people will approve.

—At the preacher's meeting held, in this office on last Monday, there were present as visitors, C. C. Smith, Cor. Sec. Negro Education and Evangelization, of Cincinnati, O.; J. J. Haley, Cynthiana, Ky.; J. L. Darsie, of Bethany, Va., and W. A. Meloan, Blandinsville, Ill. C. C. Smith made a brief talk on the outlook of Home Missions, and enlarged work in our larger cities. J. J. Haley is on his way to Columbia, Mo., where he is to deliver a course of lectures on "The Crucial Tests of the Bible." Bro. Meloan was at East St. Louis Christian Church on last Sunday and was on his way to Litchfield where he is to hold a protracted meeting. The preachers listened to an excellent paper from Dr. Dungan on "How to Preach First Principles." The preachers' reports of meetings all encouraging. In all about twenty additions were reported.

—The Christian Oracle announces that with the Thanksgiving special number it will appear in new form and its future announcements for the coming year. The price of the paper is to be reduced to one dollar per year.

—The Annual Report of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society has been mailed. Those desiring a copy can have one upon application. This is the most interesting report ever issued by the Society. Address A. McLean, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—The Interior says, "There is no reason why there should not be, in effect, a confederation of Christendom." We should like to add, upon the other hand, that there are many reasons why there should be such a confederation, at least of all evangelical church. The times are ripe for such a movement.

—A gentleman in this city is reported to have recently filed suit for a bill of divorce from his wife on the ground that she is "a religious fanatic." He alleges that his wife's religious propensities have become unbearable; that she has inaugurated daily prayers in the family, compelling the children to take part, and in her supplications held him up before the children as a sinner and a madman, alienating their affections from him, and that she neglects her household duties to attend the religious services of the divine healing school. It is certainly remarkable that a man should make his wife's religion the ground for a bill of divorce, and the case will hardly be pressed to an issue in the courts on that ground; but it is easy to see how religious fanaticism may be made an occasion for complaint against all religions by unreasonable, irreligious and indiscriminating men. It is very seldom that a man objects to his wife's religious habits, even to daily family prayers, but the neglect of household duties for religion goes beyond the province of reason. A woman no less than a man who will not provide for her own household is worse than an infidel. Had the above husband, however, been more considerate and had any just ground for complaint and known the difference between pure and undefiled religion and the divine healer's religion he would probably have placed his wife under the care of some physician having a reputation for the successful treatment of nervous disturbances instead of making use of her to offend Christianity.

—The Sultan is opposed to the Zionist movement and has forbidden the sale of any land in Palestine to Jews, even if they are Turkish subjects. Perhaps Emperor William can molify the Sultan's mind on this subject in behalf of his own subjects and prospective interests in Palestine and in Syria.

—While we have taken no part in the criticisms of the Santiago campaign and felt no desire to detract in the least any glory justly due to Gen. Shafter for the management and results of the battle we do not think that the method of meeting the charges of inefficiency or neglect which have been so freely and so boldly made against him and others by comparison with other battles where losses were greater exactly the square thing. It is a question whether there was the neglect of anything within human forethought previous to the battle that would have reduced the fatalities of the battle? The slaughter of men in battle is bad at best, but if due to inefficient management or neglected factors or movements it is infinitely worse.

—We wish to again ask you to call the children's attention to their column in this paper. They will find the writer a most pleasing companion and enjoy his plans for their amusement and profit.

—The dedication program of the new Central Building of the Y. M. C. A., at Grand and Franklin Aves., this city, occupied five of the evenings of last week. Monday, Oct. 31, was contributor's night; Tuesday, business men's night; Thursday, young men's night; Friday, young people's night, and Saturday, student's night. There was a fine program for each night and a fine audience for each program. This city now has one of the finest and best equipped Y. M. C. A. buildings in the West, and under one of the best managements.

—In the Family Circle this week will be found a short article from Mexico and the picture of two of its greatest cathredals. The article is from O. Curtis Omer, Mexico City. Bro. Omer and his wife are anxious that the Disciples of Christ open a mission in that city at once. While he has heard of but one other Disciple of Christ there he thinks the field ripe for mission work. The following extract from his letter we think, worthy of the attention of our Foreign Mission Board and the Disciples of Christ in the United States:

The opportunity here I think is all that could be desired if the work could only be started. The first thing to do would be to open a mission school for those who have no means of getting an education otherwise. In this way they could be brought up in the church and learn the ways of truth and thus become a great help in bringing others to their own people into the work. There are many good people, but poor who would be only too glad to turn their children over to a mission so that they might get an education and become better men and women. It would be a hard matter to describe the poverty and ignorance of the most of Mexico's inhabitants. All over the republic and at every railway station there are many beggars and hence the need of Christian knowledge and education. It is true, Mexico is making a great stride towards reforming these conditions, but why cannot the Christian Church lend a helping hand so that they may have a grand footing when the great reformation is accomplished?

—The town of Pullman has not prospered since its encounter with Debs, and now that it is found guilty of exceeding the limits of its corporate charter by the courts it will probably cease its real estate experiments. Retribution sooner or later overtakes all that is evil.

—President Harper, of the University of Chicago, has recently made charges against theological seminaries that are likely to arouse no little discussion and self-examination. Theological as well as other institutions may fall behind the times in their confidence of possessed truth and long-continued methods, and therefore need an awakening on the subject such as President Harper's declarations are calculated to produce. We will quote President Harper's words as published in the Central Christian Advocate, of this city, last week, but as we have no theological seminaries to look after, further comments on what he says are unnecessary:

The theological seminaries are not in touch with the times. They do not meet the demands of the times. They are not preparing men for the ministry who are able to grapple with the situation in which the Christian church to-day finds itself. These men are prepared, perhaps, to solve the problem of rural parishes, but they are for the most part unfitted to deal with the urban problems.

The old and artificial distinction between Old Testament exegesis and New Testament exegesis, ecclesiastical history and dogmatics, is one which cannot be maintained. The Old Testament student takes up no problem that does not require of him the use of the New Testament, and the New Testament student cannot deal intelligently with a single subject who has not considered that subject in all its details from an Old Testament point of view. The introduction of biblical theology as distinguished from dogmatic theology has produced confusion in the organization. One-third to one-half of the time of the theological student is wasted in this vain effort to accommodate himself to the requirements of the so-called departments, involving artificial distinctions which exhaust his patience and his time. A new order of things is demanded and the indications seem to point to the introduction of this new order of things in the opening years in the coming century; but meanwhile we are drifting, and precious time is being lost.

I raise the question whether our divinity school may not be one of the pioneers in readjusting the work of training men for the ministry to the new conditions which exist to-day. To do this will require courage and great skill. I do not have in mind the question of creed or doctrine. My thought relates exclusively to the form and method of work, the external situation which has developed and the eradication of what seems to me to be the high-school method now employed in most of our divinity schools and the substitution of a true university method.

—Word has just come to us that J. B. Crane, of Waynesboro, Va., one of the co-laborers of the fathers of the Restoration movement has gone to his heavenly reward. A suitable obituary will appear in our next issue. We extend our sympathy to Sister Crane in her sorrow.

—An obituary of one of the victims of the Virden riot, Oct. 12th, at Virden, Ill,, appears in this paper. Also in the same department a short notice of the ilfe and death of J. J. Irvine, one of our efficient and fathful ministers of the gospel. Bro. Wright has written briefly but eloquently of his departure.

—In a letter signed by "A Friend," recently, was one dollar to be forwarded to Church Extension secretary. The letter indicated that the writer was a member of one of the churches of Christ in Des Moines, Ia., and closed with the wish that the offering "was one hundred dollars instead of one." This indicates how Church Extension is appreciated even by those who can give only small amounts.

—The Interior advises those who are capable to learn, in a friendly way, of those following after the Christian Science delusion, what there is in it that commends it to them. We commend the attitude of the Interior toward this branch of psychic phenomena. In this age of investigation and discovery it is not best to openly condemn any new thing as a fraud nor antagonize it as an enemy until the facts in the case have been brought to light. Remember that the tree is known by its fruits. The delusion in Christian Science lies in the effort to exalt it above Christianity, whereas it is only a branch of psychical science. There is no spiritual want in an awakened heart that may not be supplied by Christianity.

—Iowa has abolished the distinction made between male and female teachers in her public schools as regards their salaries. All teachers of the same grade are to be paid the same salary regardless of the question of sex. The women feel that they have thus scored a victory in their fight for equal rights, but the young men are wondering what the effect of this law will be upon their opportunities for marriage. Perhaps it will enable women to get better husbands. At all events, right is right, and women should not feel that they are compelled to marry for a support in life. The young men of Iowa will have to move their aspirations up a notch or so to keep up with the procession.

—At a meeting of the Board of Church Extension on November 1st, a great deal of important business was transacted. The corresponding secretary's report showed $3,718.36 collected for October. Of this amount 147 churches sent $1,240.36; individuals, $1,903, and a bequest was received amounting to $575. The treasurer also collected $557.97 of interest which made a total of new receipts, amounting to $4,276.33. There was returned on outstanding loans, $975.31. This shows a healthy gain in receipts over October, 1897, and there is a hopeful outlook for Church Extension this coming year. The amount now in the permanent fund is over $170,000. At this meeting, the board granted the following loans, which will be paid at the completion of the church buildings: Pineville, Mo., $250; Monroe City, Ind., $400; Stuart, Ia., $400; Riverdale, Neb., $350; Blairstown, Mo., $500; Sac City, Ia., $800; Chippewa Falls, Wis., $250; Scottdale, Pa., $1,200; Pontiac, Ill., $300; Joppa, Md., $250; Reading, Pa., $2,000; Winston, N. C., (increase) $700; Bakersfield, Cal., $400. This is a total of thirteen loans, amounting to $7,800. It is earnestly hoped by all our missionary brethren that the aggressive work of our Board of Church Extension will receive most hearty support. No missionary church should fail to send an offering to this important work. Remittances should be made to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—Any article or communication of any kind sent to this paper for publication at the same time that it is sent to one or more other papers, without any notice to the editors that a duplicate has been sent elsewhere, must be regarded as an effort to take advantage of us, and to cause us to do what we would not do with a knowledge of the facts. It is a rule in this office, as it is in other well-regulated offices, not to publish articles that are sent to other religious journals, unless they be of the nature of an official notice. We are constantly declining articles from our contributors for a lack of space, and it is not fair to them nor to our readers to publish matter that is to appear in our other religious journals. We hope our writers will remember this rule and act accordingly.

—There are some Germans who evidently do not believe that the character of Emperor William's visit to the Holy Land is in keeping with the spirit of Christianity and its founder. Here is the opinion of a Teuton as expressed in a recent number of the Observer, as follows:

There are not a few patriotic Germans who are incensed at the grandiose proportions which this pilgrimage has assumed. They think that even a mighty German kaiser visiting the early cradle of Christianity where its Founder could not find a place to lay his head might approach those holiest spots on the earth's surface with more of evident humility, with less of the trappings of circumstance and authority. Warships to accompany him, soldiers before and behind, servants in gold embroidered liveries, bishops and canons in their milinery, salvoes of artillery and blowing of trumpets—these are not the accompaniments which many honest German patriots and Christians like to see, but they have not given public utterance to their thoughts.

—We learn from a note from Bro. W. S. Broadhurst, of Louisville, Ky., that his large printing plant on Broadway, in that city, was destroyed by fire on Monday evening, 31st ult. We regret to hear of this loss, though we understand the establishment was insured so as to cover the larger part of the loss. Bro. Broadhurst was about changing his headquarters from Louisville to Chicago, where he expects to remove in a short time to assume the duties of business manager of the Oracle Publishing Co.

—We have received clippings from the local press giving account of the dedication of the new church edifice being erected by the Disciples of Christ at Brockton, Mass. The paper states that "the building has been completed as the result of untiring effort and considerable self-sacrifice on the part of those who will attend divine service therein and the hard and ceaseless work of the pastor, Rev. G. A. Reinl, who since he came here two and a half years ago has, with but little means at the disposal of himself or congregation, bought and paid for a lot of land, and built thereon an edifice which, while not as large and handsomely decorated as some similar institutions, is sure to prove the means of bringing many a wandering sinner from the temptations of the outside world into close and profitable communion with God." The building is said to be a two-story structure of Gothic architecture, the entrance being by two doors, one on either side of the building. These doors lead into cozy vestibules. The church is handsomely decorated and furnished. The architect was our Brother G. Wilton Lewis, of Everett, Mass. The dedication sermon was preached by Roland A. Nichols, of Worcester, and Bros. R. H. Bolton, E. C. Davis, S. M. Hunt and the pastor, G. A. Reinl, assisted in carrying out an interesting program. There were ordination services in the afternoon, with a sermon by Bro. E. C. Davis. We are glad to note this addition to our forces in the East, and extend our congratulations and best wishes to Bro. Reinl and flock at Brockton.

—In another place we publish a sermon by Bro. Ragland, of Fayetteville, preached on the occasion of the departure of Miss Annie Agnes Lackey to join the American missionaries in India. It was a notable occasion in the church at Fayetteville. Indeed, in a letter from Bro. Ragland, he says: "This is the best day our church in Fayetteville has ever seen." Bro. Ragland agreed to become responsible to the C. W. B. M. for the raising of $1,000 to pay Miss Lackey's passage to India and her salary for one year. This was a brave and generous thing for Bro. R. to pledge. As to the outlook for raising it Bro. R. writes as follows:

When Miss Lackey received the appointment at Chattanooga, Miss Withers, of Florida, arose and said: "Bro. Ragland, I want to be the first to give $20 to Miss Lackey's passage money to India;" then Sister Teachout, of Cleveland, O., said: "I will gladly give $25." This was followed by Sister F. L. Sutton, of Litle Rock, who said: "I will give $50." Last week I had a letter from the auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. in Minneapolis saying, $15 dollars had been sent to Miss Lois A. White to apply on the fund for Miss Lackey. Only a day or two ago a letter came from Sister Walden, of Fort Worth, Tex., telling the good news that she had just sent a draft for $200 to Miss Lois White for Miss Lackey. Last Sunday I presented the matter to my own congregation, and within ten minutes almost $100 was subscribed. So you see how God is blessing me. I am so ashamed that I even doubted that the whole amount could be raised.

We think it is only necessary to publish these facts to enlist the interest of our Christian women and others in this good word. Bro. Ragland should receive the assurance soon that the whole amount will be provided.

—"Of course, we all have our ideas about running church papers. I have mine. I think Sunday-school Departments and Endeavor Departments in our church papers are a nuisance. I am sorry the Register-Review has adopted this fad.—Simpson Ely, in Register Review.

It might be well to raise the inquiry as to whether the above represents the sentiment of any considerable number of our own readers. We have supposed that these departments representing practical lines of church work would be found helpful to our readers and would be appreciated by them. If, however, we are mistaken in this, we would find it more economical to omit them. The "Hour of Prayer," too, designed to aid the midweek prayer-meeting and to promote personal piety, can be omitted if it is failing to accomplish its purpose. We hope our readers will feel free to express themselves concerning the utility or inutility of any feature of the paper.

—The German Emperor is said to have been the first "Christian" that has been permitted to enter David's tomb at Jerusalem since 1187. The German Emperor seemed to have the right of way through all Mohammedan institutions, their most sacred tombs not accepted. We wonder if his entrance to and exit from this "sacred shrine" will shed any new light on sacred history.

A PREACHER'S REPORT

Interesting Statement by Elder Joel H. Austin of Goshen, Ind.

"I was a victim of catarrh and had almost constant pain in my head. The trouble was gradually working down on my lungs. I was weak and irresolute. My wife had the grip and Hood's Sarsaparilla cured her. After this I had the same disease and resorted to Hood's. In a short time the aches and pains were relieved and I also saw the medicine was helping my catarrh. In six weeks I ceased to have any further trouble with it and I am now a well man. The pains and bloating I had in my limbs are gone and I am relieved of a heart trouble. I am thankful for a medicine so intelligently compounded and so admirably adapted to the needs of the system." ELDER JOEL H. AUSTIN, Goshen, Indiana.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills, easy to take, easy to operate. 25 cents.

—The young people of the church in Eureka, Ill., gave a royal farewell reception to the retiring pastor, the evening of Oct. 28. It has been his effort to be helpful to all classes and has given especial attention to the young, the appreciation of which was shown by a purse of money and a splendid study chair.

—Our frontispiece this week presents the face of another one of our editorial staff and one whose contributions are always read with interest. Bro. Haley is pastor of the church at Cynthiana, Ky. He spent eleven years in Australia and four and a half years at Birkenhead, England, in each of which places his work was highly appreciated. Bro. Haley is this week delivering a series of lectures before the Bible College at Columbia, Mo., on "The Old Book in a New Crucible." He stands equally high as a preacher and writer, and is now in about the full prime of life. He is a Kentuckian by birth, and a graduate of Kentucky University.

—Last week we announced the news of the healing of the division that had existed in the church at Clarksville, Tenn., for some time. We have received clippings from the local papers containing full accounts of the proceedings. It is sufficient to say here that the preachers, J. C. Hay, who was ministering to one of the congregations, and A. M. Growden, who was preaching for the other, acted nobly and unselfishly in the matter, and manifested the Spirit of Christ in the course which they pursued. By mutual concessions and mutual forgiveness the breach was healed. We congratulate the two pastors, the united church and Bro. Romig, under whose labors the union was consummated. It was a signal triumph of the gospel and the spirit of brotherly love and unity over whatever discordant elements had temporarily gained ascendance. These brethren have all given additional evidence of their loyalty to the Master in the course they have pursued. We can only hope that the spirit which prevailed in bringing about this happy condition of things in Clarksville may be permitted to have its way in all congregations which have been similarly affected.

—Dr. H. L. Willett writes us from Antwerp. He wrote his article on Bible-school lesson after going aboard the ship at New York, intending to send it back by the pilot, but missed the pilot by a few minutes, and so had to wait until across the Atlantic before another opportunity to send it to us came. Three articles came from him this week, but two of them are too late to be of present use to our readers, and so we omit them. The one that appears in this paper is the one in its regular order, and we presume that the others will now follow without intermission.

—We have already noted with pleasure that Gen. Drake has given five thousand dollars to our Board of Home Missions (Benj. L. Smith, Cor. Sec.) to be a permanent fund with which the Home Board agrees to maintain a missionary all the time. We are glad to see our brethren taking up the work of Home Missions especially in this the Jubilee Year of the American Christian Missionary Society. We hope many and large gifts will be sent to the Home Society this year that we may realize the motto of the Chattanooga Convention—"One Hundred Thousand Dollars for Home Missions in the Jubilee Year."

—In the recent death of Dr. Samuel A. Mutchmore the Presbyterian Church has lost an able, scholarly editor and preacher. He was the editor of the Presbyterian and pastor of the Memorial Church, Philadelphia, Pa. "His religious life was one of consecration, both of his strength and of his means. His abilities and services were recognized by the church in his election to the Moderatorship in Saratoga, 1894."

—The Santa Cruz Daily Sentinel, Santa Cruz, Cal., contains the following singular answer to prayer. The answer, however, evidently did not come from heaven. We glean only the facts from the Sentinel, omitting the unsavory details:

Pastor McHatton, of the Christian Church, is a firmer believer in the efficacy of prayer than ever, if that be possible. He prayed for $300 with which to complete his church on Lincoln St., and his prayer met with a responsive chord when Joseph Fleiss, or Fleisher, listened to it. Fleiss was not a member of the church, but happened to attend services when the pastor, whose heart and soul are wrapped up in the completion of the structure, prayed for financial assistance. The donation came about in rather an unexpected and tragic manner, for the giver lay cold in death when a check for the amount was handed to him. A wound in his right temple, a pool of blood on the lounge where his head rested and a pistol on the floor with one chamber empty told the story of the suicide. The right temple was powder burned, showing that the pistol had been held close to the head. On the bed was a typewriter. When the trunk of the deceased was opened two typewritten letters were found. One was addressed to the pastor of the Christian Church, containing two checks, one for $300 and the other for $80. Both checks were properly stamped, and drawn on the Bank of Santa Cruz Co. The other letter was addressed to Geo. Nicol. Fleiss did not commit suicide because of lack of means, for he had government bonds amounting to $1,000 and $380 on deposit in the Bank of Santa Cruz Co. There were two causes that impelled him to his rash act. One was that he was a sufferer from heart trouble, which caused him to be melancholy. The other, according to those who knew him, was due to a love affair he had in the East. He was in love with a young lady who had died since he came to Santa Cruz. Over this he brooded constantly. After her death he lost interest in his surroundings.

In a letter which he left he says:

I hereby give and bequeath to the First Christian Church of Santa Cruz, as per check enclosed, $300, hereby authorizing the pastor (I don't know what his name is. It might be Beans, for that comes nearest to being mine of anything I know of now), or any one in authority of the First Christian Church, to cash or collect the same. If the First Christian Church refuses to accept same, owing to my rash act, any other denomination may have same by applying for it; and if no other denomination, I guess some one will call for it. I have no particular reason for giving the same to the First Christian Church, only, perhaps, the same is in construction and incomplete for lack of funds; and whether I go into a hole in the ground or any place else I cannot take any of it along anyway. I do not suppose I belong to any denomination, and if I did claim to I would be no credit to any one anyway, for I don't think any one would care to recognize me after this act.

Educational Conference in December.

We print elsewhere the report of the Educational Conference held at Moberly, last week, by one who was in attendance. The time was too short to arrange any definite plans for such a conference, and we are not surprised that no definite action was taken. It will be seen, however, that another conference has been arranged for and called to meet at the same place, Moberly, Mo., on Tuesday, the 6th of December. This gives a little less than a month to get ready for that conference, and there is no time to be lost. The object of the conference is of such pressing importance that it should call out a representative assembly of the brotherhood of the state.

It is recognized by all of us that Missouri is not doing her share of the educational work of the brotherhood, and is not meeting the responsibility growing out of our numbers and resources. The question to be faced and to be solved is, What is the best thing to do under existing conditions, and at the present time, to further our educational interests in Missouri? Shall we endow the Bible College at Columbia to meet the obligations we owe to that institution, as the leading religious body in the state, and to our own boys and girls who are going there as students? If so, shall we also utilize the other institutions that we have in the state in the fields where they are located, and seek to make the most out of them? Or, shall we undertake an independent educational enterprise, and seek to concentrate the brotherhood of the state in one educational effort? This latter plan has been tried without any practical result, except to demonstrate its impracticability. It seems to us, therefore, that there remains nothing else for us to do but to rally the friends of these different institutions to give them better financial support, and to lay plans by which they may be endowed. But these are questions of such far-reaching importance as to demand the best thought of the wisest men we have in the state.

In order both to form and to formulate the sentiment of the brotherhood of the state on this subject we invite a condensed statement of opinion from such as feel an interest in our educational work in the state, on the following question: What ought the brotherhood in Missouri to undertake to do now to meet the educational demands that are made upon us? Let the answers be very brief, that we may hear from many on this question. Let them be specific, too, that they may be understood. Above all, let them be practicable, pointing out something that lies within the range of possibility and reasonable probability. Let them come promptly, for the time is short.

How We Look from an Australian Point of View.

Our good brother, A. B. Maston, from Australia, after telling the people of this country about the good points of the churches in the antipodes, is now telling the people of Australia, through the Australian Christian, his impression of things in this country. In the article now before us entitled, "In Dixie Land," he gives an account of his visit to Tennessee. Referring to the position of David Lipscomb, of the Gospel Advocate, he says:

He thinks the New Testament contains the revelation from God, and that it is complete in itself, and that we can neither add to or subtract. In theory that is what we all believe, but Bro. Lipscomb insists upon putting it into practice.

This announcement might be appropriately headed, "Important if True." If this represents Bro. Maston's sentiments we may expect him, on his return to Australia, to pattern his paper after the Gospel Advocate, so far as its teaching is concerned, and devote much of his time and space to opposing what the rest of the brotherhood are doing along missionary, educational and benevolent lines.

Concerning our "Bible colleges and theological schools generally," he says it is his "candid judgment" that they "are turning out a class of men who preach because they are paid instead of because they are impelled by a great and unquenchable desire for the salvation of men and the glory of God." He admits there are exceptions to this rule, but this is the rule. That is about the harshest judgment of a class of men who have given themselves special training for the ministry of the Word we remember to have seen from any respectable source. We are compelled to say in the light of these statements, that in our "candid judgment" Bro. Maston has suffered severely in loss of Christian charity, and in breadth of view and sympathy by his associations on the other side of the globe.

MYSTERY—RATIONALISM—SPECULATION.

B. W. PIERCE.

No man knows all of anything. We have all used an ordinary lamp, and yet all our scribes and editors could not, we presume, describe every process in the manufacture of that useful article. If we have underestimated their ability we might inquire farther, Of what is a lamp made? "Matter?" Yes. But what is matter? "Anything that occupies space and is impenetrable." Yes. Is the form, or weight, or size, or space-occupancy, or all these and others combined the matter out of which the lamp is made? Possibly some one would suggest the term substance—that that stands under and gives tangibility to all material forms. But what is that? God knows—I don't. God gives the material, wise mechanics make the lamp, and men of common sense can light the lamp and use it as well as do sages. Light the lamp and use it—perhaps you may solve the mysteries later on.

We are informed that "man is so constituted that he cannot take cognizance of things except through his senses," and from this is deduced the remarkable conclusion that "when God would communicate with men he does so in manners and forms that are cognizable through their senses and never otherwise." In other words, God always, in communicating ideas to man, operates as man operates—through outward, tangible symbols. He so respects man's constitution that he always, in communicating ideas to man, uses symbols addressed to man's outward organs of sense. If this be true, the claim to a divine revelation apart from nature falls to the ground. Revelation, then, becomes the interpretation of outward symbols. Either the human mind operating upon external symbols, gives man religion; or the divine mind operating through outward symbols gives man religion. In the one case we should have deism, and in the other a sort of rationalism almost identical with skepticism. How should we distinguish between the human and divine?

There is a wide difference between two persons, one of whom is searching for spiritual truths through outward symbols, and the other receiving those same truths through the same symbols selected and presented by a divine teacher. But the one who knows the spiritual truth and presents it, differs widely from either. The first is Paul's natural man. The last is his spiritual man. The second, of course, is the one to whom the gospel came. Now the spiritual man did not come into the possession of his spiritual ideas through outward symbols. As proof of this we cite 1 Cor. 2. These truths it is the province of the Spirit to reveal, and is above and beyond human reason.

The Spirit of prophecy is not the product of human reason or foresight. Neither is the subject-matter of prophecy deducible from the symbols. One may see the vision and not know its meaning. Another possessing the Spirit may interpret the divine mind through the symbols. The symbols may not be found in nature, and hence are not presented to the senses from without, but the divine mind operates from within. He is not limited to the use of natural symbols in communicating with men. The symbols in the case have no definite meaning till interpreted in vision or by a man empowered by the Spirit to do so. Here, then, in vision and in prophecy, the spiritual man stands on a higher plane than the natural man.

It must be observed, further, that such prophecy and teaching of the Spirit has no private interpretation. It deals with truths belonging to the entire race. The relation between the divine mind and the spiritual man is direct and primary; between the spiritual man and they to whom the gospel comes it is indirect, through words of the Spirit or other symbols. (Read Heb. 1.)

Just how the Spirit operated on the minds of the apostles so as to show things to come, or to enable them without thought to make their defense, is a mystery. That it did so operate is a matter of record, and not of observation. Through the preaching of the gospel by men who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit the church was established; and by the proclamation of that same gospel the church has come down through the ages. That the Holy Spirit was in the apostles before operating through the Word is evident from the Scriptures. That Christians did not come into possession through belief and obedience of the Spirit in that degree of fullness the apostles possessed it, is evident from the fact that the apostles laid hands on early Christians that they might receive the Holy Spirit. But that Christians do come into possession of the Spirit is evident from Peter's language to the Pentecostians: "And ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." This was not "the Word of the gospel" they were to receive. "Have ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed?" After baptism in the name of the Lord Jesus Paul laid hands on them and they received the Holy Spirit. This, of course, was not the Word. To the Galatians Paul writes: "Because ye are sons God hath sent forth his Spirit into your hearts crying, Abba, Father." This surely was not the Word of the gospel. "If any man has not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his."

Now the question of the direct relation between the Holy Spirit and the spirit of the Christian, it seems to me, is already established by the above and especially the following Scriptures: "God will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able bear, but will with the temptation make a way for escape." No man has ever been able to tell how God would make that promise good without admitting a direct relation between the Spirit of God and the Christian in temptation. Let some one try his powers at this point.

No man has a right to claim that relation who refuses to obey the gospel as set forth by the apostles of Jesus Christ. "He that heareth you heareth me." The Christian will not conduct himself out of harmony with the revelation as set forth in the New Testament.

Bear in mind one thing more. This spirit which is in the Christian is not there to teach him to neglect the gospel given of the "common salvation," not to give new revelations to the world. Its mission is not general, but to the individual. "God works in each Christian to will and to do of his good pleasure." Such an one loves to keep his commandments and do those things which are pleasing in his sight. This view properly respects the authority of the apostles, has no part with that disobedient, fanatical spirit which places its possessor on a par with the apostles, and properly claims for the Christian a relation not possessed by the man of the world. Each individual has special trials as well as the common class and we think needs the Spirit to guide, strengthen and uphold him as an individual. We are unable to see any reason or Scripture against the view here taken, and throw out these thoughts for the purpose of inciting others to live up to the privileges accorded the faithful.

THE THEOLOGY OF THE DISCIPLES, THE CHRISTOLOGY OF THE BIBLE.*

Theology is the science of religion. Christian theology is the science of the Christian religion.

But the term theology has come to mean the systematic arrangement of the doctrines of Christianity. There is no logical arrangement of the doctrines of Christianity in the Scriptures. But there is order.

Revelation is progressive, the process extending through centuries. God has given no science of botany, but he has given us the flowers; they are to be studied, compared, classified; the result is the science of botany.

He has revealed no science of astronomy, but he has made the stars. Science is systematized knowledge. The facts found are arranged in the proper order and relation; this is science.

God has revealed certain facts and doctrines in the Bible. When these facts and doctrines are arranged in the proper order we have the science of theology. The human mind naturally seeks logical arrangement.

Systems of doctrine have been found useful in the culture of the Christian life. In all theological systems there is a great central truth that is especially emphasized, and determines what the particular system shall be.

With Luther it was justification by faith; Calvin emphasized the sovereignty of God; Wesley laid the greatest stress on the work of the Holy Spirit.

Any system of theology that claims to be scriptural must begin, not with divine sovereignty, not justification by faith, nor the work of the Holy Spirit, but with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Christianity can only be understood through its divine Founder. It is not through doctrine to Christ, but through Christ to doctrine. The teachings of Jesus cannot be understood apart from his person.

Says Dr. Fairburn: "The most distinctive and determinative element in modern theology is a new feeling for Christ." This very sentiment from the beginning of our movement to the present time has been emphasized by our people.

CHRIST'S PLACE IN THE SCRIPTURES.

The thought always present in both the Old and the New Testament is redemption by Jesus Christ. This is the key to the meaning of Hebrew history. Jesus Christ is the central thought in both Testatments, and they must be interpreted by his person and work.

*An address prepared by L. D. Goodwin, A. M., Ph.D., pastor of the church at Macomb, Ill.; read at the state convention at Eureka.

Out of the wreck and ruin of paradise God points to a future Deliverer. Abel offers a lamb upon the altar and his faith embraces the Lamb of God who shall take away the sin of the world. Noah sees the promised One in the rainbow that spans the peaceful heavens and pitches his tent under the protection of its arch. Abraham rejoices to see the day of Christ, sees it, and is glad. When Jacob is dying he looks down the long line of centuries and sees the long-promised One.

"The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet until Shiloh come, and to him shall the gathering of the people be." A great leader and lawgiver leads the nation from bondage, but a prophet greater than Moses shall arise; him we shall hear in all things.

David looks forward to the reign of his greater son. The prophets speak of the sufferings of Christ and the glory that shall follow. Isaiah prophesies that a child shall be born and a son given, who is the Everlasting Father and the Prince of Peace. The same prophet declares that he shall be a root out of dry ground, despised and rejected of men, yet bearing in his own body the sins of the world.

Daniel sees a great kingdom over which the Messiah rules. In the New Testament all this finds its realization. Type has been succeeded by antitype, shadow has grown to substance, prediction has been consummated in fulfillment and the Christ of prophecy has become the Christ of history.

But what is the interpretation that the New Testament writers put on the Old Testament conception of Christ. The apostles and evangelists are certainly safe interpreters of the Old Testament.

First of all, the Jesus of the Gospels is the Christ. The Messiah of the Old Testament is the Christ, the anointed of the New Testament. He is the long-expected One for which they waited and for which the ages were the preparation, the King of Israel, "the desire of all nations," the Prophet, Priest and King of humanity.

But he is more than the Messiah; he is the Son of God. He is the Word incarnate, was in the beginning with God and was God. The revealer of God, God manifest in the flesh. "All things were by him and without him nothing made that was made." "He was before all things and by him all things consist." He is the Head of the body, the church, both Lord and Christ. Has been exalted to the highest heavens and is to be honored and worshiped. He is the long-promised Messiah and the Son of God.

We are now prepared to understand the place Christ occupied in the thought of the early church. To them he was Redeemer and Lord. They trusted in his blood for forgiveness of sins, were reconciled to God through his cross, and when groaning after immortality they embraced his resurrection life.

Any system of theology that claims to be Christian must give Jesus Christ the preeminence in all things. It is my purpose to show that our position as Disciples is in harmony with the biblical conception of Christ.

PLACE OF AUTHORITY.

There must be a standard of appeal. What is it? The Unitarian says the reason. The Roman Catholic, the church. The Protestant appeals to the Scriptures. The real authority in religion is Jesus Christ. He said himself, "All authority is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Every appeal must be made to Christ, as he has expressed himself in his Word. The Christ is infallible; beyond him there is no appeal. Before the incarnation he was the Word of God. He revealed himself as Lawgiver and Prophet. "He was the true light that lighteth every man coming into the world."

The Spirit of Christ was in the prophets when they spake beforehand of the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow. The Word of God before the incarnation was the revealer of God. He came to lawgiver and prophet and gave them their message. Thoughts are clothed in words. Jesus Christ is the word that expresses the thought of God.

To the pre-incarnate Christ we must attribute the moral sense of the heathen, the wisdom of the philosopher, the genius of the poet. The utterances of the prophets have value because they are inspired by him. The incarnate Christ reveals the Father, discloses the heart of God, expresses the thought of God.

Referring to the Old Testament as authority in religion, Jesus said: "You seach the Scriptures, and in them you think you have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." "The Scriptures must be fulfilled." "The Scriptures cannot be broken." Their moral failures were due to their ignorance of the Scriptures. "You do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God."

But this Spirit that was in the prophets would take possession of the apostles and guide them into all truth, take the things of Christ and show them unto us. Now the final authority in Christianity is the Lord Jesus Christ. The mind of Christ has been revealed to prophets and apostles. This is recorded in the Scriptures; to the Scriptures we must appeal to find the mind of Christ. In the Scriptures his will is recorded. All the authority in reason is because Christ enlightens the reason by his Spirit and Word.

If the church speaks with authority it is because the body is united to the head, or because the building rests upon Jesus Christ, the one foundation, and is the repository of divine truth.

This being true, we should be deaf to every other voice but the voice of the Son of God. Beyond him there is no appeal. If prophets and apostles are to be heard it is because they speak his Word. "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him."

FAITH IN CHRIST.

The faith of the gospel is faith in the personal Christ. Or, in other words, the faith required in order to salvation is not doctrinal, but personal. Not faith in a creed, but a personal trust in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ.

It is stated thus: "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God." The faith that saves is personal. It has Jesus for its object. Theories about Jesus, belief in doctrines, however true, have no saving vitality. A sinner, conscious of his ruin, needs a personal Savior. Such a Savior is Jesus Christ. No human system of doctrine can be the object of faith. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." This was the faith required in the preaching of the apostles.

Says Bishop Phillips Brooks: "If there is one change above all others that has altered our modern Christianity from what it was in apostolic times it is this, a substitution of belief in doctrine for loyalty to a person as the essence and test of the Christian life." "Christ is Christianity, and to follow him and to love him is to be a Christian. There are two ideas of Christianity: one magnifies doctrine and its great sin is heresy; the other magnifies obedience and its great sin disobedience."

The faith of the gospel rests upon Jesus as the Son of God. The sinner, conscious of his sin, turns away from every false hope, flees for refuge and lays hold on the hope set before him. He finds salvation in the Son of God. Jesus Christ satisfies the intellec and masters the heart. This may be a simple creed, but it is divine and possesses real saving vitality. It is faith in him who is our Prophet, Priest and King, who is the Son of God, who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification. This belief of the heart will produce love to Christ.

There will be a real personal attachment to Jesus. Such a faith produces obedience. It is not a mere passive belief, but a living faith that leads to an obedient life. The soul that really believes in Jesus receives him as a Savior, Master and Lord. But this means to accept his authority. The believing soul seeks to do the will of Christ, listens to the voice of Christ, and bows to the authority of Christ. So Christians come to be called by the name of Christ. If Jesus is the object of faith, the Lord and Master, would it not be the natural thing to call his followers by his name? "Let every one that names the name of Christ depart from iniquity." The church is built upon Jesus as the one foundation. He is the Head of the church, Redeemer, Shepherd and Lord. Ought not his church to be called by his name? To give a human name to the people of God is to rob Christ of what is his own. It is to give his glory to another.

RELATIVE VIRTUE OF OBEDIENCE.

The ordinances of the gospel are administered by the authority of Christ. The command of Jesus is: "Go ye, therefore, make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit." This is the authority for baptizing. It is the command of our Lord. We cannot set it aside without disobedience to the Head of the church.

This is equally true of the Lord's Supper. Says Jesus, "This do in remembrance of me." The Apostle Paul, in referring to the Lord's Supper said, "I delivered to you that which I also received of the Lord." These ordinances symbolize the great facts in the gospel of Christ. The Lord's Supper symbolizes his death. In this institution we see Jesus dying for our sins, his body broken and bruised and his blood poured out for our redemption. "As often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, you do show forth the Lord's death until he comes." Baptism symbolizes the burial and resurrection of Christ. "We are buried with Christ by baptism into death." As he arose from the dead by the glory of Father, we see it all symbolized in baptism. While we are buried and rise with him, we share in his resurrection life.

But these ordinances are closely related to salvation in Christ. The baptism of the believing penitent, relying upon Christ, is for the remission of sins. Its value depends upon the relation of the ordinance to Christ, and the faith of the person in Christ. "As many of you as have been baptized into Jesus Christ have put on Christ." Baptism is the complete surrender of the soul to the Lord Jesus Christ, wherein he meets the believing penitent in the forgiveness of sin. The Lord's Supper is also full of blessing. It is not an unmeaning ceremony, but a means of grace. In it the faith is strengthened, the love is deepened, and the entire Christian life is intensified. "The bread which we break, is it not the communion of the body of Christ; the cup which we bless, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ."

CHRIST OUR PATTERN.

Jesus Christ is the pattern after which the life of the Christian is to be conformed. Christ is the perfect model. His earthly life is to be imitated by his disciples. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." We become Christians by obedience to Christ, by complete submission to him. We live the Christian life by following Jesus. In his earthly life it engaged all his thought to do the will of God. It should be the chief ambition of the Christian to do the will of Christ. That which should concern the Christian most is not exstatic feeling nor mountain-top experiences, but obedience to Christ. "If any man serve me, let him follow me." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall inherit the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father." The Christ-life is to be reproduced in the Christian. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." The Christian knows Christ, not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Christ dwells in the believer. He is made a partaker of Christ. He has the mind of Christ. He is being made like Christ. Hence, he is to follow Christ. As the Master was a man of prayer, so the disciple is to cultivate the prayerful spirit. The Master went about doing good, the disciple is to go out in his daily life to bless the world. He that is filled with the Spirit of Christ will be a blessing to mankind. He will be possessed with an enthusiasm for humanity and a passion for righteousness. The need of the church is to get near the heart of Christ; thus will they be brought into sympathy with the bleeding and dying masses of men and will hasten the regeneration of mankind.

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN WRECK.

The wreck of the Mohegan has set the heart of England thrilling with many emotions. This fine steamship belonged to both England and America. It was the property of the New York Trans-Atlantic Company. It has been lost on the dreadful reef of rocks off the Coast of Cornwall, called the Manacles, near the city of Falmouth, and not far from the rugged Cape called Lizard Point. Many an American traveler remembers the Lizard and the grand but dangerous cliffs of Cornwall which are stormed at by the tempestuous billows of the mighty Atlantic rolling in for 3,000 miles. The Mohegan was a fine new ship, going out on her second voyage from London to New York. Many American passengers were on board. These had just sat down to dinner in the saloon when that horrid, grating sound vibrated through the vessel which told that the great and beautiful ship had gone crashing on the ribs of death. In half an hour, amidst heart-rending scenes of farewell between loving friends, the Mohegan had settled in her deep sepulchre, the shrill requiem of shrieks and cries being accompanied by the hoarse bass of the billows. No fewer than 107 souls perished in that awful thirty minutes! But now come some lessons which ought to be stereotyped on the consciousness of several nations. Let Englishmen and Americans take courage. Let Frenchmen and some other Continental peoples take warning. When a few months ago we were all shocked by the tragedy of La Bourgogne, the civilized world was outraged by the records of hideous cowardice and cruelty on the part of the French crew and the Italian steerage passengers. Not a woman was saved, nor yet a child. Now mark the contrast! The crew, officers and passengers of the Mohegan were all Americans and English people. And in the appalling scene in which the majority met their end not any approach to panic occurred. Every man was a hero, and every woman played the heroine. The very first cry was, "Save the women!" Captain and officers died at their posts. These people on the Mohegan did not belong to any of those nations which have cast out the Bible and expatriated God. The Anglo-Saxons know how to die when the grim enemy suddenly summons them to the eternal presence.

BRITAIN AT BAY.

Lord Salisbury has put down his foot. That is the most important announcement made in this country for the last seven years. But no man knows what it may involve. Hitherto our Prime Minister, who is also Foreign Minister, has, whenever he needed to put down his foot, elevated it as high as a skirt dancer. He has been for years pampering France with concessions which neither Gladstone nor Rosebery would have allowed. And now a momentous crisis has arrived. Nobody really believes that it means war with France, but everybody in this country has made up his mind that war with France must be risked this time. Major Marchand must quit Fashoda, and England must control the whole region of the Nile Basin. I have never known my country so compactly united as on this question. Parties have vanished in reference to the determination that France must yield. If she will not, then she must expect the whole power of the British Empire to be launched against her. This is a fearful alternative, but I am bound to say that this nation has calmly made up its mind to face the worst, if the worst is to come. And here let me ask a question: If France, great though her navy may be, cannot find to man it sailors of a better type than those panic-stricken specimens who formed the crew of La Bourgogne, how is she going to fight our fleets, every ship of which will contain scores of men as cool and brave as the heroes of the Mohegan?

OUR OWN CONVENTION.

In this country we love a convention of religious minds as much as you Americans do. But we generally call it a conference. Our brothers and sisters representing our beloved Churches of Christ have been enjoying our Annual Conference of the Christian Association of Great Britain, which assembled at Margate. I have already in my letters sounded the praises of Margate as a lovely seaside resort. It is famous for the iodine which impregnates its atmosphere from the masses of seaweed on its wave-washed sands. It is historically interesting as being in the district which was the cradle of British Christianity. Close by is the landing-place of Augustine. At about the same spot the first Saxons under Hengist and Horsa landed. The Romans also built their first British fortress close by, called Richborough, whose wonderful ruins are a first-class archeological curiosity. And within an easy walk is Minster, which is in some respects the most interesting church in the world, for it is British, Saxon, Roman, Norman and English, all in one. The only other building equally composite I have ever seen is York Minster. A little farther on is wonderful old Canterbury. These are amongst the very first and chief places which an American visitor ought to see, yet they are the very places which the majority miss in favor of inferior sights. I sometimes wish I could afford to make myself guide and lecturer to American Christians visiting this country. Our conference was the very best we ever had. This was the common verdict. May I remark that it was in no small degree brightened by the strong American contingent we now have again with us regularly in the great work. It may sometimes be wondered why we want this element and never seem to get along so well without it as with it. I will tell you. The new Egyptian army has fought and won simply because stiffened by a small proportion of Englishmen. This is exactly analogous to the case I am dealing with. The new Reformation was introduced into this country by American Evangelists. They brought some of us English Christians on to the right line, and formed a little army of such of us as they could enlist to fight for the simplicity of the ancient gospel. But these are early days still with this movement here. Therefore, this little army needs stiffening by a contingent of American evangelists, and the time has not come for us to dispense with them. Now, at Margate we had with us E. M. Todd, of West London Tabernacle; Mark Collins, of Chester; Mr. and Mrs. Bicknell, of Liverpool, as well as that type of the best American sisterhood, Mrs. Frank Coop, who hardly knows whether she is American or British. She is ever with us, but is about to visit you for a season. You will see Brother and Sister F. Coop on your side this winter. Thus, we have at work on this side picked soldiers from your side. There is room for as many more as you like to send.

OUR PROGRESS.

Does this movement advance in England? Yes; it is moving on as things do move in this grand old land. Slowly and surely we creep on. Every church reported an increase with the single exception of Cheltenham, which showed a decrease of five; but even in that case the deficiency was made up by conversions between the date of the returns and the conference. In point of fact there has not been a single church without a gain. This has never happened before. Our numbers have shot up by over three hundred this year. This is not a big figure, but considering the conditions in this country it is a wonderful sign of encouragement and of coming success. All who attended the conference were full of hope, thankfulness, joy and confidence. God is in this work. It has had to suffer all that the virulent opposition of sectism could inflict on it, but it has come to stay, and it has begun to conquer. Remember that for some time we have to endure misapprehension in England. We are everywhere to a large extent misunderstood. But our day is at hand. The pioneering is being faithfully done, and it has to continue sometime yet. If our American friends would regard this English enterprise as a work of faith, and would be content to encourage us to pioneer still, waiting God's time for the grand season of success, they would be gloriously rewarded in due time. Bro. Rapkin and his faithful wife, our happy German sister, and the members of the church at Margate, all shone out in their zeal and hospitality in welcoming the delegates, who came from all parts of the country. It was good to see ministers of the different sects in Margate come into meeting after meeting. I discovered from some of these gentlemen that they had learned some lessons. Our churches are now exciting surprise by their vitality. It used to be assumed that they would either fizzle out or be snuffed out. But it is coming to be felt that even the least of these churches has no need to say, in the words of a text adopted by a candidate for the Methodist ministry, "I pray thee, let me live!" The conference is invited to assemble next year in the beautiful old cathedral city of Gloucester. How joyously Brother and Sister Spring would welcome a goodly contingent of American visitors! We will give good notice of the event, hoping that many will take Gloucester on their way when touring in England. W. DURBAN.

Is Baptism for the Remission of Sins?

When are the sins of the alien actually remitted? At what place, stage or time can the alien coming to Christ and into his kingdom have the assurance that his sins are forgiven?

If it had been said to me twenty years ago that I should some day write a paper to convince my own brethren on these points I would not have believed it. It seems, however, that some of the old battles are to be fought over again. The time has come when those who are not of us can not learn clearly from our preaching and from our papers what we believe and teach concerning this. Even our good Brother Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, is not understood. His position on baptism for remission of sins is not understood, and by others he is suspected of unsoundness.

I wish to be heard, for I have something to say, and it is something that ought to be said at this stage of the proceedings. I wish to be heard in two papers. The first will be a John the Baptist for the other.

The first is a paper on justification by faith. I think a large part of the difficulty lies in a want of knowledge as to the part that faith does in bringing the alien to the forgiveness of sins and the assurance of it.

Let us take up the old text, Rom. 5:1: "Therefore, being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." This statement is clear and full. There is something by which we are justified. That something of itself is sufficient for our justification. Nothing else is required. Anything in addition to it would be superfluous. Whatever that something is, is absolutely necessary to our justification. Nothing else is necessary to our justification. He who has this something is justified, and having this may be assured that he is justified. Whatever is included in this something and is part of it is necessary in order to justification. Nothing else is necessary. We are in no doubt as to what the name of that something is. The difficulty arises in not understanding it when we know its name. Paul says, the Spirit says, God says, that something is faith. Faith it is, then, that justifies. What is faith? What is faith in this text? Mr. Moody says, and Mr. Jones says, and the great Methodist Church says, and the whole system of mourner's bench, or penitent form, or altar service, says it is the act of believing, a mental act. That it is taught that this is a soul-act, a heart-act, etc., does not affect the argument. It is the opposite of a physical act. Not matter, nor yet mind and matter, but mind or spirit. Baptism is a physical act, therefore baptism has nothing to do with it. Consequently, since baptism follows this act, and this act brings justification, baptism is not for justification. The actual remission of sins takes place when this mind-act, soul-act, heart-act or spirit-act is performed. This is the position of Moody, et al.

B. B. Tyler, J. H. Garrison and others among us seem to adopt this position, but add this, that in baptism the alien receives assurance of pardon already granted. I submit this proposition: If Moody, et al., are right in their understanding of what the "faith" mentioned in Rom. 5:1 is, baptism has absolutely nothing to do with remission of sins, or the assurance of remission. See the next verse. It is declared that by "faith" we have access into this grace wherein we stand.

Let Paul say what this faith is. Gal. 2:16 explains the matter perfectly: "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ that we might be justified by the faith of Christ and not by the works of the law, for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." We have two things mentioned, the works of the law and the faith of Christ. In other words, the law and the gospel. It is plain. Faith stands for the whole system of the Christian religion. Gal. 3:2: "Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" Judaism and Christianity. Gal. 2:5: "He, therefore, that ministereth to you the Spirit and worketh miracles among you, doeth he it by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith?" There is no mistaking this. I challenge any man to place Rom. 5:1 and Gal. 3:11 side by side and read them. "But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God is evident, for the just shall live by faith." The same "faith" in each meaning the gospel. It may safely and truly be said we are saved by this faith only, but it is not the faith James speaks of (Jas. 2:17-26).

Again read Gal. 3:23-25. Here two things are mentioned. One is called law, the other is called faith. Before faith came we were kept under the law. It is the same faith of Rom. 5:1, and means the gospel.

But why multiply texts? Many more might be given. Suffice it to say, then, there are two meanings to the word faith as used in the New Testament—the gospel of Christ and the act of believing. The latter precedes repentance, and baptism, and turning to the Lord, and all Christian living and obedience, and leads to all these. The first includes the latter and repentance, baptism—all obedience and Christian living.

While the apostles lived and preached, and the New Testament history was being made, there were in that country three separate classes: pagans, Jews and Christians. When a man left the pagans or Jews to become a Christian he was called a believer, which meant a Christian. To believe meant to become a Christian, and involved the whole process. One faith—believing—precedes baptism. Of the other faith—the gospel—baptism is a part.

If ye know these things, happy are you if you preach and write as if you knew them. In my next I will speak of baptism for the remission of sins. E. L. FRAZIER.

Marion, Ind.

[If there is to be a rediscussion of this subject it would be well to enter into a definition of terms. What is faith in its New Testament sense? Is it a mental act or a certain attitude of the soul toward God? Is it an objective system by which Paul declares we are justified, or a subjective principle—the principle of loyalty and submission to God? What is baptism? Not in its external form, but in its totality? What is meant by "remission of sins?" Is this merely absolving from guilt, or does it include deliverance from the power and the habit of sin? We would request Bro. F. not to state our position except in our own words. No one has antagonized more steadfastly than we have any conception of faith that divorces it from obedience and surrender to God. But we do not think Bro. F. has attained Paul's point of view in his doctrine of justification by faith. "The faith" does sometimes mean the gospel, but Paul does not mean in Rom. 5:1 that we are justified by the gospel. Abraham was justified by faith before the law was given and before the gospel was published.—EDITOR.]

The Church and the World.

It seems to be held in orthodox religious ranks that the relation between the church and the world is that of belligerents and unchangeable. That such a relation existed between Christians of the first century and the prevailing spirit of the world at that time, and should still exist as to all that is evil, is true. But to affirm such an attitude of the church toward the world in an unqualified and an unchangeable sense is to go beyond the bounds of reason, the facts of history and the demands of revelation.

The things to which Christianity stood opposed in the mind of the apostolic school were not the earth and its elements, nor the essential social and civil institutions of the world, nor with the people, but with their sins and the spirit that caused them. If they opposed civil and religious institutions it was because of the moral evil in them. If they opposed existing social and industrial conditions it was because they were founded on lust, injustice and unrighteousness. If they opposed wealth it was because of its dangers. If they opposed rulers it was because of their wickedness. And if they spake disparagingly of the earth and its elements it was because they were not as important and enduring as the human spirit.

The writers of the Holy Book nowhere attribute the source of moral evil to the material universe. They could not consistently do this and at the same time predicate a portion of God's glory upon it as in the 19th psalm. To hold the earth and its physical elements in contempt would be equivalent to an attitude of unfriendliness if not of enmity toward God.

The indiscriminate condemnation of all existing institutions in the world, of whatsoever character, other than the church, is equally faulty and injurious. There were many things in the world which Christ and his apostles recognized, other than the church, as originally from heaven, and essential, even, to the welfare of the church. There was the family, the state, the arts, the sciences, commerce, industries, and other factors essential to civilized life against which no word of condemnation is found from their pen and against which the church founded by them was not arrayed. And for want of a proper recognition of this fact the church has since committed some most grievous and humiliating blunders, having earned for itself the unenviable reputation of being the enemy of enlightenment, education and progress.

But this is not all nor the worst of this falsely applied theory. Bible-schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, literary societies, benevolent societies, missionary societies, secret societies, religious societies, temperance societies, are classed as worldly institutions and to be hated by the church. Such, then, are some of the results of a wrong conception of the relation of the church to the world. Some men will not cast a ballot because the state, in their judgment, is Satan's empire. Some even do not recognize any good thing outside of the religious body to which they are joined.

Even if we admit that the apostolic church stood opposed to any of the existing institutions of the world or to the universe as a whole, in its day, it ought to be apparent, from the nature of the mission of the church, that this attitude was not an unchangeable one. If so, the mission of the church was a foreordained failure. On the other hand, if we assume that the attitude of the church toward the world should be the same to-day that it was during the latter half of the first century, would we not then admit that the church had wholly failed, thus far, to accomplish any part of its mission? Is not the world its field of work? Is not its gospel the leaven that is to change the world?

A more rational position, as it seems to us, would be to assume that to the extent that the world in any sense is getting better, or coming into harmony with God's will, in that respect and to that extent, at least, the belligerency of the church should cease. The church, therefore, should not, and cannot consistently oppose anything in the world and of the world that is essential to man's present moral, intellectual and physical well being. The progress of the church in the world, therefore, naturally necessitates the readjustment of its relation to the world and each readjusted relation of necessity changes the attitude of the church to the world. And if the mission of the church is ever fully realized on the earth, as it will be, its relation to the world must then become that of friends.

But as a matter of fact the belligerent attitude of the apostolic church was not against the world nor any of its primary and essential institutions but against the evil that was in the world, and hence the warfare that was even within its own boundaries. In this respect the church must continue to maintain the attitude of a belligerent toward [illegible] as well as toward the world. Failure to do this not only dissipates its own inherent strength, but stultifies the beauty and strength of its position before the world. For the church to become indifferent toward the presence of evil within its own precincts, and yet to maintain a vigorous warfare against institutions of the world that are condemned for no other reason than that they are of the world, is to assume the position of a man straining out the gnat, yet swallowing the camel. It is this position that makes the church of medieval times so hideous and repulsive to this age.

One of the most marked contrasts between the apostolic and medieval churches, and to some extent, churches of to-day, is in and of the things toward which they stood as belligerents. Those things toward which the apostolic churches were belligerent because of the presence of evil or of evil associations, medieval (and to some extent modern) churches became as friends, and vice versa. This is particularly noticeable in their relations to idolatry, to riches, to spiritual wickedness in high places, to the sword, to carnal pleasures, to social distinctions, to partyisms and other pernicious things. The very things openly condemned by Christ and the apostles are in many churches to-day openly tolerated, and in some instances the very reverse of what Jesus preached and prayed is taught. Have we not all heard men in prayer thank God for divisions—a church to suit each man's notion—in direct opposition to Christ's prayer and Paul's preaching? But we have no time for specifications here and now. Perhaps we shall make these the subject of a future paper. What we now insist upon is that the belligerent attitude of the church should not be toward the world nor its essential institutions, but toward the evil that is in the world; only this and nothing more. In so far as human institutions are working to secure the betterment of man they cannot be the enemies of righteousness, of God, nor of the church—the true spiritually minded church of the living God—but helpmeets. And if so recognized, not a few adjustments are sorely needed; of which we will speak at another time.

F. T. PEW.

The Mormon-Christian War.

Jacob, brother of Nephi, was born to Lehi and Sariah, their firstborn in the wilderness after they had started from Jerusalem to what is now known as the United States of America. They started on this journey 600 years before Christ was born.

So says the "Book of Mormon." Mormons admit that their "ism" stands or falls with this book as a divine or a human book. Jacob was a preacher; his talent run to exhortation. Some of these phrases sound very "modern" to have been written over 2,500 years.

"Wherefore, we labored diligently among our people, that we might persuade them to come unto Christ and partake of the goodness of God, that we might enter into his rest, lest by any means he should swear in his wrath that they should not enter in, as in the provocation, while the children of Israel were in the wilderness."

Jacob says that under the "second king" the people "began to grow hard in their hearts and indulge themselves somewhat in wicked practices, such as like unto David of old, desiringmany wives and concubines, and also Solomon, his son."

Jacob determined to let them have it. He says: "And we did magnify our office unto the Lord, taking upon us the responsibility, answering the sins of the people upon our own heads, if we did not teach them the Word of God with all diligence; wherefore by laboring with our mights their blood might not come upon our garments; otherwise their blood would come upon our garments and we would not be found spotless at the last day."

That's pretty good. I predict if some one will find Sidney Rigdon's barrel of old sermons he will find that Jacob, 2,500 years before Sidney was born, used a great many pet expressions of Sidney who, of course, at the time he petted certain phrases, didn't know of Jacob and Joe Smith's gold plates. When I quote Jacob I am presumably quoting from those gold plates.

Jacob says to his audience: "And it supposeth me that they have come up hither to hear the pleasing Word of God; yea, the Word which healeth the wounded soul. Wherefore, it burdeneth my soul, that I should be constrained because of the strict commandment which I have received from God, to admonish you according to your crimes, to enlarge the wounds of those already wounded, instead of consoling and healing their wounds," etc.

He charges them with polygamy and says: "For behold, thus saith the Lord, This people begin to wax in iniquity; they understand not the SCRIPTURES, FOR THEY SEEK TO EXCUSE THEMSELVES in committing whoredom, because of the things which were written of David and Solomon, his son. Behold David and Solomon truly had many wives and concubines, which thing was abominable before me, saith the Lord. Wherefore, thus saith the Lord, I have led this people forth out of the land of Jerusalem, by the power of mine arm, that I might rise up unto a righteous branch from the fruit of the loins of Joseph."

By an easy exegesis "the fruit of the loins of Joseph" can be made Joseph Smith's descendants, and the "branch" the Mormon Church of to day.

Jacob continues: "Wherefore, I the Lord God will not suffer it; this people shall do like unto them of old."

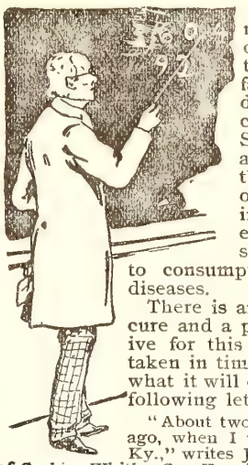
That is, that the Mormons of to-day shall not have wives like David and Solomon. If it does not mean that doesn't mean anything. Jacob says further: "Wherefore, my brethren, hear me, and harken to the Word of the Lord, for there shall not any man among have save it be ONE wife, and concubines he shall have none. For I the Lord delighteth in the chastity of women. And whoredoms are an abomination before me."

If this does not teach monogamy and pronounce polygamy unchaste and whoredom, language cannot be handled to so express it. When I called the attention of a Utah elder to what Jacob said he looked at me and said, "Have you read the next verse?" I read it—verse 30—here it is: "For I will, saith the Lord of Hosts, raise up seed unto me; I WILL COMMAND MY PEOPLE: otherwise they shall hearken unto these things."

That is, if I the Lord command you women to be "unchaste," and you men to commit "whoredom," though I "delight in the chastity of women," and the polygamy of David and Solomon was "abominable," you must be "unchased" and "abominable."



What a book and what a God the Mormons have! The world has been giving the Book of Mormon great credit for being opposed to polygamy, yet it indicates that, in full knowledge of its "abominations" and in front of bitter denunciations of it, it will be practiced in the name and by the command of the Lord!

The Book of Mormon I have before me refers me by a footnote to the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, Sec. 132. Here it is, the most infamous document of any age. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can give it in installments.

Figures Don't Lie.

It doesn't take much knowledge of mathematics to figure out the facts about that dread disease—consumption. Statisticians long ago demonstrated that one-seventh of all the deaths in Christendom each year may be safely attributed to consumption and allied diseases.

There is an almost certain cure and a positive preventive for this fatal disease if taken in time. The story of what it will do is told in the following letter:

"About two and a half years ago, when I was at Flat Lick, Ky.," writes J. W. Jordan, Esq., of Corbin, Whitley Co., Ky., "I was taken with severe pains in the chest, after which I began to spit up blood and was also troubled with night-sweats. I was so short winded that I could hardly walk half a mile at once, and if I got the least bit wearied, I would have an attack of phthisic (asthma) and almost die for about two or three days. I concluded to try Dr. R. V. Pierce, and I related my case to him. He wrote me that I should take his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I began using it and used about six bottles. I began to see that it was helping me, so concluded to continue its use. I did so and have improved both in strength and in weight. I have not had the phthisic, nor spit up any blood since last spring."

This great remedy—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—cures 98 per cent. of all laryngial, bronchial, throat and kindred affections which, if neglected lead up to consumption. It strengthens the stomach and makes the appetite keen and hearty. It invigorates the liver and aids the natural processes of secretion and excretion. It makes the assimilation of the food perfect. It is the great blood-maker and flesh-builder. Honest dealers will not urge you to take a substitute said to be "just as good."

A Last Farewell.*

TEXT—I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send? and who will go for us? Then, said I, Here am I, send me.—Isaiah 6:8.

"My soul is not at rest. There comes a strange
And secret whisper to my spirit, like
A dream of night, that tells me I am on Enchanted ground. Why live I here? The vows
Of God are on me, and I may not stop
To play with shadows, or pluck earthly flowers,
Till I my work have done, and rendered up Account. The voice of my departed Lord,
'Go teach all nations,' from the Eastern world
Comes on the night air, and awakens my ear,
And I will go."

The most authoritative word that is ever heard above the confused noise of this changing world is the voice of God in the soul, saying: "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." This is at once both a high command and an exceedingly great and precious privilege. The call was made a while ago to the young men of the country to enlist in defence of the flag and in the cause of humanity. Thousands came forward and placed their lives on the alter of liberty. The brave soldiers esteemed it both an honor and a privilege to go to the front either for service or for sacrifice in a holy cause. The mission that engaged the sailors and soldiers at Manila and Santiago was one of "confused noise and garments rolled in blood." The high service to which this dear girl has been called is one of peace on earth good will among men. It is the same mission that brought the Savior from heaven to earth and sent the holy apostles into every part of the great Roman Empire. Only a soul filled with love and the Spirit of Christ ever undertook such a task as this. Such a scene as you witness to-day is one of rare and radiant interest. In this unworldly place, at this sacramental feast, angels must love to stay their waving wings and pause to hear the consecration vows of a soul espoused to Christ and about to go forth to join the American missionaries in the East.

"I may no longer doubt
To give up all my friends and idol hopes,
And every tender tie that binds my heart
To thee, my country! Why should I regard
Earth's little store of borrowed sweets? I sure
Have had enough of bitter in my cup,
To show that never was it His design,
Who placed me here, that I should live in ease,
Or drink at pleasure's fountain.
Henceforth, then,
It matters not if storms or sunshine be
My lot—bitter or sweet my cup;
I only pray—'God fit me for the work.
God make me holy, and my spirit nerve
For the stern hour of strife.' Let me but know
There is an arm unseen that holds me up,
An eye that kindly watches my path,
Till I my weary pilgrimage have done;
Let me but know I have a friend that waits
To welcome me to glory, and I joy
To tread the dark and death-fraught wilderness."

The beautiful service of the missionary was defined by the Master as he stood in the synagogue at Nazareth on that long-gone sabbath day and read from the prophecy of Isaiah:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, the recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord, to comfort all that mourn, to give them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

The coming of Christ brought both a new force and new ideals into the world. In the Empire of Rome, where Christianity was born, there were sixty millions of slaves, forty millions of freedmen and only twenty millions of free citizens. The ideal life among such a population was one either of vaulting ambition or elegant leisure. Christ taught both by example and by precept that this was wrong. He was the image of the invisible God, the firstborn of every creature. By him were all things created that are in heaven and that are on earth—visible and invisible—whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers. Yet he made himself of no reputation and took upon him the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men. It was his chief joy that he was in the world as one who served. His was a varied life, yet all was concentrated in a single sentence: "He went about doing good." His final word to all who ask if he is really the Christ, is this: "The blind receive their sight, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, the poor have the gospel preached to them, and blessed is he whosoever is not offended in me." These holy ministries are still in these last days the best evidences of Christianity.

"Follow with reverent steps the great example
Of Him whose holy work was doing good;
So shalt the wide earth seem our Father's Temple,
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude."

The history of modern missions is an added chapter to the Book of Acts. It is a fulfillment of the Master's promise of his continued presence with his disciples in every generation till the end of time. Lift up your eyes and look on the world wherever the missionaries of the cross have gone. There the wilderness and the solitary place are glad; the desert rejoices and blossoms as the rose. The parched ground becomes a pool and the thirsty land springs of water. The eyes of the blind are opened, the ears of the deaf are unstopped, the lame man leaps as an hart and the tongue of the dumb sings for joy. The cheering reports that come from the foreign field are the divine call to increased devotion to the cause of world-wide missions. The need of the hour is more of the Spirit of the Man of Galilee "who, although he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor that we through his poverty might be rich." Many are converted, but few are consecrated. It is one thing to come into the fellowship of the church, but it is another and very different thing to take up the cross daily and follow Christ. In the days of his earthly ministry multitudes pressed upon him to see his miracles and to hear his teaching. Some followed because of the loaves and fishes. A few, however, were with him in Gethsemane, before Pilate and at Calvary. It costs a great deal to be a blessing. The dross must be consumed and the gold refined before one can be fashioned into a vessel of honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use. This can be realized only through the fires of affliction. Many pass through strange experiences before coming into the larger fellowship of the gospel. Christ is constantly leading his people by a way they know not. What he does now we may not understand, but we shall know hereafter. Paul prayed for a prosperous journey to Rome, but he realized the very opposite! It was a path all rugged with rock and tangled with thorn. When, at last, he reached the gates of the Imperial City, he entered as a prisoner bound with a chain. It is a beautiful grace that enables one to be satisfied with his lot wherever placed. Paul learned by long and varied service, in whatever state he was, therewith to be content. A contented mind is a continual feast. The secret of the great joy of the missionaries in their lives of toil and sacrifice in pagan lands is in the consciousness that they are just where God would have them be, and doing just what God would have them do.

"There is a secret in the ways of God
With his own children which none others know,
That sweetens all he does and is such peace,
While under his afflicting hand, we find,
What will it be to see him as he is,
And past the reach of all that now disturbs.
The tranquil soul's repose? To contemplate
In retrospect unclouded, all the means
By which his wisdom has prepared his saints
For the vast weight of glory which remains!
Come, then, affliction, if my Father bids,
And be my frowning friend; a friend that frowns
Is better than a smiling enemy."

Any one who leaves home and friends and native land at the call of God, as did Abraham, and goes out into the wide world, not knowing whither he is going, deserves to be called a hero of the faith. The missionaries of the cross in every age have linked their names with that of the father of the faithful as they have gone over the winter seas and into the dark places of the earth in search of a country that God would show them. Their names deserve a place among the splendid company of believers mentioned in the eleventh chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews. Nothing but the grace of God in the heart can sustain one in the determination to go to the foreign field. "As thy days so shall thy strength be" is a precious promise that has reassured many a sinking heart in the hour of trial. Sooner or later every trusting soul comes to realize that God's grace is sufficient for every experience. The saintly Robert Murray McCheyne, in the shadow of death, thanked God for strength in the hour of weakness, for light in the time of darkness, for joy in the time of sorrow, and for comforting us in all our tribulations.

The motives for engaging in the missionary enterprise are many and various. We cannot be followers of God as dear children without having the Spirit of Christ, who was the first missionary to a world that had gone far away from God. Christ loved the church and gave himself for it that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, and present it to himself a glorious church without spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing. He came to seek and to save the lost. If any one will be his disciple he must deny himself and take up the cross and follow Christ, even into the darkest corners of the earth. The gospel is a balm for every wound, a cordial for every woe, and the only remedy for the evils that afflict the world. Dr. Jno. Stewart Blackie says: "Christianity is a strong medicine to knock down a strong disease." For centuries on centuries the pagan philosophers have been trying to solve the problems of human life and destiny. Without the light of revelation this is a hopeless task. It has been well said that the answer to Confucianism is China, the answer to Buddhism is India, the answer to Mohammedanism is Turkey. A tree is known by its fruit. Men gather neither grapes of thorns nor figs of thistles. Christianity rests her claims to the serious consideration of thoughtful men on the record she has made in every age and in every clime. Great Britain and the United States are the noblest fruitage of our holy religion. Dr. Jno. Henry Barrows says of his recent trip around the world:

"I have found the American name beloved and trusted where other names failed to awaken any happy and affectionate feeling. The brightest light which shines on the Syrian Coast beneath the shadow of the Lebanon mountains flashes down from an American college, and the darkness which broods over the pyramids and the tombs of the sacred bulls would be far darker but for the American Presbyterian schools and colleges stretching through the whole length of the land of the Nile. Throughout India, from coast to coast—and I crossed the continent five times—while I saw many things to depress the mind and bring before me the shame of Christendom, my heart was filled with pride over the good name which American Christians have given to their country."

Christianity is to be tested by its influence on individual life and character. An ancient poet once excited the applause of the theatre when he said: "I am a man; nothing that belongs to a man is uninteresting to me." The gospel individualizes the race. It regards every one—whether Christian or pagan—as of equal importance in the sight of God. Compared with the value of the soul everything else is as dust in the balance. The Jews, after they had made the law of God of no effect by their traditions considered the strict observance of the sabbath of more importance than an act of mercy to a fellowman. It was left for the Man of Sorrows to teach the great lesson that the sabbath was made for man and not man for the sabbath. He suspended the holy day till the poor man at the pool of Bethesda was healed. Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy.

"Go to your bosom, knock there,
And ask your heart what it doth know
That's like thy brother's fault;
If it confess a natural guiltiness,
Such as his, let it not sound
A thought upon your tongue,
Against thy brother's life."

William Carey went out from England a hundred years ago to preach the gospel in India. His thoughtless countrymen laughed when Sydney Smith referred to him as a "consecrated cobbler going out on a fool's errand to convert the heathen." Carey lived out his life in the shadow of India's need, and died at the age of seventy-three years. When on his deathbed he was visited by the Bishop of India, the head of the Church of England in that country, who bowed his head and invoked the blessing of the dying missionary. The British authorities had resolutely denied Carey a landing-place on his first arrival in Bengal. But, when he died, the government dropped all her flags to half mast in honor of the man who had done more for India than any of her generals. The disciple is the light of the world and the salt of the earth. His light should shine and his influence should be felt on every continent and in every island of the sea. This is possible only to those who have fellowship in world-wide missions. There is only one alternative for the disciple who respects Christ's commission. He must either go or send. Only the few have the disposition to go, and they are mostly women. Now, as in the days of his earthly experience, Christ's truest followers are women. Strange to tell, for every man who offers himself for service on the foreign field there are seven women who say: "Here am I; send me." This is a magnificent tribute to woman's faith and to woman's love. In the little mission in the city of Deoghur, to which Miss Annie Lackey has been appointed, there are five women and not one man. The church is the salt of the earth, but the women are the salt of the church. It is a suggestive remark that "Columbus discovered America, but a woman discovered Columbus." The great need of the hour is more men like the saintly Earl of Shaftsbury, who said: "When I feel how old I am, and know I must soon die, I hope it is not wrong, but I cannot bear to go and leave the world with so much misery in it." It is a strangely indifferent heart that is not deeply moved by the petition that comes on every breeze that blows from beyond the seas:

"Hark! what cry arrests my ear?
Hark! what accents of despair?
'Tis the heathen's dying prayer;
Friends of Jesus, hear.

Man of God, to you we cry,
Rests on you our tearful eye,
Help us, Christians, or we die—
Die in dark despair!

Hasten, Christians, haste to save,
O'er the land and o'er the wave,
Danger, death and distance brave;
Hark! for help they call.

Africa bends her suppliant knee,
India spreads her hand to thee,
Hark! they urge the heaven-born plea,
Jesus died for all."

While the missionary makes great sacrifices in going to live in the darkness of heathenism, there are also great compensations for this labor of love in the Master's name. The richest joy the spirit knows is the consciousness of having guided an immortal soul out of darkness into light. To convert a sinner from the error of his way is to save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins. There is joy in heaven over one sinner who repents whether he be in the home land or on the banks of the Ganges. The one who wins souls is wise. This is a better investment than bonds and bank stocks. Blessed is he who sows beside all waters. Sometime far in the future and up from the dust of the dead he shall shine as the brightness of the firmament and as the stars forever and ever. For every one there is a day coming when he will wish that the moments devoted to soul-winning had been multiplied into years, and that the pence given to missions had been increased a thousandfold. The privilege of fellowship in preaching the gospel in all lands is the best opportunity for profitable investment. It is the pearl of greatest price. One who has come into the possession of this heritage has no greater joy than to tell others of the treasure he has found. A little girl once said:

"I wish I were the little key
That locks love's captive in,
And let him out to go and free
A sinful heart from sin."

This dear young woman goes out under the direction of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions to labor among the children of India. She will teach in the orphanage in the city of Deoghur, two hundred miles west of Calcutta, in the province of Bengal. It is a great joy to her friends that she is to go in company with Miss Olivia A. Baldwin, who spent several years in India as a medical missionary, and now returns to her home beyond the seas to resume the work she so much loves. Seventy-five children in the orphanage at Deoghur await the coming of these two gifted, cultured and consecrated women. In the children of India there is a soil genial almost to a miracle. They are the home of the gospel in that land of idols. A Hindu said to a missionary: "I expect to live and die a Hindu, but I have no doubt that my grandchildren will all become Christians. So we want missionaries to come to India and explain all about the religion of Christ, for it is sure to prevail." The orphanage affords the best field for sowing the good seed of the kingdom. Miss Baldwin said at the Chattanooga Convention: "The orphanage work is progressing encouragingly. We now have five and will soon have six orphanages in that land. India's little ones are sweet and impressible, and their beautiful innocence is destroyed at an early age. We are putting these children into the orphanage and they will be educated for home missionaries. They can receive no home influences. The women of India are slaves. Besides being slaves forty millions of them are prisoners. The poor, uneducated people are more easily reached by us than the educated class, but we must reach all. This educational work in Bengal has been going on year after year, and our work is meeting with success. We have done nothing with young India as yet. Have we no message for such? Young India is not Christian, but may become so. Our force of missionaries in that country is not adequate. It has been said that mission work is not inadequate on account of lack of money, but for want of love. I willingly return to India, but the burden is too great. We need assistance. Friends, pray for this great work."

Beloved, I beseech you by every consideration that is high and holy, help these noble young women who are about to leave our shores to bear the burden and the heat of the day under a tropical sun. Is there a sacrifice too great, a gift too good to be made in behalf of these who have forsaken all to follow Christ? A tie is forged this day that binds our hearts to India in constant devotion and unchanging affection. Henceforth, a heavy draft will be made on our faith, our love and our prayers. May every member of this church, which God has so highly honored, have a double portion of the spirit of good Andrew Fuller, who said: "There is a gold mine in India, but it seems almost as deep as the center of the earth. Who will venture to explore it? 'I will venture to go down,' was the instant reply of William Carey, 'but you,' addressing Fuller, 'must

Don't use an imitation—especially imitations of Pearline. Many are dangerous. And dangerous washing powders can never be cheap—no matter how little you pay for them. Peddlers and untrustworthy grocers will tell you the stuff they offer is "Pearline," "same as," "as good as," "made in the same factory," etc. It's false. Pearline is the standard washing compound; never peddled; gives no prizes; simply stands on its merits as the best, safest, and most economical. 575 hold the ropes.' 'This,' said Fuller, 'I solemnly engage to do, pledging him never to desert him as long as I shall live.' ''

And now, my dear sister, there is only time for a final farewell and a parting blessing. It is an unspeakable pleasure to the heart that has known you long and well, to testify to the purity of your life, the beauty of your character, the ferver of your piety and the singleness of purpose with which you have devoted your life from childhood to the cause of foreign missions. A great company both in heaven and on earth rejoices with you that your fondest hopes are realized. This is a day for which you have waited long. The call that has come to you is a cail from God. You have made patient preparation both in mind and heart for the work you go to do. You go out from the bosom of a family and a church who have carefully guarded you along the paths of peace over which your feet have come. For this constant care you have made a rich return. As we send you forth this day to India's whitening fields, we lay upon the altar of Foreign Missions the best sacrifice that love can prompt, and the most precious gift we have to make. The breaking of this alabaster box moves the heart of the gentle Christ as it was moved on that long-gone day in Bethany. Now, as then, he accepts the sacrifice and approves the deed. He will be nearer to you both on land and sea because of the offering you have made. ''The crowded hour of glorious life is worth an age without a name.'' Reginald Heber, the second Bishop of Calcutta, after a day of toil in India, said to a friend: ''Gladly would I exchange years of common life for one such day as this.'' Alas! that was the last day he ever spent on earth. He went to his room, and an hour later the the author of the great hymn—

"From Greenland's icy mountains, From India's coral strand," had gone to God as the dew goes up to the sun. To-day you leave your native land, henceforth to live under the protection of the British flag, the proudest ensign, next to the Stars and Stripes, that floats on sea or land.

"Where England's flag flies wide unfurled,
All tyrant wrongs repelling,
God make the world a better world
For man's brief earthly dwelling."

"The Lord bless thee, and keep thee;
The Lord make his face to shine upon thee,
And be gracious to thee;
The Lord lift up his countenance on thee,
And give thee peace.
The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble;
The name of the God of Jacob defend thee:
Send thee help from the sanctuary,
And strengthen thee out of Zion;
Remember all thy offerings,
And accept thy burnt sacrifice;
Grant thee according to thine own heart,
And fulfill all thy counsel.
We will rejoice in thy salvation,
In the name of our God we will set up our banners."

May the Eye that never sleeps and the Hand that never tires guide you safely over land and sea till your eager feet come at last to rest on the soil you have so long sought—

"Fearless ride the stormy billows,
Fearless every danger dare,
Onward in your steadfast purpose,
We will follow you with prayer.
Glorious mission!
'Tis the cross of Christ you bear!"

Tennessee C. W. B. M.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Just learning from the proceedings of our General Convention, which recently convened at Chattanooga, that the C. W. B. M. of Tennessee had no recognition in our National Convention because of having received no recognition in our State Convention, which also met in Chattanooga, I ask that you publish this letter as a ''call to arms'' as it were, of all the Christian Churches of Tennensee. Sisters of Tennessee: Can we afford to sit idly by when there is such a glorious opportunity for us to work in our ''Master's vineyard,'' when there is such an imperative call to us to be up and doing? Can the women of the Christian Church of Tennessee be content to go up to our state and general conventions and be debarred the privilege of being recognized as coworkers in this great movement of sending out the gospel of our Lord?

The C. W. B. M. is now nearing its twenty-fifth year of active life, having passed successfully over the trials and dangers attendant upon all infant life, reaching the years of maturity in great strength of character and purity of purpose, it now has only to go bravely forward to the glorious destiny awaiting every soul or organization that is working for the Master. This is a missionary organization, ''pure and simple,'' and should appeal to every Disciple of our Lord Jesus. If I know anything of our plea we are missionary people, but I fear some of us are laboring under the impression that we are living under the first commission, when our Savior sent the apostles forth to preach and teach in Judea.

This commission is not to us, but the last, the great commission: ''Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature''—given after our blessed Savior had tasted death that we through him might have life eternal; just before going to the Father he left us this command. Not to the apostles, nor to the preachers of all succeeding ages alone, but to us, to you, to me, to every one who wears the name of Christ.

This commission does not say, Go into Judea, to your own city, or state, or country, but ''into all the world.'' This command is world-wide in its embrace, extending through all time and to all Christians—none are exempt. It is this voice speaking to us through all the ages, linking the present to the past, taking us back to the resurrection morn, when our blessed Lord broke the bands that enslaved woman. Sisters of the Christian Churches of Tennessee, rouse from your indifference and do your duty! Listen to the voice of our Savior: ''If ye love me, keep my commandments.'' We cannot all go as missionaries, but we can by united effort contribute our mite in our quiet and humble way to sending the gospel in our own and heathen lands, never forgetting that we are working for Jesus when we ''give a cup of cold water to one of his little ones.''

Let every Christian woman not forget that the gospel of our blessed Savior would have died at Jerusalem had it not been for the missionaries. Who can picture the degradation of womanhood to-day, had the missionaries who spent their lives and the Christians who gave their talents, means and time to spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ remained listless and indifferent as we who are content to do a part but not all our duty? Let every church in Tennessee begin at once and organize a C. W. B. M. and next October, when our convention meets, let us be there and see that our state is enrolled as a state filled with the missionary spirit and hence filled with the spirit of Jesus Christ, our first missionary. I am a woman with a life of cares and time is precious, yet I feel that my life, my time, my all belong to my Savior, and he being my helper I shall try more earnestly to do whatsoever my hands find to do for the advancement of his kingdom, not looking to man, but to him who gave his life for me to say, ''Well done thou good and faithful servant.''

The three Christian Churches of Memphis are united in one C. W. B. M. organization with Sister W. D. Rice, the wife of the pastor of the Linden Street Church for our president, our secretary being from the Mississippi Avenue Church and our treasurer from the Third Church. The ministers of the three churches are members in ''good standing;'' they meet with us, encourage and help us by their counsels and pay their dues promptly and cheerfully, not asking for any part in our deliberations. We meet monthly, the meetings alternating between the three churches, thus in sweetest Christian love and harmony our three churches as one C. W. B. M. are working together to fulfill, as best we can, our Lord's commision, looking to his approval, ''she hath done what she could'' as our only reward. A MEMBER OF LINDEN ST. CHURCH.

FOR YOU

FOR that sour stomach use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because they digest the food before it has time to sour, ferment and poison the blood.

FOR loss of appetite take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because food promptly digested creates a natural desire for MORE.

FOR loss of flesh, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; they increase flesh in the only common-sense way, that is, by digesting flesh-forming food, and assisting the weak stomach in disposing of it.

FOR gas in stomach and bowels, causing distress, belching and headaches, use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; always indicated in such cases.

FOR palpitation of the heart use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, because this symptom in nine out of ten cases is caused from a disordered stomach.

FOR impure blood use Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets; pure blood can only result from wholesome food thoroughly digested.

FOR every form of weak digestion and stomach trouble (except cancer of stomach) Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is the safest, most natural, most successful cure. No patent medicine, but composed of digestive acids, pepsin, bismuth, Golden Seal and similar valuable stomach remedies.

Another Debate.

A discussion has been in progress here for a week between Bro. Jas. Anderson, of the Church of Christ, and W. E. Peak, of the reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S., and to say that Mormonism—so far as this debate is concerned—has been utterly wrecked is to put it mildly. Bro. Anderson is now showing in his affirmative proposition from God's Word the divine nature and character of the church of which he is a member. The outlook is fine. The entire community is stirred. A full report will be sent when the debate closes. E. S. CHAMBERLAIN.

A Growing College.

The attendance at Christian College, Columbia, Mo., this year, is unprecedented. The boarding department is full and runuing over. A number of applicants have been refused. However, it is encouraging to know that our trustees are wide awke to the importance of providing for the emergency. At a recent meeting of the trustees it was decided to begin at once to erect additional buildings. Accordingly, a new and commodious extension will be made which will provide ample space for at least 50 more girls. The building will be ready for occupancy before the beginning of the next collegiate year.—C. C. Chronicle.

October a Good Month.

Comparing the receipts for Foreign Missions for the month of October with the corresponding month last year shows the following:

Contributing	1897	1898
Churches	23	20	Loss 3
Sunday-schools	17	20	Gain 3
Endeavor Societies	42	6	Loss 36
Individuals	22	19	Loss 13
Amount	$2,207.20	$8,294.40	$6,087.20

About $6,000 of this amount came from a bequest; $1,200 was received on the Annuity plan. Remember, $150,000 is the mark for the year set by the Chattanooga Convention.

Eureka's Representative.

It give me great pleasure to announce to our brotherhood and to the public generally that J. G. Waggoner has been appointed to work among the people in the interest of Eureka College. We feel that in him the college has a representative of whom any institution might be proud. His acquaintanceship is very wide, his interest in the college profound and his knowledge of its needs thorough. We ask the brethren everywhere to receive him cordially and to co-operate with him in whatever good things he may undertake among them. The writer will continue to be much among the people, while at the same time teaching certain classes and taking care of the internal workings of the institution.

Jubilee of Home Mission Society.

The Chattanooga Convention made the watchword of the Jubilee of the American Christian Missionary Society, "One Hundred Thousand Dollars for Home Missions." Gen. Drake has sent his check for five thousand dollars of this fund to be used as a permanent fund with which to support a home missionary all the time. Every lover of our co-operative mission work should rally round the mother society and make her Jubilee Year the greatest in our history. We hope that personal offerings to the Jubilee fund will come to us from every part of this good land. Don't forget this is the Jubilee Year of the American Christian Missionary Society. BENJ. L. Does It Pay?

In the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S editoria notes, by B. B. T., Oct. 27, he asks, "Do such conventions as this in Chattanooga pay?" and immediately says, "The answer must be, on the part of those who attend, an emphatic affirmative." I want in behalf of many who could not be there to say, please do not limit your affirmation to those present. We do not want our brethren to feel that we were absent from our own choice, nor will we permit for one moment the thought that because absent in person we were not interested in everything done there and partakers of the fellowship. I looked eagerly for my papers containing the reports, and when they came everthing else had to give way while I so far as possible looked in upon the deliberations and partook of the feast of rich things brought to me. I am sorry I could not be there, but I feel an uplift from the reports that I fear I could not have gotten in any other way.

When I think of what a great host of consecrated Christian men and women we have, all working together harmoniously, sympathetically and lovingly for the same purpose, I am made stronger and better prepared for the work in my little corner of God's vineyard, and with Paul I can say, "I thank God for this fellowship from the first day even till now."

Yes, such conventions pay, not only those who are present, but those who can attend only in spirit, as they read of what has been done and the plans of the larger conquests in the future. F. N. CALVIN.

Educational Conference at Moberly.

Pursuant to call the conference authorized by our State Convention at Moberly met on Nov. 1st. On account of a misunderstanding as to whether this was the time for the committee meeting or a meeting of the conference the attendance was not as large as expected. It is possible that we did not secure all the names of those present, but as near as we could ascertain J. B. Jones, C. H. Winders, H. A. Denton, Z. Moore, H. A. Buckner, J. W. Strawn, J. W. Robbins, S. G. Clay, T. P. Haley, W. G. Surber, G. A. Hoffmann, M. J. Nicoson, J. J. Lockhart, Clinton Lockhart, Davis Errett, Levi Marshall, W. M. Featherston and F. O. Norton were among the teachers and preachers in attendance. The following business men were also present and took quite an interest in the discussions: W. H. Dulany, Hannibal; J. W. Alexander, Gallatin; J. W. Barnett, Sedalia; Jerome Bryant, Middle Grove, and Daniel Boothe, O. C. Clay, L. H. Condit and Dr. R. H. Turner, Canton. There were also students from the school at Canton as follows: A. N. Lindsay, George Buckner, B. S. Edwards, S. L. Wonsetler, J. H. Coil, James Quisenberry, W. S. Lockhard, W. D. Embrey, E. H. Williamson, Albert Haywort, E. M. Rhoads, J. O. Walton, Albert Gulledge, Hollie Hale and C. A. Little. There were quite a number present whose names we did not secure.

After electing T. P. Haley, Kansas City, chairman and S. G. Clay secretary, it was decided by a majority vote that this was the conference and that a committee should prepare a program for discussion at 7:30 P. M. The conference then adjourned.

At the evening session the committee reported that the representatives of the different schools would present the conditions and work of the different schools they represented. Christian University, the Orphan School, Central Christian College, Christian College, and the Bible College were presented and their work and conditions discussed. After a three hours' conference it was decided to adjourn the meeting until Dec. 6th at 3 P. M. to meet again at Moberly. It was also decided that the next conference would take up the question of establishing and endowing one or more of our colleges at the next meeting. The feeling seems to be that something should be be done to make our educational interests more helpful to humanity and especially to the Church of Christ. The coming conference is looked to as a very important meeting, and it is hoped will form a new epoch and mark a rapid stride in the progress of our educational matters in the state. Every church in the state is to be allowed a vote in the next meeting, two votes for 200 members and less than 500 and all congregations having over 500 members three votes. All schools are allowed two votes and every preacher in attendance is allowed a vote. Churches all over the state are exhorted to send delegates that there may be a full representation. This educational work is a great question and full of importance. Let us meet the issue like men. Let us give it the time and thought necessary for a wise, profitable and righteous salvation. REPORTER.

Then and Now.

"Eight years ago to-day," said a county official here, "Pine Bluff had 46 saloons; now we have 17. Then the revenue to the county and city was $40,000 from the saloons, last year it was $10,000, and the license has not been increased." There seems to have been a steady uplift of some kind—a higher moral standard. To go about such places is becoming less respectable all the time. One saloonist said to his children who were going on a visit to Little Rock, "Don't tell anybody that your father is a saloonkeeper. Tell them he is a grocer. I keep pipes, cigars and tobacco and a few things that really belong to the grocery line of trade."

I had a full house to which to preach a Forefathers' Day sermon. Honoring the true and good seems to be right, albeit it may be close kin to hero worship. If the old soldier likes to hear of Davis, Lee, the Johnsons and Jackson, or Grant, Sherman, Sheridan and Thomas, we want the people to hear of the Campbells, Stone, Scott, Smith and Samuel Rogers, of Jerry Black and Garfield. Nor do we grow weary of the burden of their preaching which was in the interests of unity in the faith, and of the sinfulness of divisions and dissensions among the followers of Christ.

There was a time when many good and honest men hardly knew what was right; loyalty to state, or to the nation. This settled, there is a close kinship between loyalty to Christ and loyalty to country. A drunken soldier is a very poor specimen of patriotism. Two of these with drawn weapons compelled a train near here to wait on them indeed, to back to the station and let them fill their canteens; and by the time Uncle Sam is through with these heroes, they like Spain will have learned to be respectful to the authority of the United States.

Weyler and Blanco can no longer carry on their barbarities upon the down-trodden and oppressed, within the sight and hearing of our people; but my near neighbor had to get up in the night and stop a drunken man from beating his wife. Let loyalty to Christ and the church be sufficient to awaken every Endeavorer to a sense of duty on loyalty to our country, which means a better citizenship.

I will have a small class of our young people in the Bethany Reading Course.

Reopening.

The Christian Church in Ligonier, Ind., having repaired their old church building and added parlor, dining-hall; which can be opened into main room; kitchen, pantry and vestibule—addition containing 2,200 square feet of floor—new seats, furnace, etc., will reopen on Nov. 20, 1898. Pres. E. V. Zollars, of Hiram College, will be master of ceremonies on this important occasion.

The annual meeting of the Disciples of Christ in Noble County will be held at the same time, commencing Nov. 18 and continuing over Lord's day. An invitation is extended to pastors and churches. GEO. MUSSON.

Dedication.

Our new church building will be dedicated Lord's day, Nov. 13. The brethren in this state are invited to attend the services. Our new state secretary, Bro. B. L. Denny, will have charge of the services. Will follow the dedication with a meeting, with Bro. J. A. Bennett helping the writer by doing the preaching. Pray for our success.

Announcement from Bro. Clay.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: — As previously announced in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I have been appointed by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society as its Western Field Secretary, with headquarters at Kansas City, Mo. I now beg the privilege of addressing the brotherhood of Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Arkansas and Texas through your paper. I am in Kansas City as your fellowservant, and am ready to assist any and all of our pastors and churches in their efforts to send the gospel to the unevangelized nations of the world. I shall be glad to receive calls from the brethren for my services in assisting them in their preparations for the March Offerings and Children's Day collection. I am ready to come to you and speak for you free of cost to you and your church.

We are just entering upon the Jubilee Year of our organized missionary work. It will soon be fifty years since our people organized for aggressive missionary work, and sent out their first missionary to a foreign land. It is proper that we should celebrate this semi-centennial of missionary work. In Cincinnati, Ohio, preparations are being made for the greatest convention ever held by our brotherhood. Music Hall has been engaged as the place of meeting and 10,000 delegates are expected from the churches. This must be made a great year in all respects. The watchword for the society is, $150.000 for Foreign Missions in this, the Jubilee Year. We believe this sum can and will be raised. To do it, however, every church and state must increase its offering for Foreign Missions. Systematic effort should be put forth by every church and pastor to make this a Jubilee Year for themselves. Every church should be enlisted, and, as far as practicable, every member. An offering from every soul redeemed by the Christ for the world's salvation should be our aim. Time and again we have tried to secure this, but this year we must try again and succeed.

It will be my pleasure to attend district and county conventions, and to speak on Foreign Missions to the churches wherever I am wanted west of the Mississippi River. And I shall be especially glad to assist churches in rallies for the March Offerings. Letters addressed to me at Kansas City, Mo., will receive prompt attention. Truly yours, B. F. CLAY.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Nelson brethren are no more in the union school, but have organized one of their own, as ought to have been done some time ago, as the Interdenominational Association advises wherever practicable. Some one is responsible for one, while no one cares to stand good for the other; hence its failure to do the work. The Nelson school is going to join us in this good work, too, and that's right.

The Scotland County meeting at Memphis was good, brethren Grow, Rohrer, Williams and Boone having good representations from their respective schools. The program was intensely practical and all seemed to enjoy it. Simpson Ely gave us the keynote the first night, as he can do, and those hearing it declare that it was helpful to every one, but that is the way he does it. In Bible-school work I had hearty co-operation and such a financial response as made me rejoice, Memphis alone contributing in cash and pledges $18.13; but this is through J. T. Boone and J. M. Jayne, two of our best friends. Among the younger people of the church Brother Boone is doing a great work, while the membership is growing in all features of the work.

Of the Polk County meeting you have heard, but the Bible-school growth is a delight to such as myself. There were ten churches represented, and the preachers are all sacrificing to preach the Christ to the people, living in the plainest manner that they may continue in their respective fields, though offered better salaries in other territory, and God is blessing them in their work.

Brethren Rogers and Prewitt are visiting among the schools in their district, getting acquainted with the conditions of the work, that they may the better do that which is desired at their hands, and the schools are very generally coming to their support, so that they will not want for anything but co-operation.

John Giddens continues in his good meeting at Stoutland, and will report a good congregation at this important point, with money for a house and a good Bible-school at work. In pioneer work he is in his element.

The Pettis County meeting, as usual, was fine, being held with one of the best congregations in the state, Lamonte; in charge of J. N. Dalby, the meeting had to be good. The reports showed some needs which are to be seen to immediately, especially the Bible-school work. Preachers present, F. L. Cook, J. W. Felrell, Phil Stark, D. C. Peters, H. F. Davis, J. J. Morgan, Mrs. Virginia Hedges, King Stark, J. Stark. The interest in our work was shown by the giving to it, while the general interest is largely due the influence of King Stark, whose devoted wife was made a life member of the C. W. B. M. by those present. The entertainment at the church was fine, every consideration being the comfort of their guests. Lamonte school and Endeavor are with us this year as usual. King Stark's meeting, the second or third of the year, went right on, there being three confessions the last night of our meeting, and all the church seemed harnessed for work in earnest. Brethren Cook and Dalby, who love the Bible-school work, give me every assurance that their respective schools will soon be with us in this effort for the children.

Have you seen "Esther," by our fellow-worker, M. M. Davis? If not, you are missing a treat in the line of interesting Bible characters, and in the happiest vein of this godly man. I have concluded reading with the determination that all the young people especially should possess themselves of a copy, while the older ones will find in it much to cheer them on the way. The style is very free and easy, and you become so taken up with the character that you will regret the brevity of the book. It is from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, but can be had of any, and you will thank me for calling your attention to it.

The second quarter is now upon us, and the notices are going out. Remit us promptly, as we are behind with the force. Send it in now, please. H. F. DAVIS.

A Lovely Character Translated.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I know you will be pained to learn of the death of Sister Hieronymus, wife of Prof. R. E. Hieronymus, of this city. After an illness of four years, Sister H. fell asleep in Jesus Thursday evening, Oct. 27. She was one of the loveliest characters I ever knew.

To calmly turn her face from a devoted husband and three lonely little children and, without a tremor, walk into the arms of death, requires a courage that can only be born of the religion of death's conqueror. Without doubt she was the most uncomplaining sufferer I have ever known. She was pre-eminently a woman of faith, hope and love. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Prof. Edwards, president of the University, at 10 o'clock Saturday morning, Oct. 29. The funeral was largely attended and the sympathy deep and sincere. Many of the professors and teachers from the State Normal School, where Prof. Hieronymus taught last year, were present.

The floral offerings were most elaborate, and beautiful beyond description.

Captain Franz, who won distinction with the Rough Riders at Santiago, a brother of our deceased sister, arrived at her bedside only a few moments before her departure. Surely the Lord permitted her to tarry long enough to enjoy the great satisfaction of this meeting.

THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

Great attention is now being given to the Home Department of the Sunday-school. It is intended for all persons who for any reason cannot attend the regular sessions of the school, yet who desire to study the International Bible Lessons, and keep pace with the great Sunday-school movement.

The Supplies.—The supplies necessary for the Home Department, in addition to the Lesson Annuals, Quarterlies or Papers that may be used in the school, are as follows:

1. Application Blanks for membership in the class to be signed by the applicant and filed with the Secretary of the Department.

2. The Home Register, containing full explanations for conducting the Department, with ten Test Questions on each lesson of the quarter, followed by blank spaces for writing the answers.

3. Certificates of Proficiency, to be given to members at the end of the quarter, signed by the Superintendent and Secretary, based on the written answers to the questions on the lessons of the quarter.

Price List.—The prices of these necessary supplies are as follows: 1. Application Cards, 10 cents per dozen; 50 cents per 100. 2. The Home Register, 5 cents per copy, or in packages of not less than ten copies, 3 cents each. 3. Certificates of Proficiency, 25 cents per dozen, or $1.50 per 100.

Order your supplies for the Fourth Quarter of 1898 immediately and start the good work.

OKLAHOMA.

Perry, Oct. 31.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting at Polk with 15 additions; 14 by statement, one by baptism. Arrangements are being made to build a meeting house there.—WM. DUNKLEBERGER.

WISCONSIN.

Sugar Grove, Oct. 31.—One addition here yesterday and one two weeks ago. Work prospers. We are getting ready to entertain the state convention next year.—S. J. PHILLIPS, pastor.

INDIANA.

Lawrenceburg, Nov. 3.—We just closed a meeting here Sunday that was generally a success; 11 were added; all by baptism. Work here moving splendidly. At the unanimous call of the brethren I remain here for another year.—WILL G. LOUCKS.

NEBRASKA.

Norman, Nov. 1.—Meeting at West Point is progressing nicely with increasing interest. Bro. E. E. Francis is the faithful minister here and much appreciated.—S. W. GLASCOCK.

KENTUCKY.

Earlington, Oct. 30.—For the 19 days past Bro. Jas. C. Creel, of Plattsburg, Mo., preached the gospel of our Master with great power and fine effect. Visible results 12 additions. Much good was accomplished otherwise. —I. H. TEEL.

Lexington, Oct. 31.—Bro. C. K. Marshall has just closed a meeting with the church at Little Rock, Ky., which resulted in 29 confessions, one from the Baptists, one from the Methodists and two by letter. The preaching was of a high order and greatly enjoyed by all. Here is a brother that has done valiant service for the cause, and is vigorous and strong in body and mind, yet at present without regular work. Some of our best pulpits in Kentucky and Maryland can testify of his faithful ministry, and some of our leading churches that are without a man will make a mistake in not knowing Bro Marshall as a pastor. The writer closed a meeting with the Berea Church, Fayette Co., Ky., on the 14th of October with 11 confessions.—R. H. LAMPKIN.

MISSOURI.

La Belle, Oct. 31.—Closed a two weeks' meeting here with four added; three confessions. Go next to Plevna, Knox Co., to hold a meeting for J. H. Bryan.—W. F. TURNER.

Paris, Nov. 2.—Fourteen additions to the church under my labors since my last report; 7 by baptism, 3 by statement and 3 reclaimed.—C. H. STRAWN.

Bro. A. B. Elliott and I have just closed a meeting at Illinois Bend, with 46 additions, 38 of whom were by confession and baptism.—JACOB HUGLEY.

Rolla, Oct. 30.—Closed my work here to-day with three additions. Will begin a meeting at Labadie, Nov. 2nd. My address in the future will be Windsor, Mo.—R. B. HAVENER.

Trenton, Nov. 3.—One confession here Sunday, making four accessions to the congregation in the last month. Expect to close our work here with this year. We have been called for for the sixth year, but feel that it is best for all concerned to close our work here. We expect to leave the church free from debt and with one thousand dollars on interest with $800 pledged for a new organ.—G. SNELL.

KANSAS.

Howard, Nov. 4.—Preaching at Creso, a country church six miles north of here, this week. Four nights with nine additions; six confessions last night.—R. E. ROSENSTEIN.

Winfield, Nov. 4.—Our Endeavor Society observed Forefathers' Day last Sunday with appropriate and interesting exercises. The collection amounted to $6.50 for Home work. There have been six accessions since I came here in July.—W. T. ADAMS.

ABILENE, Nov. 5.—I have accepted a unanimous call from the church here to minister this coming year. Just closed a five days' meeting at Highland (Morris Co.) church. Baptized 1 and 1 confession that I will baptize in two weeks. This is my fifth meeting for the brethren at Highland. Lend us your prayers for success at Abilene. District convention here this month.—H. V. SCHOLES.

GEORGIA.

Atlanta, Oct. 31.—Four additions yesterday, making 13 for the month of October. We send as the offering of a brother $100 to Bro. Atkinson to place the "old folks" back on the October list. The brother says they must not be taken from the "roll of honor." Have entered on my eighth year of service with the church. We are united and happy.—C. P. WILLIAMSON.

KANSAS.

Olathe, Nov. 2.—I have just closed a good meeting at Weston, Mo., with 23 additions; 18 baptisms and the rest by statement or letter. The meeting was greatly hindered by the rain and snow.—R. F. FIFE.

Council Grove, Oct. 31.—Closed last night an eight days' meeting here with three baptisms and two other additions to this church. Bro. O. L. Cook, of Topeka, preached Wednsday, Thursday and Friday nights for us and one of the new recruits was gained during his stay with us.—J. A. WALTERS.

TEXAS.

San Marcos, Nov. 2.—I closed my work with South Butler church last Lord's day with 11 accessions to the church; 10 by baptism and one by statement. Have had 82 added since I began the work there about three years ago. Churches in Texas needing protracted meetings or pastoral work can address me at San Marcos, Texas.—C. E. SMOOTZ.

IOWA.

Rock Valley.—No organization here, But in a 10 days' meeting by J. M. Hoffmannn and Bro. Rust, of Wisconsin, three were baptized.

East Side Des Moines.—Melvin Putnam, of California, has begun a meeting of weeks and reports one confession.

Nevada.—The Wright and Martindale meeting closed with 18 added and a $300 lot purchased.

Highland Park, Des Moines.—Jas. Small assisting T. W. McDonald closed his meeting on Nov. 3rd, with 27 added.

Kellarton.—L. P. Kopp closed a good meeting here with nearly a dozen added to the Lord.

Creston, Oct. 31.—We had a grand church rally yesterday. Much enthusiasm was generated, great hope inspired and better days assured. It was a blessed day for both pastor and people. Since our first visit here in July, five have been added by letter and statement and four by baptism. God be praised for victories won and for his great promises.—D. F. SNIDER.

ARKANSAS.

Fayetteville, Nov. 2.—There were four additions to the First Church last Sunday; one by letter and three conversions.—N. M. RAGLAND.

ILLINOIS.

Blandinsville.—An audience of over 400 listened to A. R. Adams lecture on "Cowards" at the Old Bedford Christian Church Sunday evening, Oct. 30. At the close of the service three young ladies came forward, made the "good confession" and were baptized.

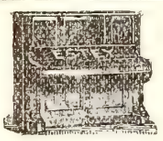
Blandinsville, Nov. 2.—The great storm closed our meeting at Jonesburg, Mo., on the 10th day. We had three additions. We go next to Litchfield church for one month's work from Nov. 6.—N. A. MELOAN.

Murphysboro, Oct. 31.—There were eight additions to the church here, during the first week of our protracted meeting. Our Endeavor Society had 16 more names proposed for memership at its last meeting. This makes a total of 66 additions in the last three weeks and still others to come.—W. H. WILLYARD, pastor.

Sidney, Nov. 2.—I began my meeting here last Lord's day and have two additions with four sermons preached. Interest runing high. The U. B. preacher has held four weeks now and one addition. Send me a bunch of papers and will distribute.—C. H. BERRY.

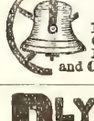
Hoopston, Nov. 1.—Thirteen added yesterday and thirteen the day before and seven grand men and women to-night; 81 in all to date. Meeting continues. Buchanan, Mich., next.—CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE, evangelist; S.R. SCOTT AND NONA MCCORMICK, singers.

A Letter from Bro. McConnell.



An M. E. minister occupying a popular pulpit and a member of Upper Iowa Conference, occupied the Christian pulpit in Marion on Sunday night during the sitting of the Annual Conference, and in discussng the subject of union said as reported to me by an intelligent listener:

"You cannot add fractions of different denominators without reducing them to a common denominator; and, as the fractions of the church have different denominations, you cannot unite or add them together without reducing them to a common demoniator." To all of which I say most heartily, Amen! and amen! The only difficulty in the way of union is to find the common denominator (which is easily done) and get the fractions willing to be reduced. There are several names given the people of God in the New Testament, either of which is equivalent to the other and is acknowledged to be a common denominator; name sfor the children of God, viz., "Disciple," "Christian," "Church of God," "Church of Christ," etc.



Now if all the fractions are willing to be changed into Christians—the common denominator—the adding can be accomplished; and the sum will be that for which the Savior earnestly prayed (John 17) and upon which the Holy Spirit through the apostles insisted. May God hasten the time when there will be no fractions, but a whole number.—N. A. McConnell, in Christian Index.

AARON PRINCE ATEN.

Bright spark of heaven's celestial fire,
Imprisoned from thy high desire!

Within an earth-born cell confined,
Thou offspring of Eternal Mind!

Be still and know that thou art part
Of Spirit's omnipotent heart.

For thee goes out Eternal Thought,
For thee, with endless blessing fraught.

Not lost art thou from heaven's ken,
Though hid within the sons of men.

A part of God, his image grand,
Within his presence thou shalt stand.

The fires that in thy being burn,
To him ascending, shall return.

A part thou art though small or great,
Of light that pours through heaven's gate.

Returning, shall reunion be
With that great Light that shines on thee.

Triumphant thought, O spirit mine;
Though of the earth, yet still Divine!

Mr. Davids and His Great Round World.

BY MARY F. M. BALDWIN.

Mr. Davids "took summer boarders." The menage of his establishment was cast upon strictly rural lines.

"No frills, no city fixin's; if folks wants country board and country livin' I'll give it to 'em straight. That's me, Billy Davids."

This announcement, uttered in stentorian tones, constituted the leading feature in the welcome he extended to me at the beginning of my two months' stay at his comfortable farmhouse. Having fairly settled down, I soon found a congenial associate in a Mrs. Joy. This lady was decidedly my senior in years, and also, as I soon discovered, my superior in worldly wisdom. She got on famously with our eccentric and outspoken host, and easily brought about a few needed amendments in our bill of fare. Fortunately for me she shared my liking for long walks. Together we thoroughly explored the country near at hand, and discovered the best points from which to view its fine scenery. We escaped from cows, and were frightened by snakes. We sat on fences, paddled in brooks, picked flowers and berries, and in general lived the sort of life which rests the soul—and also secures a favorable report from the platform scale. Instead of lapsing into that paganism to which city people take so kindly when away from home, we regularly dropped our mites in the collection-box of a rather distant church, going and returning with our host, behind a pair of beautiful black horses, feeling, as the spirited animals gladly took us over hill and vale, that there are times even in this troublesome world when virtue has its just reward. Our life, however, was not wholly an outdoor one. Occasionally we could sympathize with the young men at one of our great universities, of whom one of their number, a Japanese, innocently remarked: "When it rains the students read books." The reading of books, however, was not our only resource on a rainy day; for at such times our host would tarry a while at the table, setting forth his views of matters and things in a manner that was at once original and striking, his favorite topic being the flatness of this world; his chief authority, a mythical spelling-book.

"Yes, ma'am," he said, addressing Mrs. Joy, as if assured of her approval, "I can almost see it now, the way it was in the back part of that old, yaller-covered spellin'-book (it's round the garret somewhere, now). 'This world is square and p'ised on a pinnacle.' I always believed it and do yet. What's your idee about it, Mrs. Joy?"

"Well," said she, "your theory is worthy of consideration. It is a decided improvement on the notion that the world is carried on the back of a tortoise."

"Tortoise!" he exclaimed, contemptuously; "why that's a kind of a turkle, isn't it? Now that's some furrin notion, I'll warrant. I tell you, Mrs. Joy, these furriners is a thousand years behind the age. Don't it beat all what idees some people do have? Turkle!—huh!"

Too full for further utterance, Mr. Davids took his pipe from the mantel and left the room.

The next day was fine, and we took our usual leisurely course along the road, finally stopping to rest under a widespreading chestnut tree. Here some kindly soul, mindful of the needs of his fellowmen, had provided a rude but comfortable seat, while near at hand a large watering trough received its abundant supply through a wooden pipe that rose abrubtly from the ground. The cool shade and the soft murmur of the flowing water contrasted most gratefully with the heat of the glowing highway beyond.

We had comfortably settled ourselves and were beginning to realize that these things were largely designed for our especial comfort and enjoyment, when the sound of approaching wheels warned us that possibly others might be cherishing the same delusion. The newcomer proved to be Dr. Blake, Mr. Davids' pastor, to whom we had already been introduced. While this worthy and affable gentleman was watering and resting his horse a conversation very naturally began, and as naturally followed the line of current parish life, our host and his peculiarities receiving their due share of attention. One thing led to another until, before the interview ended, it was arranged that Mrs. Joy's nephew, Dr. Harris, a young physician and amateur astronomer, who was visiting in a neighboring county, should give a talk on his favorite science as soon as the necessary arrangements could be made. Dr. Blake suggested that it might be possible to secure the use of a large barn upon which Mr. Davids' nearest neighbor, Squire Hood, was just putting the finishing touches.

"I shall try," said he, gathering up the lines as a hint to Dobbin that the journey was to be resumed—"I shall try to have my young people let Mr. Davids alone in this matter. They are rather disposed to make him a butt for their ridicule, although his ready wit generally gives him the victory. Still, the thing has been quite overdone, especially in the matter of the 'yellow-covered spelling-book.'"

As he said this Dr. Blake raised his hat, tightened the reins, and the horse slowly moved away from the welcome shade. Events moved smoothly on, and in a few days the arrangements for the lecture were complete. It then naturally became the chief topic of conversation in the neighborhood, but Dr. Blake's desire that the matter should not be intruded on Mr. Davids' attention was so well carried out that that gentleman, far from being pleased, was rather annoyed by the lack of attention. He kept his own counsel, however, until shortly before the time set, when one day at dinner he abruptly said:

"I hear they're going to have an astronomical lecture Thursday night over to Squire Hood's barn." As no one made any response to this rather belated information, he continued: "'Pears to me they're keepin' the thing mighty close."

"Why, no," said his wife; "it's been give out in church twicet; an' the Ladies' Aid Association is makin' quite some count on it for a new heater to put in the basement."

"Well, now here, Hanner! that ain't what I'm a-drivin' at at all; if I didn't want to go to the blamed lecture they'd all be a-pesterin' on me to buy tickets; but now they've got something I'm really interested in, narry a one of 'em has offered me the fust ticket. I know what it's all for; it's for the sake of bein' contrary. If there's anything that gets me riled up, it's havin' to do with folks that's always pullin' 'tother way. But I'm goin to be there, an' don't you forget it!"

The eventful evening at length arrived. Mr. Davids was not at home at supper-time; his wife informed us that he had "had a snack early," and gone off on "considerable of a drive." "He allowed," she added, by way of explanation, "that he'd be back in time for the lecter."

When we set out in the early twilight no inconsiderable part of the people round about were on the move. As we looked down into the valley the road, as it occasionally came to view, seemed filled with a constant succession of stylish turnouts—family carriages, wagons and buggies, while a few determined cyclists bent to the pedals and toiled up the steep ascent.

Squire Hood not only granted the use of his fine new barn for a lecture-hall, but also threw open to the attending public a large adjoining field, which having been recently mowed and being now covered with the fresh, springing grass, had quite the effect of a great lawn. A constant succession of vehicles streamed through the single broad entrance, while the scene was most animated. Everybody was in good spirits and seemed to know everybody else; and the chatter of the young, and the more formal but hearty salutations of their elders filled the air with a continual hum. As the twilight deepened the women gradually made their way toward the barn, while the men, with a skill born of long experience, carefully arranged for the security of their horses. Moving in and out among the crowd were many bright-faced damsels who hardly needed their ribbon badges to point them out as members of the young ladies' auxiliary. It was they who marshaled the audience and collected the tickets; and it was by one of them that we were conducted to two of the best seats in the house. But where was Uncle Billy Davids? This was not only our query, but, so far as we could judge, was the uppermost thought of those about us. We did not, however, remain long in ignorance, for soon there was heard a whoop and a "hooray." Uncle Billy having driven up, had found the gate closed; a state of affairs upon which he proceeded to comment in no uncertain tone.

"Hello there! What's the matter with you? The boss told you to shut the gate, hay? Well, I tell you to open it—mighty quick, too! A fine lot you are, a-tryin' to keep out the best part of your aujence. Whoa, there, Cesar! Steady, boy! Look out there! these hosses is gettin' cross; they ain't used to no sich foolin' as this."

Then in with a dash came the splendid double team of dapple grays. Turning round in our seats and looking out through the great doorway we saw Mr. Davids swing around his equipage in a masterly style, and present to us the rear of a long, well-filled lumber-wagon. Then came a volley of orders and demands.

"Here, you young fellers, git them hosses unhitched; tie one to each wheel. Hold on, Miss Clarke, you wait a minute. Here, Charley, bring out one of them chairs. Now, where's the ticket committee? Well, count 'em off; I'm payin' for the hull outfit."

The audience, which by this time had arisen and faced the rear, awaited with the utmost expectancy the entrance of the outfit. This, as we judged from the remarks of our whispering and tittering neighbors, must have been gathered together as the result of considerable thought on the part of Mr. Davids; for its members were all persons of marked individuality. It is but just to say that the audience paid for its amusement by securing for the late comers some of the most eligible seats.

The twilight having given place to darkness, the improvised lecture-hall was well lighted by several rustic candelabra suspended from the rafters by strong cords, while mosses and festoons of wild flowers, tastefully arranged, everywhere met the eye.

The lecture was an unqualified success. Dr. Harris not only had a clear and forcible way of stating new facts, but had also the more rare talent which enabled him to put in definite shape, acceptably, many of those hazy and ill-defined notions of which all well informed people have so large a stock. But while all others were pleased Mr. Davids was unhappy. As the lecture progressed, his square world became more and more unsteady on its pinnacle. Entering the room at the rear, he had gradually worked his way along one side toward the front, each round of applause carrying him a seat or two forward until, with troubled look and parted lips, he came fully within view of the audience. As nearly as we could judge, his mental state was fitly set forth by a broad-shouldered youth near us who whispered to his companion:

"Just look at Uncle Billy; why, he's all broke up!"

Mr. Davids proved, however, that his wits were still at command, for the chorus of "Ayes" which expressed the thanks of the audience had hardly ceased, when he sprang to his feet, and with outstretched arm and pointing finger said:

Mr. Professor! I want to ask one question. How kin a man find out for sure that the world is round?"

"Well," replied the lecturer; "if the gentleman could once stand on the seashore and see a ship, hull down, behind the intervening mass of water his doubts would probably be at an end."

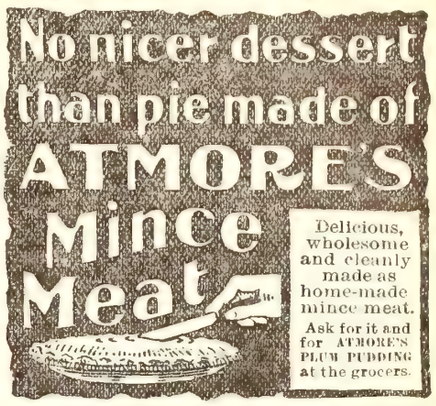
Put at ease by this simple statement, Mr. Davids at once turned to the congenial task of getting his team in shape. His turnout was soon ready, and if surprised we were also pleased when we heard his urgent invitation to take our places on the front seat for a ten miles' drive in the moonlight. The route was to us, for the most part, a new one, so that much sooner than we expected we had turned the most distant point and found ourselves well on the way homeward.

Mr. Davids, who up to this time had been fully occupied in guiding the spirited team, had also kept up a lively inward wrestling with his great problem, and so remained for the most part silent; but now as the team, once more on familiar ground, jogged steadily along, its master voiced some of his reasonings as follows:

"That air lecture was fust-class. I kinder think that young feller might 'a' been right. The moon's round, ain't it? and so's the sun; and why hain't the world got just as good a right to be round, too? Anyhow, I'm goin' to find out, and mighty soon, too."

The second morning after the lecture we learned that Mr. Davids had taken an early train and was well on his way toward Asbury Park. He returned late that evening, evidently in good spirits, for his hearty laugh as he entered the house awoke us from our first sound sleep; and when we met, the next morning, at breakfast, our host was overflowing with the zeal of a new convert, and it was not an easy task to bring him down to a connected narrative of the previous day's adventure.

"It's all settled, Mrs. Joy," he began, in a tone of mingled relief and exaltation. "Yes, ma'am! the world is round for sure; there ain't no more room for doubt on that subject, 'cause I've seen the hull thing with my own eyes. I got down to the shore all right. About the last thing I met a gent on the train, and he give me a lot of information—just what I wanted for a good start. Very soon after we landed I was a-standin' at the foot of a telegraph pole a-bucklin' a pair of climbin' spurs onto my boots. I had slung around my neck what the gentleman that lent it to me called a binocular. Well, the lineman I hired the spurs of"—



At this point, Mrs. Davids, whose curiosity had finally gotten the better of her awe, said: "What kind of spurs was they, Father? hoss spurs?"

"No, no, woman; like rooster's spurs."

"But," she persisted, "a rooster never climbs with his spurs."

"Now don't interrupt me no more; let these ladies," he added, with an air of extreme dignity, "hear how it come to get settled whether the world was round or not. Sometimes," he continued, impressively, "we have to let small matters go while we're a-settlin' the great fac's of the universe. Well, as I was a-sayin', I was strappin' these spurs onto my boots when the lineman he says: 'Bein' as you're a begginner, you want to dig them spurs in middlin' hard.'

"When I was all ready to start I took the binocular and sighted on some kind of a vessel, and there it was sure enough, the poles a-stickin' up out of the water; but somehow it didn't look like it was sunk. 'Thunder!' I says to myself, 'that ere water don't look like I thought it would; but here, this ain't business!' So I dug in one spur, then I dug in the other one, hevin' a good grip around the pole with my left arm and a-holdin' on to the binocular with the other hand like grim death; and up I went. But the mischief of it was, that not bein' used to the business and havin' my nose middlin' close to the pole, I kind o' sidled around so that when I got the binocular up to my eyes again, all I could see was a lot o' housen; there wa'nt no ocean 'tall where there ought to be one. So I had to stick the binocular back in the case ag'in and grab the pole with both arms and get up a kind of a' Injun war-dance till the ocean come round to where it belonged. It sounds funny to tell on; but you'd better believe that between bein' afraid I'd drop the binocular and then lose my footin' and drop myself, I tell you for a minute or two I had a pretty busy time of it. But when I sighted on that ship ag'in, there she was, the hull of her, on top of the water. I wa'nt exactly satisfied, for you see I couldn't know what those fellers had been a-doin' when my back was turned on 'em. Well! by this time I got the hang of them climbin' irons, and I saw the right thing to do was to keep a climbin' up and down drawin' a steady sight onthe boat all the while. So up and down Iwent, and the first genuine round trip I made, the whole thing was settled.

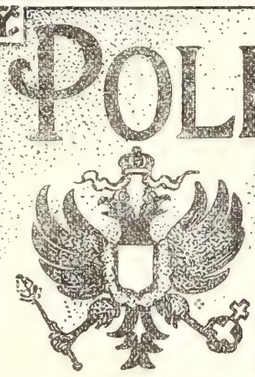
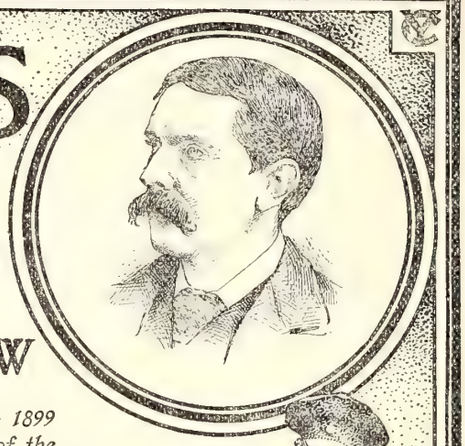
"I was 'most struck dumb to see that great, big, green ocean a-bublin' up that way. I tell you, Mrs Joy, it looked powerful. So up and down I went, the idee a-gittin' more and more wonderful all the while. But all of a sudden I heard the lineman holler: 'Say, boss! time's up; I got to go to work in ten minutes.' So I looked down and there was a crowd big enough to fill a meetin'-house, and people a-flockin' from all directions; some on a walk some on a run, but all making fust-class time. 'Hello!' I says to myself, 'what's all this? I must have struck a camp-meetin'; but see how the folks is a-runnin.' I've hear tell all my life of people a-comin' under good influences, but this is the fust time I ever seen 'em comin' at a hand-gallop.' "



"Perhaps," suggested Mrs. Davids, "it was the salt air made 'em so spry; they say it's powerful strenghthenin'."



"Salt air! salt nothin'. It wa'nt no camp-meetin' 'tall; it was a curiosity meetin'. Feelin' pretty good myself I wasn't hurt much by the kinder p'inted remarks they was makin' about me. So I kept agoin' down the pole, slow and easy, and takin' it all in. By the time I was pretty near down, one of 'em says:

"'Tommy, gir some hoss liniment; see how stiff he is in the j'ints.'

"At this the crowd give a yell, and just then I felt one of them blamed spurs givin' way, and down I come kerplunk, partly onto the sand and partly ag'in a fat man and two boys that stood there a-gawkin at me. Well, nobody wa'nt hurt much, the trouble bein' kinder distributed round, which I calc'late on the hull is about the best way to take trouble, and accordin' to Scriptur', too. As soon as I got on my feet a policeman come up and says:

"Here, Cap; 't won't do to get such a big crowd together here.'

"'All right,' I says; 'I'll fix 'em.' You see it just run across my mind about the Life Savin' Service; so I shifted half a dollar into my vest pocket and up I clumb about six foot, when they all stilled down expectin' to have more fun, I reckon; then roared out:

"'Is there any one here who would like to contribute to a noble object?' Well, in spite of their bein' on sand, I could hear a general shuffle, and all of a sudden everybody seemed to have business on hand. As soon as I see I got a move onto 'em, I hollered out ag'in louder than ever:

"'When the storm's a-roarin' outside an' we're a-lyin' comfortable in bed a-listenin' to the rain a-beatin' onto the pane —an' the bough a-scrapin' ag'in' the house —a little band of heroes is a-breastin' of the billow for—to—save—life.'

"By this time there was a clear circle twenty foot wide all 'round the pole; and seein' that the movement was under full headway I crep' down, an' while I was unstrappin' the irons the policeman tapped me on the shoulder, an' said: 'I say Cap, that was a quick job.'

"Just then, by good luck, up druv the gentleman that lent me the binocular, so I returned him his property and give him the half-dollar for the Life Savers; then I had a good dip in the bulgin' sea, and come home."

Here our worthy narrator moved back from the table, slapped his hands on his knees, and, slowly wagging his head, said: "I reackon I was middlin' well up to that crowd even if they was brought up on salt air." Saying this he arose and went out to his work.

The remaining weeks of our stay with Mr. Davids passed rapidly, he meanwhile airing his newly acquired knowledge in many quaint statements. It was quite evident, however, that a desire to grapple with other deep problems had been fully aroused by his recent experience, and I imagine some of our answers to his questions showed more skill in dodging than depth of scientific knowledge. Mrs. Joy's favorite resource, when too hard pressed, was a promise to refer the matter to her nephew; and as a natural result our host soon formed a plan for a course of lectures by Dr. Harris which should embrace the whole field of human knowledge. And it so happened that when, in due time and with renewed health and strength, we took our places on a departing train one beautiful September morning, Mr Davids called after us in tones which were easily heard above the clanging of the bell and the rumble of the wheels: "Tell him he's got to come; this here Science has got to be settled."—The Independent.

Morning Hymn.

Ps. 18:1, 2; 15:1, 2; John 3:16;15: 4, 7, 12, 13.

I only wish, my Lord, to know
Why Thy dear heart doth love me so;
A love so pure, so strong, so sweet,
It brings me to Thy blessed feet.

My joys, my hopes, my cares are Thine;
O'er my whole life Thy glories shine.
Thou art my Star, my Sun, my Shield;
To Thee I bow, to Thee I yield.

Thy blessed service claims my soul;
I give it all to Thy control.
Before no other gods I'll bow,
But ever love and praise Thee now.

My Sun, my Shield, my Staff, my Guide,
With Thee I'll evermore abide;
Strong Fortress mine, to Thee I flee,
And ever hide from storms in Thee.

Alcohol Kills.

The Evangel for October contains an account of some experiments made by Dr. Frederick W. D. Evelyn, of San Francisco, California, for the purpose of determining the effect of alcohol upon animal and vegetable life, from which we reprint the following "facts:"

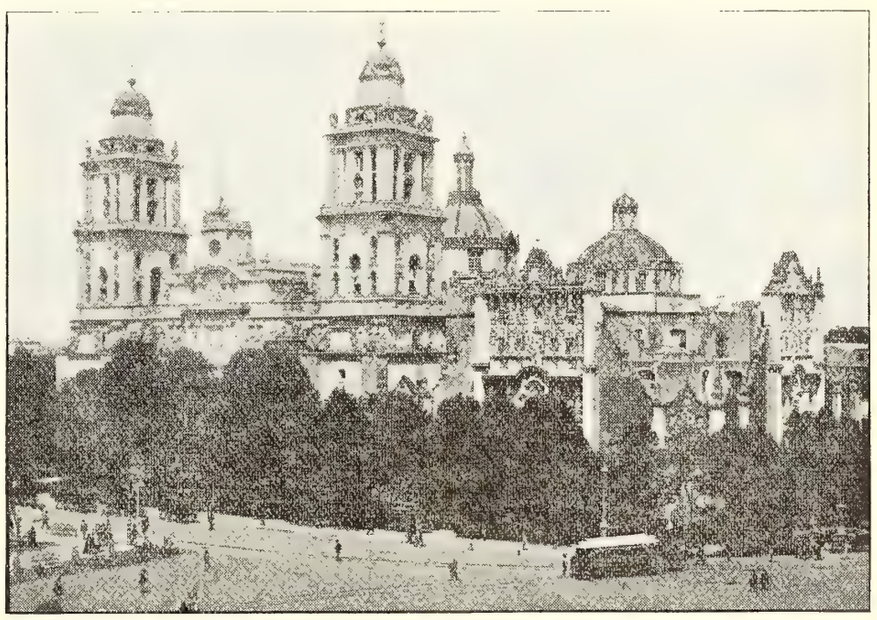
I find that an onion growing in pure water will at the end of 30 days have grown a sprout 7 inches high, one in water containing 5 per cent. of alcohol 6 1-4 inches, one in 10 per cent. alcohol 5 3-4, in 15 per cent. alcohol but 2 1-2 inches, and the onions in water containing 30 per cent. or over, of alcohol have not only refused to grow, but the sprouts have withered and the body onion lost over 28 per cent. in weight. In each case the onions had grown sprouts an inch in length before transplanting. . .

I have experimented not only with vegetables grown in water in which a percentage of alcohol was presented, and noted results, but I have carried the investigation further and planted a variety of vegetables in soil. These I watered with a percentage of alcohol, and while the restricted growth was not quite so noticeable, yet the effect upon the cell life was the same. I found that under these conditions a potato, onion, carrot or turnip would still show signs of life when the water-food contained as high as 50 per cent. alcohol. It required almost 60 per cent. to cause death within thirty days. I attribute this change of condition to the fact that the soil modified the effect of the alcohol upon the plant. The soil acted as a filter for the first few days, or until such a time as it became surcharged with the alcohol.

In the above experiments but little change was noticeable in the color of the sprouts or stalks until after the fifteenth day. From that time on the decay was more pronounced. However, the soil that had been used in the experiments for the high percentages was immediately used again and with marked results. Soil that had been saturated daily with 50 per cent. alcohol, when used for new growth caused the death of all plant life within 12 days. The 40 per cent. soil killed a healthful growth of potatoes in 16 days.



A pigeon fed with three tablespoonfuls of whisky a day died on the twenty-first day. A carefully conducted autopsy disclosed the fact that the direct cause of death was gangrene of the stomach, brought about by dehydration of the stomach. Food which had to my knowledge been eaten at least five days before was still undigested.

To sum up the results of my investigation, I have concluded that there is one common element opon which life depends, and that is water. Whatever tends to lessen the normal amount or condition of the water provided by nature interferes with life.

CATHEDRAL OF GUADELUPE, CITY OF MEXICO, MEXICO.

CATHEDRAL OF MEXICO, MEXICO CITY, MEXICO.

The City of Mexico.*

The City of Mexico is very pleasantly situated on a high plateau surrounded by hills. To the east there are two mountain peaks which are continually covered with snow, and can be plainly seen from the city almost every day in the year. Mexico is a city of churches, there being over 130, but mostly Roman Catholic. There are but five or six of the Protestant faith. We attend the M. E. Church, which is doing a great work all over the republic. There are many beautiful parks and plazas in and around the city, one of which is the national park at Chapultepec which surrounds the National Palace, or White House of Mexico. This house sits on a very high natural mound. The Alameda, in the center of the city is where, at 11 A. M. on Sundays, all the wealthy people promenade, and the young ladies get to see their sweethearts (dulce corozones) who are always on hand, they not being permitted, here, to visit at the young ladies' homes, ordinarily, without being engaged.

The flowers bloom at all times here and every day in the year the noted flower market is filled with the most fragrant flowers which always find ready buyers. This market is near the great cathedral and at the north side of the zocolo, the central plaza of the city.

Many suburban villages surround us, all connected by the great street car system of Mexico. One of these villages is where the noted church of Guadalupe is situated.

The Cathedral of Guadalupe, of which we send you a picture, was built in honor of the Virgin of Guadalupe, whose image is so much adored by the Roman Catholics. The picture shows one of their fiestas, the 12th of December, when they gather from far and wide to pay homage to her and ask for forgiveness. On these days they gamble and have all kinds of oddities for sale. It is a beautiful cathedral, having been over 200 years in building.

The next picture is that of the great cathedral of Mexico, covering a whole square. Its location is in the center of the city, and it is surrounded by a beautiful garden of verdure and the central plaza or zocolo.

Lace Curtains.

There have been many complaints recently concerning the durability of lace curtains, for after they have been sent to the laundry a few times they seem to literally "drop to pieces." This is not due to the inferior quality of the curtains when purchased, but to the strong chemicals that are often used in cleaning them, and the housekeeper who does this work at home not only saves the laundry bill, but her curtains will last much longer. It is not a difficult tast, and one who understands the proper method and is willing to devote the necessary time to the work is sure to succeed.

When the curtains are taken down shake them thoroughly to remove the dust, and if any small holes or broken threads are visible, darn them carefully before they are put in the water. When this work is neatly done it will show very little if any when the curtains are laundered. Heat the water until it is almost boiling hot, dissolve a little borax in it and enough soap to make a good suds. Pour this over the curtains and allow them to soak half an hour. Rub them gently between the hands and work them up and down in the water for ten or fifteen minutes, then fold each curtain separately, wrap a clean white cloth around it, and pass it through the wringer into the second suds prepared just as the first was. The amount of borax required varies with the kind of water used, as more will be needed for hard water than for soft. They will seldom need boiling, and after they have been washed in the second suds they will be ready for rinsing and starching. Rinse through two waters, then dip in a very thin boiled starch, which should be slightly tinged with blue, if a clear white is desired. Adding cold coffee to the starch will give it an ecru tint, or saffron tea will make them a delicate cream color.

If you have no curtain frames and cannot get them, do not be discouraged, for your curtains can be dried very satisfactorily without them. Spread several sheets out upon the floor of a spare room, stretching them smoothly and securing them by tacking them to the floor at intervals. Spread the curtains upon them, drawing them tightly and pinning every scollop in place. Open the windows so they will dry quickly, and when taken up you will find them as pretty as new curtains. They will not need ironing. E. J. C.

"What Harm is there in Card-Playing?"

The harm (1) of handling the tools of the gambler. (2) Of learning the methods of using these tools. (3) Of coming under the influence of the tendency towards the tricks and trickery that so commonly go with the use of those tools. (4) Of entering even the outer circle of the kind of people who use such tools, and of coming under the influence of the tendency to be drawn into the circles that are nearer and nearer the wicked vortex of such things. (5) Of becoming familiar with and a party to the lowering of the principle of the lot commonly called "chance," but really predestination (or providence) to the uses of mere recreation. (6) Of risking the tendency toward the waste of time in prolonged play. (7) Of venturing into the danger of not doing whatsoever one does to the glory of God, in the name of the Lord Jesus. (8) Lastly, even though it would do you no harm, there would be the harm it would do to others in any of these ways; and your daily petition, "Lead us not into temptation," makes it incumbent upon you not to lead any one into temptation or to lead temptation to any one. — London Christian Endeavor.

Eternity.

BY WILL H. DIXON.

Strange we seldom miss the the moments till the day is past and gone;
We seldom prize God's sunshine till our lives are cast in gloom;
We scarcely learn life's lessons until the latest breath,
When the shadows fall around us and we close our eyes in death.

O, let us heed the precious moments, then and work while life shall last,
For time's clock will strike no more the hours that have passed;
Soon the angel, Death, will call us from out life's narrow sea—
Far beyond this life of toil and time, TO THE GREAT ETERNITY!

Illustrated Sermon.

CAL OGBURN.

Text: For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office: so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members of another.—Rom. 12:4, 5.

The eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee; nor the head to the feet, I have no need of thee. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary.—1 Cor. 12:21, 22.

SERMON.

While winding my watch the other night I imagined the various parts that enter into its construction were engaged in a very animated discussion. I listened, and heard the mainspring say in a complaining mood: "I am shut up here in this prison and can only pull and pull to make the rest of you go, and I'm getting very tired of it. I am the essential part of any watch, and I protest against such treatment from my inferiors."

At this seemingly unprovoked attack the balance wheel chimed out, "I am quite as necessary as you are," laying a great deal of emphasis on the personal pronouns, "and here I am being constantly jerked from side to side till I am so dizzy I could not stand alone, if I had the privilege of trying. It is too bad."

This explosive speech from the somewhat unbalanced wheel gave the delicate hair-spring occasion to relate her grievances, which she did in very plain language. "Do you mean to insinuate," said she, "that I am the cause of all your annoyance? You are forever determined to go to one extreme or the other, and I am so tired trying to keep you in your proper place that I think I shall certainly have an attack of nervous prostration. Will you not hereafter conduct yourself as a balance wheel should? And please do not insinuate, at least while you are so eccentric, that I am of little importance. If it were not for me, delicate as I am, a watch would not be a watch."

Then the second hand accused the minute hand of being lazy, and the minute hand retorted by saying, "I am not lazy, I would have you know. You certainly have forgotten that I have a greater distance to travel than you have, and that my work is much more important than yours, for while you tick off the seconds I count the minutes. Besides, I perform twelve times as much labor as my neighbor, the hour hand, for he travels around the face of this dial but twice in twenty-four hours, while I go round twenty-four times. I've a great mind to sue you for slander or accusing me of being lazy."

Before the minute hand had finished his harangue the hour hand interrupted him by saying, "The insinuation you have just made to your noisy little neighbor that I am not doing my duty is false and ridiculous. It is my business, as you very well know, to mark the hours as they go by, while it is your business"—and this was spoken in such an emphatic way as to convey the impression that the minute hand was inclined to meddle with the business of others—"to tell off the minutes. This duty I have done faithfully and well. It requires sixty minutes to make an hour, therefore I am sixty times more important than you. I am come to bear witness to the truth."

Just then the watch suddenly stopped, and the combined efforts of all the hands and of all the springs could not move a wheel. The conference assumed a different aspect, and upon due inquiry it was found that a very small cog had been broken out of a very insignificant little wheel—presumably by the bickering and contention that had prevailed—rendering the watch practically useless.

APPLICATION.

Unfortunately, there are egotistic, disparaging, contentious church members as well as self-centered, hypercritical watch springs, hands and wheels, and the one is as ruinous to the church as the other is to the watch. Let us strive to realize that "those members of the body which seem to be more feeble are necessary," and as Christians govern ourselves in harmony therewith. Nothing more quickly destroys the usefulness of a congregation than for the spirit of fault-finding and disparagement to prevail. Keep selfishness without by keeping love within.

With The Children.

Getting Started.

Children, I have already told you something about this department, but when anything new is started you know there must be a good deal of talking. So I must say more about it. For this column is a new thing—there is not another corner in any magazine or paper just like it. And I want you to understand all about it from the beginning. This place in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is given up to the children, and it is for them, and not for their parents. Grown people can read it if they want to, but children will read it because it is for them, and they can't get anywhere else what they will get here. You know what young folks' departments generally are—places where mothers are told how to raise their children; or sermons to boys and girls about not losing a minute of time, or throwing away a string; or a little story about somebody who was so good that he died of it.

Of course we all want to be good, but we want to live and enjoy it. And when we have a children's column we want something in it that will interest children and make them anxious for the next paper to "come out." How will I know what you want in this column? Am I going to guess at it? No, I am going to leave it to you. What would you like to read in your column? I invite you all to write to me and tell me just what you want, and you shall have it. Isn't that fair? This is why this column is different from any other in the world. The children are asked to make it a success. Write to me at once and tell me what you think it ought to be. Do you like continued stories about boys and girls—sure enough, live, happy, healthy boys and girls? Or do you like short stories for children? Or do you like poetry? And what about facts? And are you going to join the Advance Society?

I told you about that society last week, but perhaps you missed the paper. I will tell it again in a few words. Anybody can join who makes five determinations: 1. To read weekly five pages of history (not a text-book); 2. To memorize weekly a quotation from some standard author; 3. To read 30 lines of poetry weekly; 4. To read a verse of the Bible daily; 5. To keep an account of how much you read in a note-book. And at the end of twelve weeks if you have kept all these resolutions write to me, saying so, stating what you have read and how much, and your name will be printed in this column on the List of Honor. Remember, you are not allowed to skip one week, then make up the next. Regularity is what we want. You can begin any day, and if you miss a week you must begin all over. If you didn't see what I said about this last week hunt up the paper and read it now. We want members from all the states, and from foreign countries. Write, saying you will join; and give me your age, and tell me about yourself, and give us advice about making this column a great big success. I will keep all your names on my book, and we will all come close together and feel a good deal like kinfolks. Not the kind of kinfolks that tell you to make less noise, however, just because it is a habit with them—and I can make good use of your letters, and give the good things out to the rest.

Another new thing about this society—every once in a while we will write upon a given subject, and I will put all your pieces into one article, with your names after what you write. Not subjects like "The Pyramids" or "Time," but something you won't have to dig out of books, and then harrass yourselves by trying to say it in a different way. Do you know our first general subject? It is, "The Funniest Thing in the World." Ever know of any thing funny happening, or ever hear of any funny remark by a boy or girl? Write at once and tell me about it. Now, you don't have to do this unless you wish, but I hope you will wish. And tell your friends about this piece; it will be printed in this column in about two weeks. Tell them to get ready to laugh! Make your stories just as short as you can, but don't leave out the point. Always write your age. If you don't want me to publish it draw a circle about it. In that case I will keep it a dark secret. Nobody shall get it out of me! If you are real old, and ashamed of having lived so long, you needn't give your age. But send that funny story. We all want to hear it. When I insist that this column is not for old people, don't suppose I mean to be unkind to them. Here's a story that will show just what I mean, and it's a story you never heard before.

THE ROBINS AND THE OWLS.

There was a certain yard where some robins lived as happy as robins can be. All day long they chattered and sang as they went about their daily household duties. They skipped back and forth in the sunlight, because they knew the yard was plentiful of big, fat worms; and the trees threw down twigs and leaves for them to make into nests. And they were glad they were robins, and not ostriches or any other kind of bird, and they were willing to enjoy their corner of the world and let God manage the rest.

One day some owls flew into the yard, and began to keep house in one of the trees. At first the robins lived as before, but the strangers looked so terribly wise and so prodigiously solemn that by and by their chirps died away, and they all sat in awe upon their boughs, afraid to move for fear of displeasing their wise neighbors. "What good robins you have become," said an owl one day. "Only keep on, and you will be like we are. You must practice sleeping all day and keeping awake all night; feed upon mice, and, in short, be different in all points from what you are." Now, one day one of the robins gave a curious gasp. "What's up?" asked his neighbor. "I was trying to chirp," said the other, "but I have forgotten how!" "As for me," said the second, "I was trying to pretend that that hind leg of the mouse tasted good. Oh, for a worm, a smooth, fat, wriggling worm!" "Robins," cried a fourth, "come into court! I have something to propose." The owls looked very wise, but they were only asleep, so all the robins crowded their heads together.

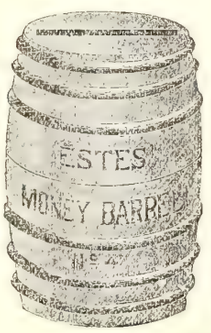
"We are robins," said the fourth; "why should we try to be owls?" It was such a clear proposition that they saw it in a flash. And presently every robin had flown away. That night the owls found themselves the only occupants of the yard.

What do I mean by this story? Why, the yard represents a Children's Department in a paper. And the robins are the children; and the owls—but I shall not say who the owls are. Anyway, if the owls come flocking into our columns, away the robins will go! So all write to me, and don't forget that I live in Plattsburg, Mo.

Prevent Pneumonia

Prevention is always better than cure, even when cure is possible. But so many times pneumonia is not cured that prevention becomes the natural act of that instinct of self-preservation which is "the first law of nature." Pneumonia can be prevented and is often cured by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

"Some years ago I had a severe cold and was threatened with pneumonia. I could neither eat nor sleep, and was in a wretched condition. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and took it according to the directions, and at the end of fifteen days was as well and sound as before the attack. I have recommended it in many cases of pneumonia since, and have never known it to fail in effecting a cure."
JOHN HENRY, St. Joseph, La.



"I was attacked with a cold that settled on my lungs, and defied the skill of my physicians so that they considered me incurable. At last I began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral and was entirely cured after having taken two bottles."
FRANCISCO A. SEVERIANO,
Taunton, Mass.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

is put up in half-size bottles at half price—50 cents.

THE LAW OF PSYCHIC PHENOMENA: A working Hypothesis for the Systematic Study of Hypnotism, Spiritism and Mental Therapeutics. By Thomas J. Hudson, LL. D., Chicago. A. C. McClurg & Co., 1898.

The results of the investigation of the London Society for Psychical Research, whose branches extend throughout the civilized world, as they have been published from time to time, have awakened a new interest in a class of phenomena belonging to the borderland of mystery. Those who are acquainted with the results of these researches know that these strange and wonderful phenomena are as well attested as any facts can be. There has been a variety of theories as to the causes of these phenomena. This book, to which our attention was recently called by one of our readers, is an attempt, and we will add, a remarkable attempt, to formulate the law under which these phenomena occur. It is, so far as we know, the most satisfactory effort that has yet been made to account for the strange things connected with spiritism, hypnotism and the undisputed cures which have been effected under a variety of names, such as "mind cures," "faith healing," "magnetic healing, "Christian Science," etc.

Accepting as true what has been actually proven to have transpired, the author undertakes to find the underlying law of these psychological phenomena. The fundamental hypothesis of Mr. Hudson is that the mind of a man is dual; that is, that he possesses what he terms a subjective mind and an objective mind. Another proposition is that the subjective mind is constantly amenable to control by suggestion; and the third is that the subjective mind is incapable of inductive reasoning. He thus defines the difference between these two minds:

"The objective mind takes cognizance of the objective world. Its media of observation are five physical senses. It is the outgrowth of man's physical necessities. It is his guide in his struggle with his material environment. Its highest function is that of reasoning.

"The subjective mind takes cognizance of its environment by means independent of the physical senses. It perceives by intuition. It is the seat of the emotions and the storehouse of memory. It performs its highest functions when the objective senses are in abeyance. In a word, it is that intelligence which makes itself manifest in a hypnotic subject when he is in a state of somnambulism."

The subject of hypnotism is quite thoroughly treated, as is also that of telepathy. Most of the phenomena in Spiritism, according to the author's view, occur under the law of telepathy, or the power of thought-transference without any objective method of communication. The theory of Spiritists, that this class of phenomena are the result of communication with the spirits of the departed, is utterly rejected, and the author explains how the phenomena produced can be all accounted for without resorting to that hypothesis. The warning against the physical and moral effects of Spiritism is most sane and timely.

The question of psycho-therapeutics is treated quite at length, the author believing that there is a great deal in it of real hygenic value, and that if the matter is taken out of the hands of charlatans and given scientific investigation, it will yield results most beneficial to the human race.

In the closing chapters of the book, the author applies the principles of his theory to the physical manifestations and philosophy of Christ. He claims that all of Christ's miracles took place according to the latest and most scientific principles of psycho-therapeutics. He believes that he has furnished a scientific basis for belief in the New Testiment record of all of Christ's works. While there is much that is suggestive in these last chapters, they are the least satisfactory part of the work, in our judgment, the author betraying the fact that he is a scientist rather than a Bible student. He is a firm believer, however, in Christ, and in the religion which he taught.

We have no doubt that this work will make it far easier for many to believe in the future existence of the soul and in our personal identity in the life to come, and in this way it will prove a great comfort to many minds. On the whole, it is not too much to say that it is a remarkable book and one that marks a distinct advance in the direction of a satisfactory solution of the promblem connected with these strange forces and phenomena about which so little has hitherto been known.

JUNIOR TOPICS OUTLINED. By Mrs. Ella N. Wood. Published by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston and Chicago. Cloth. 5 x 7 1-2. Illustrated. 125 pages. Price, 50 cents.

In this new book for Junior workers every topic for 1899 is treated in a simple, practical way, and many suggestions for blackboard illustrations are given in pictures. No Junior superintendent will need resign or dread the meetings who has such a practical helper.

MAGAZINES.

The Anglo-Saxon is the title of a new monthly magazine that has just made its appearance in the literary world. This magazine is edited by Geo. E. Inglis, and published by the Anglo-Saxon Publishing Co., 6627 Washington Ave., Chicago, Ill., and is devoted to the identity of the Anglo-Saxon race with the House of Israel. Those interested in prophetic problems will find this a suggestive magazine of literature on that line of study.

The Century begins its new year with a brilliant cover in color by the well-known Parisian poster-artist, Grasset, who made the Napoleon poster for the Century. This time he pictures Alexander the Great on the famous Bucephalus. This is in connection with the magazine's new historical serial on Alexander, written by Prof. Benjamin Ide Wheeler, which will be one of the leading features for the coming year. The lessons from the career of the Macedonian conqueror are of particular interest in these days of empire-making projects. Aside from the archeological material that is pictured, the life is strikingly illustrated by Castaigne and Loeb. Captain Charles D. Sigsbee begins his "Personal Narrative of the Maine." This is the contribution of the commander of the battleship to the Century's New War Series, which will include articles by most of the leading officers in the land and naval operations in the recent war. Captain Sigsbee, in this paper, gives for the first time, and in a full and authoritative manner, the story of the ordering of the Maine to Havana, her arrival in the harbor, her reception by the Spanish officials, and the precautions that were taken to guard her safety. The article is fully illustrated from photographs that have not appeared elsewhere. The other articles are in keeping with the season, the times and the high standard of this mazazine.

With its November number St. Nicholas begins a new volume and celebrates its twenty-fifth birthday. In honor of this anniversary the magazine dons a special cover, bearing a birthday cake decorated with twenty-five candles. Notwithstanding its quarter of a century of existence, St. Nicolas is just as young as ever in spirit. A new Henty serial is begun, a tale of American history, that will be one of the features of the coming year. It is called "The Sole Survivors," and it deals with the struggles of an early Virginia colony with the Indians. E. H. House is to contribute a series of papers on "Bright Sides of History," dealing with amusing episodes in ancient and modern history. These are given in the course of a story, which tells of the sayings and doings of a party of clever boys and girls. Time would fail us to mention all the good things in this number which cannot but afford interest and pleasure to its readers these November days and nights.

The Preacher's Magazine for November is a Thanksgiving number. The leading sermon is entitled, "Sowing vs. Reaping," by the Ven. Archdeacon Colley. The Rev. James Weller contributes a sermon entitled, "Joy in Harvest," and Bishop Alexander King, D. D., a sermon entitled, "Growing till the Harvest." A most excellent article on "Pulpit Prayer" is contributed by Rev. Robert Wilson, Ph. D. The Homiletical Department contains a large number of outline sermons by various ministers, mostly relating to Thanksgiving Day. They are suggestive and helpful. The Children's Sermon is by the Rev. Martin Lewis. There are also various other articles relating to the day. The editor, William E. Ketcham, D. D., writes the Notes of the International Sunday-school Lessons, and the Outlines on the Golden Texts. The Rev. J. A. Clapperton continues his articles on "Pitfalls in Bible English," which have commanded so much attention. Wilbur B. Ketcham, Publisher, 7 and 9 West Eighteenth Street, New York.

The November Record of Christian Work, East Northfield, Mass., contains a number of unusually interesting and suggestive articles for the Bible student and Christian worker. Mr. Robert E. Speer, the well-known Bible teacher and secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, contributes an article on "Practical Suggestions for Home Bible Study." Dr. J. R. Miller writes on "The Beatitude of Purity" in his series of articles, and Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, Jr., contributes a specially interesting article on "The Transfiguration." The regular departments of the magazine are unusually strong, being edited by such men as Rev. C. I. Scofield, Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. L. Moody and D. W. Whittle.

Attention is drawn in The North American Review for November to the subject of "National Public Health Legislation," by U. O. B. Wingate, M. D., Secretary of the Wisconsin State Board of Health. Dr. Wingate is an earnest advocate of the so-called "Spooner Bill" which was presented to the Senate of the Fifty-fifth Congress, and which provides for the establishment of a commission composed of men actively engaged in sanitary work, whose sole object will be the bringing of all localities in the country into the best possible sanitary condition—an object whose attainment cannot be too highly estimated.

Every one should read Dr. Henry V. Noyes' article in the Missionary Review of the World for November, on "The Present Situation in China.'' It is a masterly survey of the conditions and outlook from both a political and missionary standpoint. Another interesting article is contributed by Dr. John M. Allis, of Chile, and deals with the moral and religious condition of that South American Republic. This article is well illustrated from photographs, as is that on ''The Philippines and the Philippinos,'' by F. de Castells, the agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society in those islands. Mr. Castells, himself a Spaniard, gives a full and vivid description of the inhabitants of the Philippines and shows clearly the influence of Spaniards and friars upon the inhabitants. Funk & Wagnalls Co., Publishers, New York City.

The New Crusade, Ann Arbor, Mich., for November, appears with a new and striking cover design, illustrative of its work for humanity. In the foreground is shown the mother with her children, symbolic of the work in the home; while back of her, facing a knight of the olden time, stands the knight of the New Crusade, holding in one hand a banner upon which is pictured the white cross, and with the other hand sustaining a white shield. The idea of education and enlightenment is carried out in the presence of books and torches, while from a star back of the title streams the light which is to overcome the darkness of evil.

NOTES.

The Century Co., New York City, is getting out a new and superb illustrated edition of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress.

The International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations is publishing a series of tracts designed to be helpful in Bible studies and in personal piety. Their titles are: ''Lessons in Prayer,'' ''The Secret Prayer Life,'' ''Bible Study for Personal Spiritual Growth,'' ''The Morning Watch'' and ''The Public Use of the Bible.'' We are glad to see such literature as these tracts contain going out into the hands and hearts of the young men of our country. The headquarters of this committee is at 3 W. 29th Street, New York City, N. Y.

TOPIC FOR NOV. 20.

PRAISE THE LORD.

(Psa. 147:1-20.)

Thanksgiving Day occurs this week, and every Endeavorer should, upon this day, praise the Lord. If possible, he should take a part in those services which are recommended by our President every year, and are held in almost every part of our country. If, however, he should sieze this one holiday—which is usually beautiful, crisp, cool and invigorating under its autumn skies and leaves—to go into the country with bicycle, gun, kodak or good, strong walkingstick, he need not, for that matter, be failing to praise the Lord. The heavens declare his glory; not a leaf falleth without his knowledge; and whatsoever man does, let him do it as unto God.

Our country has much to be thankful for this year. If God has not been with us, then, indeed, are his ways past all finding out. He has prospered our arms in most marvelous manner; and although it were barbarous to thank God for Spaniards slain, it is not barbarous to praise him for injustice ended, despotism crushed, starvation and oppression relieved and civilization advanced. These things have been the fruit of this war, and has he not made the wrath of man to praise him? Truly, God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform. He has led our people out into a larger, more responsible place; perhaps he is answering our own prayer in a way we little thought, ''Lord, thrust forth laborers into the harvest.'' Only let us be careful that we go forth weeping and not exulting, praising him and not praising ourselves, anxious for progress, civilization, enlightenment, and not for gain, colonies, pelf and plunder.

" For heathen heart that puts its trust
In reeking tube and iron shard,
All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And guarding calls not thee to guard,
For foolish boast, and frantic word,
Thy mercy on thy people, Lord!"

Forbid that we should glory, on this Thanksgiving Day, in aught save the cross of Christ! Let our nation humble itself beneath the Lord's hand, be led slowly out to new work, nor rush blindly boasting into untried fields

We have cause for thanksgiving this year, in the fact that all parts of our country are one to-day as they have never been before. There is no North, no South, no East, no West. The sons of those who wore the blue have with the sons of those who wore the gray, clasped hands above a buried difference, and we are all one.

We should praise God, too, for the fact that the difference between home and foreign missions, which we have so long tried in vain to ignore, has at last been broken down, and to-morrow we shall have home missionaries in the West Indies, the South Pacific and the other side of the world.

Once again, we cannot but feel glad and full of promise that so large a part of the body of soldiers and sailors of our country proved themselves true to the Lord of Lords, to the one who is their Master. The chaplains who followed their regiments self-sacrificingly to the field, the Y. M. C. A. forces that so carefully sought the welfare of the troops, the Endeavorers who, on land and sea, remained true to Christ and the church, the captains of the warships who dared to call upon the name of God in the face of hundreds of men in the time of marvelous victory—all these are worthy of undying praise, and they fill our hearts with thankfulness. Even to-day are there seven thousand in Israel, all knees that have not bowed to Baal, all lips that have not kissed him.

BETHANY C. E. READING COURSES.

[There are three courses: The Bible, Missions and the Disciples. The three handbooks for the first year are: "A Guide to Bible Study," "Handbook of Missions" and "Concerning the Disciples." Bulletin, quarterly, sent to any address for one dollar. All orders should be addressed to the Bethany C. E. Company, 798 Republic St., Cleveland, O. Each course has a director: H. L. Willett is director of Bible study; W. J. Lhamon is the director of studies in Missions; F. D Power is director of studies Concerning the Disciples. This column is set apart to the use of these directors.]

Study of our Pioneers.

F. D. Power, Director.

''The proper study of mankind is man,'' says Pope. We might amend by saying that divinity and humanity are the great studies. Yet man is himself a revelation of God. The man Christ Jesus came forth from the bosom of the Father and was the brightness of God's glory, the express image of his person. He was God manifest in the flesh, and every man is God's image manifested in the flesh.

Man is the sum-total of all the animals. ''The true Shekinah is man,'' says Chrysostom. ''We touch heaven when we lay hands on a human body,'' says Carlyle. ''There is but one temple in the world, and that temple is the body of man,'' says Novalis. ''In nature God is hid, in man God is revealed,'' says Lyddon. Man is the handiwork of God, the masterpiece of the Creator.

Every human being is a volume worthy to be studied, but, like books, some have greater interest and importance than others. Some are in folio, some in quarto, some in octavo, and some even smaller; some are gorgeously bound, others in plain covers; some treat of great subjects; some are romances, some pamphlets, some squibs; every one begins with the title-page and closes with the ''Finis.''

The great themes are most profitable. Lives of benefactors, lives that have been public blessings or foundations of great movements for the good of human kind; lives that are worthy of our imitation and eternal remembrance, deserve our first thought. A Moses, a Peter or a Paul; a Washington, a Franklin or a Gladstone; a Luther, Livingston, Wesley or Campbell: these stand out as teachers, examples, representatives of great epochs, and no intelligent person can afford to be ignorant of their history. ''The memory of the just is blessed.'' ''They that be teachers shall shine as the firmament and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever.'' ''Honor to whom honor is due.'' ''One star differeth from another star in glory.''

Our readers are dealing with the pioneer workers in the great religious movement with which we are associated. These men laid our foundations; they belong to our heroic period; they deserve to be remembered. The contemplation of their labors and sacrifices, their virtues and achivements, must stimulate us to nobler endeavor. The little volume entitled ''Sketches of our Pioneers,'' which is our textbook for the second year, is not sufficient in itself and we shall be disappointed if the brief information it contains does not lead to more extended investigations into our early history and to wider information concerning the prominent figures that went before our hosts and blazed the way for our feet. All our people need this study—the old to refresh their memories and to kindle anew their zeal for the great principles we advocate, and the young to familiarize themselves with the movement with which they stand identified.

We are a peculiar people. It does make a difference where a man stands religiously and for what he stands. Before God we are responsible for the measure of our knowledge of his will and the measure of our loyalty to his Word. Learn where you stand. Give attention to reading. Acquaint yourself with the Aquilas and Priscillas that have taught men the way of the Lord more perfectly. ''Be ye ready always to give an answer to any man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and reverence.''

A Circuit of the Globe

BY A. M'LEAN.

The pictures of all the foreign missionaries of the Christian Church, their homes and places of worship are among the illustrations. The author gives an account of what he saw, whom he saw, the many countries visited, the habits, customs, and peculiarities of the nations through which he passed. The book is written in a most fascinating manner, enabling the reader to feel as though he had made the trip with the writer. The author set out from Cincinnati, Ohio, crossing the American continent to San Francisco, then across the Pacific Ocean to Japan, stopping at Honolulu, then to China, India, Australia, Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, European countries to London, across the Atlantic to America and then home. The book gives the social, political and religious phases of the many nations visited by the author.

REPENTANCE UNDER PRESSURE.*

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

The closing years of Hezekiah's reign were not so glorious as his earlier career had promised. He was rich; but his wealth gave him an undue sense of pride. He had been measurably obedient to the divine will as voiced in the counsels of Isaiah, and this gave him an exaggerated idea of his own worth. The pride which comes from birth, or wealth, or education, and which removes one from sympathy with the life and struggle of other men, is foolish and offensive, and only one degree less obnoxious than the pride which grows out of a sense of righteousness, and is apt to cloak the worst Pharisaism. Both proceed from a nature tainted with selfishness. When sickness came to the king, and he learned that his end was near, he broke out into piteous laments at his fate, wondering how God could permit so good a man to die, and declaring that it would be better to let him live in order that he might continue to praise Jehovah! On his recovery he gave further expression to his pride by exhibiting to the envoys of Merodach Baladin, the pretender at Babylon, all the riches of his court, which called down on his head the indignant rebuke of Isaiah, who foresaw that alliance with the Babylonian rebel meant a new insult to the king of Assyria, from whose hand Hezekiah had escaped but yesterday. But these were blemishes upon an excellent life, and such blemishes as pride and selfishness will produce in any character.

Hezekiah was succeeded by his son, Manasseh. The name, originally belonging to one of the tribes of the Northern Kingdom, had become common since the downfall of Samaria and the extension of Hezekiah's kingkom in that direction. He was only twelve when he came to the throne, and the hour was one of peril. The heathen party, long in restraint during the ministry of Isaiah, "the keeper of the king's conscience," now sought the power they had lost. The swing of the pendulum was perpetual in Judah. At one time the prophetic party, including the priests, would control the court, and in such a period, the worship of Jehovah was in the ascendant. At another time the heathen party controlled, and when idolatry and every form of danger that intercourse with neighboring nations could bring, gained the day. Sometimes the change was wrought without reference to the king, who was a mere figurehead, plastic to the control of his advisers. At other times the king, while yet a youth, was secured by the party out of power, through instructors or associates, and then his majority saw the revolution. Such seems to have been the case with Manasseh. Confident of the future because he was secure in the present, Hezekiah left the training of his son, born later in his reign, to men who, outwardly conforming to the religion of the time, were quietly undermining his character and turning his mind away from the God of his fathers. No greater responsibility rests upon parents than the oversight of the education of their children. It is a mistake, wellnigh a crime, to permit the most sacred duty of life to be intrusted wholly to others in the confident belief that everything is all right, and the teachers provided by public school, college and university are always the proper instructors of the future race. Especially is this true in religious matters. A flippant and irreverent teacher may wreck the moral and spiritual life of a child reared in the most careful circle of Christian influence. Ceaseless vigilance is the price of liberty from such malign results.

When Manasseh came to the throne the time was ripe for change. The heathen party that had been in retirement for years had profited by the carelessness of their rivals, and now came into power. The king threw himself into the religious reaction with vigor. He rebuilt the high places which his father had demolished. He brought in again the worship of Baal and Asherah. He reverted to the darkest sins of Ahaz, his grandfather, reviving the worship of the sun and planets, the incantations and necromancies, which have in every age fostered the delusion of Spiritism, and caused the blood of children, even those of his own family, to flow in sacrifice to his grotesque idols. Even in the very temple of God an image of the obscure Astarte was erected. All these were sins of darkest die, as viewed by the prophets, and their protests must have been frequent and loud. One wonders what the course of Isaiah was during this time, or whether he was yet alive. No record of his work runs beyond the great deliverance from Sennacherib in 701. Perhaps, as tradition has it, the aged prophet was brought to martyrdom in this reign, as a victim of that bloody persecution of the Jehovah worshipers, in which "much innocent blood" was shed (2 Kings 21:16). It has been thought that reference is made to the form of Isaiah's death in Heb. 11:37: "They were sawn asunder." But the protests of the prophets were received only as the indignant outcries of men who were losing power and position by the change. To the king it was not alone a question of religion, but of the whole state policy, and he chose to go with the heathen party. We may feel that such kings had no excuse for their conduct. But education has much to do in shaping one's ideas. And the light was not so bright by far as in our day. We may not and we should not find apology for their sins. But how small they were, considering the influences they met, as compared with ours, who live in the blaze of Christian intelligence and have no smallest excuse for our forgetfulness of God. We are tempted to hide our errors behind those of men who walked in the darkness, not in the light we enjoy.

But sin, whether ignorant, half-enlightened or intelligent, brings its sure results in disaster. Warnings had been unheeded. Trouble came. The prophets had spoken for God, but in vain. God must himself speak in judgments, a discipline like that of Samaria, a fate like that of the house of Ahab, alone remained. The king of Assyria, always the waiting scourge of Judah, came as the result of political complications of which we do not now have information. Esarhaddon (681-668) and Ashurbainpal (668-625) were the contemporaries of the long reign of Manasseh (686-641), but which of these kings invaded Judah we do not know. We have only the knowledge which the text furnishes, that the Asyrian forces overran the country and carried the king in chains to Babylon, which was at this time the capital of the empire. The fate of a captive king was by no means enviable. If his life was spared he was reduced to a wretched station, and kept as an exhibition of his master's power. Such a life was full of bitterness, not only the actual hardships of his situation, but the sad reflection upon the contrast between his present misery and his father's glory, and must have made Manasseh conscious that idolatry and hethenism did not pay. They had been his worst enemies. His heathen friends had been helpless in his hour of need. Such reflections brought the king to repentance. A slow and late repentance it was—a repentance under pressure. Many a man exhibits that sort, however. It is not so much a sorrow for sin; it is rather a desire to escape the consequences of sin. Never till sin is seen to be more awful than any of its results; never till one dreads moral bleakness more than he fears the trouble it will bring, can a true vision of life be obtained. Let us ask ourselves why we do not commit this or that sin? Is it because we abhor the evil, or because we dread the scourge or the scandal? If the latter is the motive, let us beware. Our house is built on sand.

But Manasseh's repentance was sufficient to bring good results. The earlier books say nothing of it. In the parallel narative in Kings it is not mentioned. Probably this is due to the fact that the king was powerless to undo the evil he had wrought. The remainder of his reign was too short to permit any genuine reformation in the kingdom. The closing verses of the lesson record his public works and his efforts to restore the worship of God. But the current of heathenism which had set in so strongly through the earlier years of his long reign of more than half a century could not be checked in the few years that remained to him, and his son, Amon, was even more active as a supporter of heathenism than he himself had been. Manasseh's repentance, like that of many other men, came too late. He could not live to undo the disaster he had worked. In spite of this brief record of his afflictions and repentance, and the prayer attributed to him, recorded in the collection of Greek additions to the Old Testament (see the Prayer of Manasseh it the Apocrypha), his name will always be associated with one of the most cruel persecutions of the faithful that ever occurred in Judah, and stands at the head of the list of idolatrous kings of the Southern Kingdom.

SUGGESTIONS EOR TEACHING.

Some men are pre-eminent only in evil. Warnings unheeded turn to bitter chastisements. Suffering is always useful if it leads to reformation. Nothing can be more sad than the remembrance of a holy father to a degraded son. Any repentance is better than none, but no repentance can ever bring back wasted years. Restoration to liberty and former position is not restoration of sinlessness. The prodigal is always received with a welcome when he returns; but more blessed is the son who never strayed. It is beautiful to see one who has wasted time seeking to redeem somewhat the dark past. But evil, like good, is cumulative; what we have once done we cannot recall; we may change our life, but its deeds go on forever.

BRENNEMAN.

Abraham H. Brenneman was born in Ralls County, Mo., December 18, 1848, and was killed at Virden, Ill., October 12, 1898. November 15, 1874, he was married to Rebecca M. Campbell, near Hannibal, Mo. To them were born nine children, six of whom, together with his faithful wife, mourn his untimely death. At the age of 18 years he obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Dr. Winthrop H. Hopson. He was a coal miner, and although filling an humble sphere he was a faithful man of God. Impelled by duty he obeyed the orders of the Miners' Union and went to Virden, and although unarmed and defenseless he was one of the first victims to fall during the unhappy riot of October 12. Funeral services were conducted by the writer on Friday, October 14, at 11 A. M., at the Christian Church, and he was laid to rest in the Girard cemetery to await the resurrection of the just. GEO. L. PETERS.

INGRAM.

Chas. G. Ingram was born in Mississippi 23 years ago. He died here October 21, 1898. It was his supreme heart's desire to preach Christ in his native state. Death in singling him out robbed earth of a hero and Mississippi of a budding evangel of light. In the galaxy of redeemed departed he shines as a bright star. His expressed regret, "I hate to die when the world needs the gospel so bad," reveals his Christly character. He is dead, yet lives. May a double portion of his unselfish, consecrated spirit rest upon us all.

IRVINE.

Brother J. J. Irvine died in the hospital at Norfolk, Va., at 2 A. M., Monday, Oct. 24th, 1898, after an illness of five days, from heart-failure, ensuing an operation for appendicitis, surrounded by his little family, attending surgeons and nurses and a large delegation from the church. Bro. Irvine was 38 years old and a native of Scotland, having come to the United States when 20 years of age, where he graduated from Kentucky University after a six years' course. He served the churches at Selma, Ala., and Jacksonville, Fla., and did a successful work as evangelist before locating with the church here, where he was asked to settle "for a long pastorate;" this I interpreted to mean for life. And, although he had preached but for three Lord's days, he had won the hearty co-operation and loyal esteem of the congregation and many of the people of the city, all of whom manifest the deepest sorrow at his death, and the untimely ending of the fine work he had so earnestly and wisely begun. His death was most triumphant and beautiful, and its lessons are deeply impressed upon all who witnessed his falling asleep. Truly was it "a sleep in Jesus—blessed sleep." The stricken church and many people attended his body to the wharf; and Dr. R. H. Walker, one of our deacons, was delegated to attend his remains and his family to Lexington, Ky., where the funeral was held on Wednesday, the 26th inst., and his body was laid to rest there. A memorial service in the church here was held last Lord's day evening. On every hand I hear Bro. Irvine's death spoken of as a triumph of faith. At his request I prepare this brief notice and convey to all his brethren his benediction and assurance that "all is well. His will be done."

NALL.

Died of heart failure, Sept. 9, 1898, Mrs. Frances C. Nall, at the home of her daughter, in Adams County, Wash. The funeral services were conducted by Geo. H. Newman Sept. 10. Frances Cordelia Bohannan was born in Stoddard County, Mo., Nov. 27, 1832. She was married to Dr. J. Parks Nall, of Ironton, Mo., Dec. 29, 1852. Into this family were born eight children; five daughters are still living. Soon after her marriage mother heard the Christian faith preached, for the first time in her life, by Bro. Wilson, and soon after obeyed the gospel. She was faithful till death. Soon after the war she lost her husband, but with true motherly instinct and untiring industry she went bravely to work to provide for the wants of her family of little girls, and so raised them that they call her "Blessed" and deeply mourn her loss. But our loss is her gain. "He giveth his beloved sleep." J. M. TURNER.

NEVINS.

Austin Sims Nevins was born in Tennessee, January 29th, 1816, and died in Girard, Macoupin County, Ill., October 15, 1898, in the 83rd year of his age. The greater part of his life was passed in this county, in the vicinity of Chapman's Point. He was the father of 13 children, 10 of whom, together with his faithful wife, survive. He became a Christian at an early age, and was faithful to his profession during a long life. He was a devoted husband and father, a true friend and kind neighbor. The funeral services were conducted at Oak Grove Church Sunday, October 16, by Rev. Galen Goode, assisted by Revs. Geo. L. Peters and W. H. Kindred. The body sleeps in the old churchyard awaiting the resurrection morn. GEO. L. PETERS.

WETHERHOLD.

Lucy J. Reynolds was born in Macomb, Ill., July 30, 1861. Obeyed the gospel in her 14th year. Was b ptized by Bro. J. H. Smart. Was married to F. J. Wetherhold, June 8, 1891. Died in Macomb, Ill., Oct. 7, 1898. She was perfectly conscious to the last moment. Her last words, spoken just before her last breath, were, "In my Father's house are many mansions." Her sorrowing father would not take millions for these words now. Precious among the last words of the Savior! Precious as the last words of such a noble daughter. I, her father, could never be satisfied to close this obituary notice at this point. I must be permitted to tell some things that distinguished her among women. Her mother died 16 years ago. She, too, suffered for a long time. Lucy stayed with her, nursed her tenderly and lovingly to the end, thus exhibiting in deed as well as word, the highest possible degree of a daughter's love for her mother. She was her mother's comfort in all her afflictions. Then, when her mother was gone, with equal faithfulness she stayed with me, taking and filling a mother's place to the younger children until they were grown up. In all my labors she was my wise counselor, in my sickness my prudent, tender, loving nurse, in my griefs and sorrows my chiefest earthly comforter. To the last day of her life she manifested the same filial love to her father that she had so tenderly lavished upon her mother. She surely kept the law: "Honor thy father and thy mother," and obeyed the gospel injunction: "Children, obey your parents." She loved her sisters and her brothers, her nephews and nieces. She was a faithful wife, a model housekeeper, making a bright, pleasant, beautiful home for her husband and for her father. She was a woman of sound judgment, a wise woman in the best sense of the word. Her earth-life was spent in doing good, in toiling to make others comfortable and happy. Besides kindred she leaves many friends among the best of the people, both in Illinois and Missouri, who respected and loved her, whose hearts are saddened by her departure. A large concourse of people attended the funeral, many more than could get into the church. Bro. Bratton, pastor of the Presbyterian Church read appropriate Scripture lessons and offered a most excellent prayer. Bro. L. D. Goodwin, pastor of the Christian Church, preached an able and appropriate sermon from the text: "In my Father's house are many mansions," telling the audiedce that these were the last words spoken by Lucy Bro. J. S. Gash followed with tender, loving, comforting remarks. Then we bore her body away to the grave in beautiful Oakwood Cemetery and tenderly laid it to rest until the coming of the Lord. All that money could do, all that medical skill could do, was done to prolong her precious life. All that money could do to honor her in her burial was done by husband. I have one comfort: I fully believe that she occupies a beautiful mansion in the "Fathers house." I confidently believe that she will wear a crown of glory in the life eternal. Farewell, Lucy, my daughter! Oh, my daughter! my daugeter! my tears are flowing fast, my heart is broken; farewell! but not forever. I expect to meet you in the "Father's house," where there is no death. Blessed Savior, help me to live the few days left me so that I may meet my precious daughter in thy presence to dwell with thee forever and ever!

Luxurious New Pullman Sleeping Cars.

BETWEEN

ST. LOUIS,
LOUISVILLE,
CINCINNATI,
WASHINGTON,
BALTIMORE,
PHILADELPHIA,
and NEW YORK.

The Baltimore & Ohio Southwestern Railway always awake to the comfort of its patrons, have just added to their already handsome equipment, six luxurious new Sleeping Cars, to be operated in connection with its renowned "Royal Blue Trains" between the above-named cities. For elegance and comfort this new product of the Pullman Company surpasses all past records. The cars, while not on the elaborate order, are of the latest and most improved design, and plainly show the inventive genius of master workmen.

The cars are named "Claremont," "Deermont," "Beaumont," "Elkmont," and "Glenmont."

They are of the thirty-five ton class, with six-wheel truck, Pintsch gas system, and are painted the Pullman standard color on the outside.

They are full vestibuled, equipped with a series of air reservoirs worked by a governor from the air brake, which supplies all the toilet accessories.

The cars have twelve sections, a drawing room and smoking room, and the interior is California redwood, highly polished and beautifully inlaid. The seats are the quintessence of comfort and elegance, and are covered with plush in attractive colors with embossed centers, and carpets harmonizing in color.

The cars are now doing regular service in trains number 3 and 4.

CHRISTIAN LESSON COMMENTARY FOR 1899.

For thirteen years this valuable publication has made its annual appearance and has reached a large circulation. The volume before us fully up to the high standard of its predecessors. Its pages are replete with notes, comments, illustrations, applications and suggestions, gathered from various sources, the design being to throw the best light possible on the Scripture text and assist the teacher and pupil to fix it in their minds and hide it in their hearts. We commend this commentary to all Sunday-school workers.—The Plymouth Telescope, Dayton, O.

The Gospel Call music books ordered have been promply received. Every one says these books are just what we want. One sister, in examining the book, began at the back, for as she said, "The good songs are always in the back of the book." When she had got about through the book she said, "I believe it has good songs all the way through."

A CHRISTMAS CONCERT.

"The Wonderful Child," a new Christmas concert service, by W. W. Dowling. It is a pamphlet of 16 pages, embracing eight songs with music, numerous Scripture readings and between 15 and 20 poetical recitations, making an entertaining and instructive concert. It can be successfully rendered by the average Sunday-school. Those schools that expect to give an entertainment at Christmas should soon begin their preparation. Price of this concert is five cents per copy, or 50 cents per dozen, postpaid.

MARY ARDMORE, OR A TEST OF FAITH, by J. H. Stark, is just from our press. The story is based on the importance of having clearly defined religious convictions and then holding steadfastly to them until convinced of their error. The New Testament teaching of conversion and kindred subjects is brought out prominently and lucidly in this book. It is a book of 238 pages, very handsome in appearance, and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

QUEEN ESTHER.

I have just finished reading "Queen Esther," by M. M. Davis. My acquaintance with the author led me to expect something good in advance, but it was still a pleasant surprise. I know Bro. Davis as a preacher of sterling ability and a pastor of national repute, but had not until now known him as an author of splendid dramatic power. There are two especially strong features of this production, of which I wish to speak. The first is the dramatic power which clothes the main incident of the story so as to make it an epoch in the world's history, and brings its cheif actors so vividly before us that they seem to be living yet. The other is the application of the lessons to our own lives with such force that the question pierces the heart like a sword, but with such sympathy that one can feel the healing of the wound behind the passing of the blade. Buy it and read it, for it will stir your heart.

PERSONAL MENTION.

At his own request, after two years' ministry at Benton, Ill., F. A. Sword was released by the church that he might accept a call from the church at Monticello, Ia., to which place he has gone with the love, esteem and commendation of the church at Benton.

Secretary B. S. Denny is in Corydon, Ia., with a view to permanently establishing a congregation.

Geo. A, Campbell, of Chicago, Ill., preached in Hampton, Ia., on Nov. 6th.

Jas. Small was at Fort Dodge, Ia., last Sunday. He begins his meeting in Keokuk, Nov. 12th.

B. W. Petitt preached at Oskaloosa, Ia., first Sunday in November.

F. M. Jordan, of Deer Lodge, Mont., was an Iowa visitor last week.

D. A. Wickizer, was called to Oskaloosa on Nov. 1st to conduct the funeral services of Sister Dixon, the mother of Mrs. Ben McCoy.

I. N. McCash conducted the funeral of one of his church officers last Thursday—Wm. Deitchman, formerly of Oskaloosa.

H. W. Everest, Dean of Drake University Bible Department, is slowly recovering from his slight paralytic stroke.

F. M. Bruner is still confined to his bed, but hopes to sit up soon. His great heart and masterly brain are not idle. He is constantly writing in spite of his years of confinement to his room and his bed. His home is University Place, Des Moines.

N. A. McConnell, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., is preaching almost every Sunday. On Oct. 30th at the Central City dedication, he delivered a sermon on the Lord's Supper which will long be remembered by those who heard it.

A. M. Growden is engaged in a meeting at Russellville, Ky. He is open at present to engagements for a few meetings, or can be secured as pastor.

J. W. Lowber recently delivered a series of chapel talks on the first chapter of Genesis at the University of Texas, which attracted a good deal of attention.

J. H. Wright entered upon his second year's service with the Osceolo, Ia., church last Sunday, and reports two accessions by primary obedience and three by commendation recently. Bro. Wright will be recalled by many of our readers as a regular contributor to this journal for a number of years, often writing under the caption, "From an Easy Chair." He is favored regularly with one of the largest audiences in Iowa. The Osceola church has one of the most perfect and commodious auditoriums in the state, in which 900 can be comfortably seated.

Chas. A. Young, now engaged in lectures and Bible institute work in Virginia, writes that he has been unwell since at Chattanooga, but has not discontinued or omitted any of his work. He lectures at the State University at Charlottesville through the week and holds Bible institutes on Lord's days from city to city for the C. W. B. M. Concerning the field and the work of the University Bible Lectureship he says: "The churches are not strong in Virginia and I seldom secure more than fifty or a hundred dollars, but as Col. Cary's family have given us ten thousand dollars for the University of Virginia Bible Lectureship, I want to do everything I can to increase the amount to twenty-five thousand. Last Sunday I visited Gilboa, one of the oldest churches in Virginia, the home of W. K. Pendleton, and secured nearly one hundred dollars in cash and pledges for the work."

Robert T. Mathews has resigned the pastorate of the Broadway Church, Louisville, Ky., on account of the heavy financial obligations of the congregation in paying the debt on the new house of worship and will be open to a call elsewhere. Under his ministry of a year there have been about 30 additions and he succeeded in lifting a heavy current debt, and the contributions to missions and charities have exceeded $500. Under his counsel the church will endeavor to call a younger man on a smaller salary, who will find a church thoroughly united and noted for its appreciation of a devoted and efficient minister.

A. C. Hopkins, Canton, Mo., writes that he and his son and daughter are still engaged in the Chautauqua illustrated work, and that it benefits the church wherever held. This trio can also be secured to assist pastors and evangelists in protracted meetings.

C. B. Carlisle, late of Iowa, was appointed and commissioned as chaplain in the army, and was sent to Cuba. We have a letter from him bearing date of Oct. 18th, from Songo, near Santiago, Cuba, saying: "I am here, hard at work, preaching, visiting the sick, giving out Red Cross supplies, feeding starving Cubans and doing the numberless little things the men cannot do for themselves." "Just now," he adds, "we are ordered to Holguin on the north side of this part of the Island, where we are likely to put up our Christmas tree and hang thereon our stockings." He is making a study of the condition and needs of the people of the Island, and has promised to write his impressions in future letters. Indeed, he will act as our Cuban correspondent. "The Catholic Church," he says, "has lost its hold on the masses, and they are awaiting the gospel message of the Protestant Church. It will have to be simple and plain—just as it is in the Christian Church—Christ all in all." Bro. Carlisle has requested the President to detach him to act as city chaplain of Santiago, and if this request is granted he will take up the work in that city of preaching the primitive gospel and seek to lead that priest-ridden people into a purer faith and life.

Sunday School Periodicals.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL PUBLICATIONS issued by the CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY of St. Louis, are in use in a little over Two Thirds of the Sunday-schools connected with the Christian Church in America, as shown by the statistics in the last Annual Year Book, among which are most of the prosperous and progressive ones. There is no good reason why a large proportion of the other fractional One Third should not also be thus furnished, as we have abundant facilities for supplying all. The list of Publications is complete in every particular, and supply every want. It consists, in part, of the following:

Four Lesson Annuals

1. The Lesson Commentary for Teachers and Advanced Classes: $1.00 per copy, post-paid; $9.00 per doz. not post-paid.
2. The Lesson Helper for the Senior Classes and Teachers: 35 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $3.60 per doz., not prepaid.
3. The Lesson Mentor for Junior Classes; 25 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $2.40 per dozen, not prepaid.
4. The Lesson Primer for the Primary Classes: 20 cents per copy, postage prepaid; $2.00 per dozen, not prepaid.

Four Lesson Quarterlies

1. The Bible Student for Teachers and Advanced Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 70 cts.; 25, $1.60; 50, $3.20; 100, $6.00.
2. The Scholar's Quarterly for the Senior Classes: Ten copies, per quarter, in clubs to one address, 40 cents; 25, 90 cents; 50, $1.60; 100, $3.00.
3. The Youth's Quarterly for Junior Classes: Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents, ten copies or more to one address, 2 1-2 cents per copy, per quarter.
4. The Primary Quarterly for Primary Classes: Single copy, per quarter, 5 cents; five copies or more to one address, 2 cents per copy per quarter.

Three Weeklies

1. Our Young Folks, a large 16-page Illustrated Weekly, nearly four times as large as the ordinary Sunday-school paper, for Sunday-school Teachers, Advanced Pupils, Christian Endeavorers, and in fact for all Working Members of the Christian Church, with a well-sustained department also for the Home Circle, adapted to the wants of the whole family. Single copy, 75 cents per year; in clubs of 20 or more, 50 cents—12 1-2 cents per quarter.
2. The Sunday-School Evangelist for the Boys and Girls of the Intermediate Department, with bright Pictures, Lessons and Entertaining Stories. In clubs of not less than ten copies to one address, 32 cents per year—8 cents per quarter.
3. The Little Ones, for the Little Folks, with Beautiful Colored Pictures in every number. In clubs of not less than 5 copies, 25 cents a copy per year—6 1-4 cents per quarter.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

America or Rome? Christ or the Pope?

With the close of the war with Spain the world has learned much concerning the ignorance and superstition that have so long prevailed in Spain and her territorial possessions. Catholicism rules Spain and her colonies. Statistics reveal that 68 per cent. of the population of Spain can neither read nor write. This may account for the predominance of the Catholic Church and the power and rule of the Pope of Rome. Contrast Spain, an old and once powerful nation, ruled by Catholicism, with younger Protestant nations, in which there is but little illiteracy, and where gospel liberty makes them a free, prosperous, happy and intelligent people.

The evils of Romanism are clearly set forth by John L. Brandt in his work, "America or Rome—Christ or the Pope." Now is the time for agents to place this book in the hands of readers. We are now offering extra inducements to agents to handle this work. People will now want to read this kind of literature, and an active agent can do well by showing and selling this exposition of the despotism of Rome. Write us for our special inducements to agents on America or Rome—Christ or the Pope.

GOSPEL MELODIES

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

First Lines of Some of the Best Songs in this Excellent Book

Praise Him! Praise Him!
I love to steal awhile away.
Delay not, Delay not.
Softly and tenderly.
If God has riches given you.
Oh, I want to be still nearer.
Where the billows roll the highest.
There is a land beyond somewhere.
Oh, would to me were only given.
The Bible reveals a glorious land.
The voice of the Savior says come.
The path is set with many a thorn.
Oh, the love of God to me.
List to the song of the reapers.
Night with ebon pinion.
In the presence of our God we meet again.
Preaching Jesus on the way.
I ask not earthly treasure.
Oh, bless the Lord, Oh my soul.
There'll be room enough in heaven.
I am going to Jesus.
Broad is the road that leads to death.
There is a home, a beautiful home.
Attend young friends while I relate.
Peacefully lay her down to rest.
In thy name, Oh, Lord, assembling.
Toiling for Jesus day by day.
How sweet 'tis to know.
When our earthly life is ended.
Just beyond the shad'wy valley.
The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide
Far beyond the rolling Jordan.
Lead me gently home, Father.
How firm a foundation.
Go on, you pilgrims.
Oh, how lovely! (Anthem.)
List to the voice of the Savior.
In our Father's home above.
There is one thought that cheers my way.
Make channels for the streams of love.
I've found a friend in Jesus.
It is the hour of prayer.
When storm-clouds arise in the sky.
I wonder if any poor sinner will come.
Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus.
See the ranks of sin approaching.
A thousand lords had gathered in the palace of Belshazzar.
Glory and praise to the Lord who died for me.
See! on the cross, the Savior bleeds.
There's a city of light 'mid the stars, we are told.
Just over the river are palaces grand.
Christians, are you growing weary?
There is a rock in a weary land.
O pilgrims, look forward to glory.
When the day is full of gladness.
There is a precious fountain.
Beyond the golden sunset sky.
Do you know a soul that's fainting?
Yes, we have a friend in Jesus.
Come now and let us reason.
When the waves are rolling high.
There is a house not made with hands.
Gone from our home.
I am on my journey to Canaan's happy land.
In thy temple, Lord, we gather.
Christ is knocking at my sad heart.
Let me sing the old song o'er again.
I will tell you an old simple story.
I'll rejoice in the love of Jesus.
There's a beautiful land far beyond the sky.
There's a hand ever ready to lift up all the fallen.
All for Jesus, all for Jesus.
There's a city that is far, far away.
When the trump of God shall sound.
Where are the ones we love fondly?
Teach me thy way.
God of our salvation.
Oh, there is joy in believing.
Praise Him, praise the name of God most high. (Anthem.)
Great is the Lord. (Anthem.)
One sweetly solemn thought.
Make a joyful noise unto the Lord. (Anthem.)
Hear the call to labor for the Lord.
Savior while my heart is tender.
Of the old time I'm thinking.
Twilight is stealing.
At home or away, in the alley or street.
Mother, tell me of the angels.

GOSPEL MELODIES contains several good easy anthems that will please choirs and singing societies. It is the only church music book of its class that does.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The general outcome of last week's election, as regards national politics, is a strengthening of the Republican element in the Senate and of the Democratic element in the House of Representatives. Republican majorities were generally less than in 1896, but the decrease was less than their opponents had a right to expect on the basis of previous off-year elections. In at least seven states, Delaware, West Virginia, Wisconsin, New York, New Jersey, California and Indiana, the legislatures elected last week will elect Republican Senators to succeed their present Democratic Senators whose term expires March 4, 1899. It can not be doubted that there will be a clear majority of at least nine in the Senate to support the administration against all other elements combined. In the House, the expected Democratic gains made the continuance of Republican control a doubtful matter, but those gains were not enough to overcome the existing Republican majority in that body. During the latter half of his term, therefore, President McKinley will be backed by a Congress,both Houses of which are controlled by his own party, and which it may be fairly assumed is in substantial agreement with his policy. This is a noteworthy occurrence,in the first place, because of its rarity. Since the days of Andrew Jackson this is the first time that a congressional election in the middle of a Presidential term has given to the administration aCongress friendly in both its branches. But it is still more noteworthy because of the issues which are to be decided in the next two years. The Republican party has seen fit to conduct its campaign chiefly on the issues raised by the war. On these issues which are to be decided in the next two years. The Republican party has seen fit to conduct its campaign chiefly on the issues raised by the war. On these issues it has secured control of both Houses of Congress. In the presence of the problems which now confront us, it is no time for party politics in any petty sense; it is a time for statesmanship. But the burden of responsibility now rests upon the Republican party, and if that burden is not properly borne we shall know where to lay the blame.

The eyes of the nation were upon New York more than upon any other state in this election, perhaps, to see what would be the result of a fight between Roosevelt and Tammany. Roosevelt represented, in addition to general Republican principles, the popular hero of the late war, and, more important even than this, he represented sturdy, rugged and vigorous honesty in the administration of public affairs; Tammany represented—just what Tammany always represents. The result was a victory for Roosevelt,though not so overwhelming as it ought to have been. Greater New York gave Van Wyck a plurality of 84,000, but outside of the city, Tammany's candidate carried only five counties. Roosevelt's plurality was something less than 20,000 and Mr. Woodruff, candidate for lieutenant-governor, ran far behind that. If the interpretation of prominent Democrats is to be accepted, the mismanagement of the campaign by Croker and the boasts and threats by which he rendered himself generally disagreeable to his party, are alone responsible for the defeat of Van Wyck. If so, then Mr. Croker is for once deserving of our gratitude, though not of our admiration. So great is the dissatisfaction with the Crocker regime that there is talk of organizing another Democratic machine to take the place of Tammany, the chief mark of the new organization being the absence of Croker from its councils. It is an eloquent testimony to the strength of his grip upon Tammany that it is easier to let him have it, leave him alone with it and create a new organization without him, than to dislodge him from his position.

The Republican victory in the state campaign in Pennsylvania is as much of a disgrace as a Democratic victory would have been in New York. Croker and Tammany were defeated by a fair margin, but Quay and the disreputable machine which he controls carried the day in Pennsylvania. It was the old story of united rascality versus divided decency, organized corruption versus unorganized reformation. By the exercise of supreme political sagacity on the part of the astute Quay, the Republican machine was kept in active and harmonious operation and the vast majority of its habitual adherents were kept faithful to it, while the forces which naturally array themselves against such a machine were moved to divide their support between the regular Democratic ticket and that headed by Dr. Swallow, the Prohibition-Independent candidate for governor. There was a good showing of votes against the excellent work of Mr. Wanamaker in enlightening Pennsylvania voters as to the real characters and records of the men who control their state offices has, therefore, perhaps not been entirely wasted. But for the present there is no visible result. Quay still owns the state, has a special mortgage on the governor-elect, and has behind him a legislature which can be relied upon to return him to the Senate without raising any disturbance about it.

The state election in Illinois takes on some general interest from its bearing, even though indirect, upon the attitude of the voters of that state toward the recent extraordinary actions of their governor. The election in Illinois did not include the choice of a governor (the term of office in that state being four years), but there were a set of candidates who could fairly and clearly be called Tanner men, and Gov. Tanner himself took an active part in the campaign. Not only so, but he used as an important part of his campaign material a defense of his action in forbidding and preventing the importation of Southern laborers to take the places of the striking miners at Virden. We have already stated it as our opinion that, however much love of the laboring man and sympathy with the striker may have been in the heart of the governor as the motive to this action (and we hope it was that rather than a desire to manufacture campaign material for use among the working men), nevertheless the action was legally unjustifiable and might lead to very serious consequences. The general success of the Republican state ticket in Illinois under these circumstances may be taken as an indication that the people of Illinois either approve of the governor's act, which is the most significant thing he ever did, or at least that they do not think it worth while to administer a rebuke.

At Wilmington, North Carolina, the election has been the occasion of serious friction between whites and negroes. The latter have a majority of votes in the county, and have for years controlled the local government. The trouble arose out of an organized effort on the part of the whites to put an end to negro domination by fair means if possible, otherwise by any means which promised to be effective. There was less trouble than was anticipated on election day, for the negroes for the most part kept away from the polls, in consideration of the armed resistance which was ready to meet them. Wednesday a meeting of whites was held, with ex-Representative Waddell in the chair, to decide upon means for ridding the community more completely of negro influence. One measure approved was to encourage the plan of giving employment only to white labor, when possible. Another was to drive out of town a negro editor who had written and published objectionable articles. The negro editor left town during the night, but on Thursday the crowd enforced its edict by destroying his printing office and presses and burning the building. It was not a wild, excited mob, but the same crowd which had met the day before as a deliberative body with a chairman (and he an ex-Congressman) now exercising the function of the executive department of the government which it had set up. In the course of the day eight negroes were killed on the streets, and a few whites were wounded. The town government has been reorganized with Waddell as mayor, and comparative peace has been restored, but the instigators of the original trouble are now in command of the situation. They have struck their blow, and are very willing to increase the police force to preserve peace. To preserve peace in this case means to prevent retaliation for the deeds of violence which they have already committed.

It is a custom of long standing for the British Prime Minister to make a speech annually at the Lord Mayor's banquet, reviewing the political and diplomatic events of the year and making some specific statements as to the policy to be persued in the immediate future. Accordingly Lord Salisbury's speech at the Guild Hall, London, on Wesnesday night of last week, was looked forward to as the occasion for the solution of some mysteries which are troubling the public. Especially was the public anxious to know the meaning of Great Britain's present extraordinary preparations for war, and the general expectation was that this would be the occasion for the announcement of the establishment of a British protectorate over Egypt. But the public was disappointed. The definite statement was made that for the present no attempt would be made to establish a protectorate, since the rights and feelings of the other powers must be taken into consideration. The real cause of the vast military and naval preparations, which have been and still are on foot, is not satisfactorily explained. The premier declares that they do not mean a desire for war, much less the purpose of provoking war by any particular art of aggression, but only that Great Britain is "resolved to maintain the empire which Britons have received from their forefathers and to support the peace which is the glory and sustenance of our empire." If it means only this, one would suppose that the idea of maintaining the empire and supporting peace had just occurred to the administration, that it takes sudden steps to accomplish it. The general feeling is that the preparations are still unexplained. It may be very poor policy for England to neglect this opportunity for the establishment of a protectorate, and Lord Salisbury's announcement met with a very chilly reception among his own people, but outside of Great Britain there is a general feeling of relief at the thought that war is not so imminent as had been supposed.

According to recent statistical reports the farmers of the United States will receive during 1898 more money from abroad for their products than in any preceding year. A statement regarding the exports of principal agricultural products, just issued by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, shows that in the item of breadstuffs alone the exports for the ten months ending October 31, 1898, amounted to $250,237,355, which is $65,000,000 greater than in the corresponding months of last year and $38,000'000 in excess of the exceptional year 1892. Provision exports also show a good record, being for the ten months of 1898, $162,830,643, against $146,607,039 in the corresponding months of last year and $123,508,568 in 1892. Cotton exports for the ten months are $13,-000,000 in excess of last year and the number of pounds is larger than in any corresponding period in the history of the country.

O GIVE THANKS UNTO THE LORD.

For the earth which has once more yielded its increase to supply the wants of all the living.

For the garnered treasures from the field and orchard and garden — gifts from Nature's bounteous hand.

For the product of mines, of looms, of shops and factories—the products of honest toil.

For the growing ranks in the army of industry, who find remunerative employment and the decreasing number of those who are idle.

For life continued to us with all its mighty hopes and possibilities and all its deathless aspirations.

For such a measure of physical health and mental sanity as have enabled us to make the best use of the life so graciously continued to us.

For the home, with all its sacred relationships and blessed influences, the oldest institution on earth as it is one of the divinest—a haven of rest for the weary, a refuge for the tempted, the persecuted and the forsaken.

For the church, with all its manifold agencies and instrumentalities, which has made increase during the year past, and which shows increasing signs of a desire to fulfill its divine mission in the world.

For the growing sense of brotherhood that is bringing the nations into closer relations, and emphasizing a solidarity of the race—the oneness of the human family.

For the increasing unity of believers and the awakening consciousnes of the church to the evils of our divisions and the necessity for unity and co-operation.

For the growth of colleges, universities and all educational interests, and for all the methods for the diffusion of light and knowledge.

For additional proofs of God in our national history, manifested in his outstretched arm during our late war for the freedom of Cuba.

For signal victories by land and by sea, and for the magnanimity as well as the bravery of our soldiers and our sailors towards their defeated foes.

For a united nation, which under stress of a national emergency closed its divided ranks and forever obliterated sectional lines that it might vindicate its flag and fulfill its mission.

For the new baptism in patriotism which has awakened a deeper love of country and a higher appreciation of the dignity and responsibility of American citizenship, prophesying political purification.

For all the forces of moral, social and political reform, which are seeking to elevate the standard of our political life and to show to the world the highest type of Christian civilization.

For the growth of missions; for the triumph of the gospel in all lands.

For the rising spirit of democracy among the oppressed peoples of the earth and for the waning power of tyrants.

For the advancement in science, in art, in invention, and for all the signs that we are building here on earth, the City of God.

For these, and the other numberless blessings that crown our lives and bless our age, let us give thanks unto the Lord.

A DIVINE MISSION—WHAT?

II.—LOYALTY.

It is a misfortune that liberty often degenerates into license. Sometimes the cry of "liberty" has only a negative meaning, signifying freedom from lawful restraint and from the obligations growing out of certain beliefs. It should be observed that the religious movement, concerning whose divine mission we are writing, contained no such conception of liberty as this. It was the liberty to be loyal to the truth and to Him who was Truth incarnate, which our fathers asserted. There is no conflict between Christian liberty and Christian loyalty, but there is an irrepressible conflict between an enslaved conscience and loyalty to God.

One who examines the history of the time in which this movement had its origin will discover two features existing side by side: a most pronounced emphasis on the necessity of theological soundness, with a scrupulous observance of the customs and traditions of the church, and along with that an almost total disregard of some of the plainest teachings of Christ and his apostles. It may perhaps be said in alleviation of this condition of things that this disobedience to Christ in the whole tenor and spirit of his teaching was largely unconscious. The minds of the people were so filled with false conceptions of Christianity that they were unable to understand its real nature and its claims upon them. Christ taught and exemplified a religion that emphasizes the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; a religion which melts away barriers that separate men from each other, and tends to draw them together in bonds of love and fraternity. The religion of the time was something very different in its emphasis and in its results.

It would seem clear from this condition of things that what the religious world needed was, not only liberation from the bondage of human creeds and traditions of men, but also a sublime emphasis and a constant insistence on the principle of unswerving loyalty to Jesus Christ as the Head of the church and as the King, as well as the Savior of men. This alone would prevent liberty from becoming anarchy. This alone would right the wrongs and correct the errors which prevailed in the religious world, and advance the kingdom of God among men. What these pioneers did, therefore, was not to make a new human creed with which to oppose the older ones; not to set forth another human leader whom they would pit against former religious leaders; in a word, it was not to oppose human authority in religion by the use of human authority. This would have been comparatively futile. It could at best have only ended in the origination of another sect, whose limitations would have been already fixed, and whose bondage to its own creed would soon have been as complete as that which existed under other human creeds.

What they did was something very different from that. They denied the right of any man or of any body of men to formulate a creed which should be the basis of fellowship and union among Christians. They claimed that this power resided in Christ alone, and was delegated only to his apostles, and that it wa province of all believers in Christ to abide loyally by the creed which he himself had given and which his apostles had elaborated and explained. They opposed human authority with divine authority. They opposed human traditions and practices by divine commandments and institutions. In a word, they exalted Christ above all human authority in religion, and refused to accept anything as binding that had not originated with Christ or his apostles.

This seemed at the time radical and revolutionary, as indeed it was, but nothing less than this would have been loyalty to Jesus Christ. Nothing less than this would have met the demands of the times. This was the thread which was to lead them out of the maze of denominational divisions and religious apostasy into the purity and unity of the original church. Hence, loyalty to Christ and loyalty to the Word of God, as the inspired expression of the will of Christ, became the keynote of this reformation. "Where the Bible speaks we speak; where the Bible is silent we are silent," became the motto of these early reformers. "What is your 'Thus saith the Lord?'" was the challenge with which they confronted every doctrinet ordinance and practice of the church. Whatsoever could not abide this test must go. This was the measuring reed by which the temple of God in the nineteenth century was to be measured.

It is only true to history to say that the pious Pedobaptist leaders in this movement did not see at first where this principle would lead them, and how much it would modify their own religious practice. They felt sure that it was right, however, and being right it ought to be followed. The sequel proved that they were not "disobedient to the heavenly vision." They fearlessly applied this test to their own previous religious beliefs and practices and changed them accordingly. This is the supreme test of a man's loyalty to truth. When one is willing to yield up his former convictions of truth and to abandon practices which he had become accustomed to regard as sacred, and in doing so to place himself out of sympathy and fellowship with all existing religious organizations, he has given the highest measure of proof of his fidelity to the truth that any mortal can give, unless it be martyrdom, which is only an intensified form of this same test.

It deserves to be held in continual remembrance by the younger generations, that from time to time come upon the scene, that this plea for religious reformation came to be what it is, in its principles, because our fathers opened their minds and their hearts to the truth of God, and resolved to be loyal to it, wheresoever it might lead them. They were free to follow the truth—to be loyal to the leadership of Christ. They became free that they might be loyal, and were loyal that they might continue to be free. If ever we lose this true and genuine spirit of religious reformation—the love of truth—or should consent to sacrifice it on the altar of a timid conservatism, or of a desire for popular favor, we should prove ourselves to be unworthy sons of noble sires. These two principles must be constantly kept in holy wedlock—liberty and loyalty. They cannot exist apart. They can only flourish as they live in union. To suppose that there is any antagonism between them, and to attempt to sacrifice the one for the other, would be a fatal mistake.

If the religious world has heard and has been influenced in any measure by our plea for Christian liberty or freedom from the bondage of human creeds, it has heard and has been no less influenced by the emphasis which we have laid upon the necessity of loyalty to the Word of God as the supreme and only test of religious faith, doctrine and practice. It was the moral tonic which the languid state of religion demanded, and the results show that it was God's remedy, not man's.

EVOLUTION REVERSED.

Henry Thomas Buckle, in his "History of Civilization in England," affirms the superiority of intellectual over moral truth, because the former is progressive and the latter is stationary. The eminent philosophical historian admits in this contention that moral and spiritual ideas are fixed and final, and have remained unchangeably the same in all ages of which we have any knowledge, while truths of the intellect and scientific truths are constantly changing in an effort towards improvement. Mr. Buckle reasons that progression and changeableness necessarily indicate superiority over that which is fixed and unchangeable. If I were asked to reason from these premises, my conclusion would be the reverse of his. The mutability of intellectual ideas proves their imperfection. That which is changeable is improvable, and that which is improvable is not perfect. When you change a thing you say by the act: "This thing is imperfect, it has not reached its highest state of development, it admits of further improvement." The improvability of our intellectual and scientifice conceptions shows them to be imperfect and inferior to our moral ideas which, being changeable, are in themselves improvable. Instead, then, of Mr. Buckle deciding in favor of the superiority of intellectual truth because it is in a constant state of flux and progress toward perfection, this is the very reason why he should have reversed his decision against the inferiority of the immutable moral relations that obtain in the universe of God, and the ground of their immutability is their basis in revelation.

Science, for example, acknowledges the imperfection of its conclusions by constantly changing its premises, while the histories of the Bible are steadily confirmed by modern research, and the spiritual truth which it teaches remains the same yesterday, to-day and forever. Its fundamental doctrines of sin and righteousness, of life and immortality, are as unchangeable as the nature of God, because they are the revelation of that nature. There is not a spiritual truth nor an idea of moral conduct now in the world that were not in it thousands of years ago. The inspired volume is the garnered treasure house of all the moral and spiritual truth in the world, and it changes not because, like its divine Author, the substance of its spiritual revelation, it is already perfect. Why do truths of the intellect, that pertain to the common affairs of life, change with the changing generations, while truths of the conscience and the heart remain the same in all ages and under all circumstances?

It is one of nature's rules that the highest develops last. We have first the inorganic or the dead world; then the organic or the living world; in this latter we have first the vegetable, then the animal, then the intellectual, then the moral, and lastly and highest, we have the spiritual. According to the ordinary course of things, and especially if the doctrine of evolution be true, moral and spiritual truths ought to have been the last to reach the stationary condition which perfection implies. But instead of this it reached its highest and most perfect form thousands of years before that which is next below it. Intellectual truth is still in its childhood—immature and uncertain—while moral and spiritual truth which, in the natural order of things, comes after it, has reached its maturity ages since. How is this to be explained? There is but one explanation. If man had been left to discover for himself, and by his unaided powers, those moral principles that form his character and regulate his conduct, as he has been left to make intellectual progress on his own account, the natural and usual order would have been followed and science would be ahead of morals in the certainty and maturity of its doctrines. The reverse of this is true because and only because God has spoken to man on the question of character and conduct, as these stand related to himself. The Bible contains a revelation from God in reference to these matters, and hence they reached a fixedness, a permanence and a perfection in the early ages of human history not otherwise possible. God has put himself on record in respect to human character and human salvation because these are matters of transcendent moment, leaving us for our own good to work out intellectual problems for ourselves. This is the reason, no doubt, why spiritual truth has taken precedence in its development towards perfection, while in all matters of purely scientific intellectual inquiry man has been left to work out his own salvation by slow degrees. It is hardly possible to give any other explanation, and thus explanation confirms the claim of the Bible to be a revelation from God. There is only one sense in which the Word is progressive and improvable, and that is in our understanding and application of its principles. We may apprehend it more clearly and practice it more faithfully, but we cannot improve the truth itself. Science and human wisdom may change, but the Word of the Lord endures forever. J. J. H.

Hour of Prayer.

PRAISE AND THANKSGIVING.

(Mid-week Prayer-meeting Topic, Nov. 23rd.)

Enter into His gates with thanksgiving,
And into His courts with praise;
Give thanks unto Him, and bless His name.
—Psa. 100:4.

It is the eve of our National Thanksgiving Day. In accordance with the time-honored custom, the God-fearing and God-loving people of this nation will meet on the morrow at their accustomed places of worship to give thanks to Almighty God for the harvest that has crowned the labors of the year, for the rewards of industry in every department of human toil, for freedom from pestilence, and for all other national blessings. It is fitting, therefore, that on this prayer-meeting evening we should direct our minds toward the reasons we have for gratitude to God for his abundant mercies toward us. Ingratitude is one of the basest sins. It implies a nature hardened by selfishness and blinded by unbelief. Not to recognize our indebtedness to the Supreme Giver of all our gifts is to manifest a moral blindness and hardness of heart very sad to contemplate. The reason the psalmist assigns for giving thanks unto the Lord is that "He is good; his mercy endureth forever."

Let us think of the goodness of God to us during the year past. Let each one stop to enumerate, as far as possible, his individual blessings. Let us think of life, health, home and happiness which we have enjoyed during the year. If we stop to compare our lot with the more unfortunate of our race who are suffering from oppression, from hopeless disease, from abject poverty, from hunger and nakedness, we can the better realize the greatness of our own blessings and the measure of our indebtedness to God. "He forgiveth all our iniquities; he healeth all our diseases."

Our country as a whole has been blessed with an abundance from the products of the field, our mines have yielded their increase, a large number of our people have found remunerative employment, and all of the signs seem to point to an era of material prosperity.

But this is not the only nor even the greatest reason for thanksgiving. During the year past the nation has been engaged in war in behalf of an oppressed and long-suffering neighboring people. That war has been brought to a successful termination, accomplishing the purpose for which it was inaugurated.

In the prosecution of this war we have had signal evidences of the divine favor. Such remarkable victories, attended with so small a loss of life, are almost unparalleled in the history of modern warfare. They remind us of those ancient wars in which God interposed to deliver his people, and to show them that reliance upon his arm was greater security than all the munitions of war.

It is something to be grateful for that our nation has reached a point in its national development when it could wage war for so unselfish a purpose as the war in behalf of Cuba.

It is something to be grateful for that our nation has acquired additional power and prestige among the nations of the earth, not only for its signal victories on land and sea, but for the magnanimity and generosity it has displayed toward its defeated enemies.

It is something to be grateful for that the nation seems to have awakened to a new consciousness of its mission among the natious of the earth as a pro oter of peace and civilization and as a friend and helper of the oppressed and enslaved peoples of the earth.

It is something to be grateful for that so large a number of the people recognize the Divine Hand in our national history and the impulse which this recognition must give to national purity and righteousness.

For these reasons and many others let us

> "Enter into His gates with thanksgiving,
> And into His courts with praise."

Let us thank Him for all our individual and national blessings, and pray that His goodness may lead us, as individuals and as a nation, to repentance and to a better life.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the God of nations, we thank Thee that Thou didst plant in this New World a free and independent nation, whose citizens have been guaranteed the rights of civil and religious liberty. We thank Thee for Thy guiding Hand through more than a century of our national life, in which Thou hast made us a great nation, and given us wealth and power and civilization, and made us a beacon light and a source of inspiration to all the struggling peoples of earth. We thank Thee for the blessings of the year just closed and all the signal proofs of Thy divine favor which it has brought to us. May these tokens of Thy favor and care lead us to a renewed consecration to fulfill our national destiny and accomplish Thy gracious purposes on earth. Forgive our sins, individual and national, and bless our Chief Executive, his Cabinet and counselors, and all others who are in positions of influence and responsibility, to the end that Thy will may be done on earth as it is in Heaven. For Christ's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

The election has resulted in about the usual amount of disappointment and gratification. We feel sure that many, without regard to party lines, are gratified that Roosevelt, of New York, was elected governor of that state, on repeated declarations that he would enforce the law against all violators, whether high or low, rich or poor, and that he intended putting the Ten Commandments above his party fealty. The whole country will watch to see how well he carries out these pledges. It is a disappointment to all lovers of honesty in politics that Mr. Quay triumphed in Pennsylvania, over an independent effort to enforce in politics the command, "Thou shalt not steal." But the end is not yet.

During the election in this city we visited a polling-place where was standing a group of well-dressed citizens who had just voted. One of them said, "I voted for Mr. —— for sheriff." "Did you not know," we ventured to ask, "that you were voting for a man who has been connected with some of the worst political scandals of this city, and that he has been denounced in the press of his own party as notoriously corrupt?" "Oh, yes," he replied, "but the fellow who is running against him on the other ticket is still worse, and what can you do?" "Vote for neither, and preserve a good conscience at least," was our answer. But think of the condition of local politics when such men are nominated for office, and decent people are asked to vote for them! Where was the moral element of the city when these nominations were made? Perhaps this question should not be pressed, as it might disturb the "good conscience" of some of us who feel we have done our political duty if we go to the polls and vote on election day.

In reading, recently, Hattie Tying Griswold's "Personal Sketches of Recent Authors"—a delightful book, by the way—we were struck with a quotation which the author makes from Harriet Beecher Stowe. "Her lofty spirit," says the author, "is shown in the following words written in one of the darkest hours of defeat:"

> "If this struggle is to be prolonged till there be not one home in the land where there is not one dead, till all the treasure amassed by the unpaid labor of the slave shall be wasted, till every drop of blood drawn by the lash shall be atoned by blood drawn by the sword, we can only bow and say, 'Just and true are thy ways, thou King of Saints.' "

This struck us as very much like a passage from Mr. Lincoln's second inaugural, and taking down from our library, the XXIII. Vol. of Charles Dudley Warner's "World's Best Literature," we read from that address of Mr. Lincoln the following:

> "Fondly do we hope—fervently do we pray—that this mighty scourge of war may pass away. Yet if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk and until every drop of blood drawn by the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword—as it was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, 'The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.' "

While Mr. Lincoln's language is more stately, and the whole passage is an improvement on that of Mrs. Stowe's, it is impossible not to believe that he had seen Mrs. Stowe's passage and had been impressed by it, although he was probably wholly unconscious of it at the time. The incident throws some light on the subject of unconscious plagiarism, which is not an unusual thing.

Questions and Answers.

What is signified by the expression, "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit?" J. B. C.

The expression signifies that the prophets of the Old Testament, to whom special reference is made, spake and wrote, not simply by the aid of their native genius or talents, but that the impulse which moved them was from the Holy Spirit. Of course the Holy Spirit used the faculties of these men, but did not obliterate their individual mental characteristics. God, by his Spirit, so illuminated their understanding and guided their utterances as to convey through them the truth which he desired to communicate to men, and to make such revelation of his will and his truth as would be a standard of doctrine and faith in all ages.

What bodies are signified by the phrase, "bodies terrestial?" (1 Cor. 15:40.) W. H. P.

The trouble with some of the Corinthian members, as regards the resurrection, seems to have been that they were unable to conceive of any other kind of body than a material body like those we inhabit here on the earth. "How are the dead raised, and with what bodies do they come?" they asked. It was in answer to such questions that Paul told them that there are bodies celestial as well as bodies terrestial; that is, as we here have bodies adapted to the earth in which we live, so we shall have bodies adapted to the celestial world when we enter it. Even here on earth, he adds, there is a great variety of bodies, as of fish, birds, men, each having a body adapted to its environment. Why should it, then, be thought incredible that we should have new and spiritual bodies adapted to the spiritual world? The "terrestial bodies," we take it, include all orms of material bodies, in contrast with he "celestial bodies" of the spiritual ealm.

What can be done in our local work to mpress the membership with their re- ponsibility to the larger work?
D. W. Moore.

This is an important question and may ell engage the thought of every preacher. f the preacher improves the occasions of pecial collections for the different branches f our general work for the purpose of iving his congregation information con- erning them it will do much to impress he responsibility of the larger work upon hem. The most effective way of accom- lishing this end, however, is to see to it hat a good Christian paper that fosters hese larger interests goes into the home of ach family in the church. Nothing so idens one's sympathies and enlarges one's orizon as the weekly visits of a first-class eligious journal.

Is it proper, or is it reprehensible for a astor to refer to the church for which he ay be preaching as "my" church, and to s officers as "my" officers? S. M. M.

There is nothing improper meant by the se of "my" in such cases. It is a short ay of saying, "the church which I am erving, or the officers of the church of hich I am the preacher." Ownership is ot meant, but relationship. It is simply a uestion of taste, and we should say that he best taste would use the possessive ase in such connection sparingly.

Current Religious Thought

The Herald and Presbyter offers the fol- owing wise counsel concerning the dis- osition of one's property by will. In the Oct. 12th issue it says:

In the disposition of property Christ should e taken into the account. In all our posses- ions we are simply stewards, and we are to old ourselves and all that we are at his dis- osal. We are to honor him with our sub- tance and with the first fruits of all our in- rease. We should put C rist in our daily ves, in our eating and drinking, in our earn- ng and spending, in our living and dying. A ertain prop rtion of what we expend during ife should be for the upbuilding of his king- om, and we are carefully to consider whether have not something to leave for this par- icular work when we co.. .. die. In all our ays we are to acknowledge him, and in the irection which we give to the division of our states may be a most reverent and loving and rateful acknowledgment of his goodness.

There are certain provisions for executing a vill about which we do not intend to speak. hey can be learned by each one who wishes to e informed, and differ somewhat in the arious states. The form can readily be pro- ided by the trusted counselor. The important natter is that one clearly understands what isposition he wishes to make, and that he oes it in ample time, so that it cannot be alled in question successfully by any one.

It is ordinarily best to administer one's own state, so far as charitable bequests are con- erned, by giving away during the lifetime what one wishes to go to the missionary board, he college or seminary, the hospital, the sylum or the church; but oftentimes this is ot practicable. It may be possible to divert roperty in some such direction as indicated at leath, while absolutely necessary to hold it luring life. We have reason to believe, and o know, that many gifts are provided for in vills to-day for which religious, educational nd missionary institutions will be the richer in ears to come. And this is right. If one is ble to do it he should, at some some time, elp in some signal way the causes which are or the world's betterment, and, as far as he s able, help them a little all the time.

At the same time let all parents remember hat the best egacy they can leave to the ause of Christ on earth is a family of chil- ren well trained and heartily interested in eligious life and work. Through them their Christian influence may be perpetuated more potently and with greater promise than in any other way, for this is a means which may en- dure for many long generations. Parents should use most wise and careful efforts that the minds and hearts of their children be not embittered or alienated by being treated un- justly in the matter of bequests. As he would be most unwise and unjust who would, during his lifetime, leave his children to suffer be- cause of his large gifts to causes which, in themselves, are important and sacred, so he follows a sadly mistaken policy who, at death, diverts so much of his property to benevolent causes as to bring reproaches on his memory from his children who have been uncared for. The law of the tithe was meant to stir the selfish and also to restrain occasionally the en- thusiast, and it might be well if, in gifts both before and after death, the divine intimation might be carefully considered.

The following estimate of the essentials to an efficient and successful pastorate and pastor by the Interior, recently, is not far short of the truth. It says:

The first requsite for imparting knowledge of any kind is to possess it. What is the secret of the variety and freshness of the truths and illustration with which the work of some speak- ers and writers teem? We answer that it comes of a habit of mind. The successful writer, at least, must form the habit of looking at every- thing he sees to see what there is in it for him as a writer. Our surroundings, the world and the universe are an infinite tapestry, the needlework of a single thread. Follow it as a clew from any point and it leads into an infini- tude of interwoven truth and beauty. A thoughtful person in contemplative mood can- not see a little child upon the street, either dainty or dirty, without setting ajar and in motion a train of thought that is fresh, new and interesting. Those who cultivate, train and sharpen the perceptive faculties of the soul are oversupplied with truth—have more on any one subject than they can use, and all of it original and fresh.

A preacher to hold the attention of his people must be imbued with deep and sincere interest in their welfare, and in all that interests them —their health, domestic and social happines, the solution of their difficulties, the removal of their troubles, so far as he can, the assuage- ment of there griefs, the promotion of their hopes, especially for their children.

But not in this, no more than in his intellec- tual storehouse, can a pastor pour out with- out an inflowing stream. He becomes ex- hausted. Even sympathy must have sources or it will dry up. The pastor must have the close sympathy and affection of his people or he will fail. Pastors not unfrequently remark that as soon they fail to hold the sympathies of their people they will give up their pulpit, sometimes not seeming to know themselves why, except that they feel uncomfortable—are thirsty and hungry. They are dying, drying up, and if they remain will soon become noth- ing better than a sack of husks and dust—their "cured" people will stay, but the living ones will seek rain and dew elsewhere.

The preacher must draw from nature, provi- dence, history, human experience — from every source for his intellectual sup- plies, but he must draw his spiritual sup- plies from his own people. Must he not draw them from God? Yes, ultimalety, but not directly That is not God's way of im- parting spiritual wealth. He gives the single talent, and if we do not put it to use in the spiritual exchange it will not increas. What little there is of it will be lost. That was a good poem not long since of a stylite hermit on his tower calling for God. "Where art thou, Lord?" he cried. "Down here among the people," came from the toiling masses below.

A spiritually poor congregation cannot have a good preacher. A spiritually poor preacher cannot have a good congregation. A good neighborhood cannot exist without both.

The need for more quietude and medita- tion in one's life is the moral of an ex- cellent article in the Sunday-school Times, Oct. 15, by Hugo Macmillan, on "Still- ness." The following is the concluding paragraph of the article:

This is an age of excitement. People are de- voted to the pursuit of pleasure, and amuse- ment is apt to become too engrossing, and even innocent play and healthy exercise are too often changed into serious pursuits, to which the whole attention is given up. There is a fever in people's souls—a fever of business, a haste to be rich and excell others, and to get on in the world. And this spirit is creeping into the church, and even our religious wor- ship, which ought to rest our souls more than anything else, is apt to become se sational, and there is such a crowd of duties and serv- ices, even on the day of rest, that the object of it is in a large measure lost sight of, and there is no leisure or calmness of mind for spiritual meditation. Religious people of the calm East, such as Brahmins and Buddhists, have too much stillness. They sit for hours, or even days, together, silent, motionless, clearing their minds and hearts of all thought, emotion and desire, that, emptied of self, they may know God. Religious people in the busy West, on the other hand, are too active, and often keep God out of their lives by their restlessness about the very things of religion. For persons can be prevented from hearing the still small voice of Jesus knocking at the door of their heart, and seeking admittance, by the hurry and bustle of religious services on Sunday quite as much as by the noises and competition of the world during the week. You are all dragged more or less into this mighty whirl- pool of excitement, and more and more you feel the force of it. It is necessary, therefore, that you should keep a sanctuary in your own souls, to which you can retreat from the noises and strifes of the world; that you should cul- tivate a calm and tranquil manner, cherish a quiet, meditative spirit, and find or make many opportunities of being alone with God, that you may think of things that belong to your peace. Doing this, you will be able more thoroughly to enjoy your innocent pleasures and perform your common duties. You will be calm and self-possessed when others are flus- tered, and you will know yourselves better, and God, too.

In view of the fact that the Emperor of Germany's visit to the Holy Land this month is exciting unusual attention, the following hint at the undercurrent inter- ests from the New York Observer is not without interest in the case:

The ostensible purpose of the Kaiser in mak- ing the journey is to attend the dedication of the German church in Jerusalem, the site of which was presented by the Sultan, and to see the Holy Land and the German colonists set- tled there. The purpose is a laudable one, the Emperor, as a Christian sharing the desire of most Christians to visit, at least once in his life the scene of Christ's labor upon earth, and also to show his regard for the very numerous community in Syria which looks to him as its sovereign and protector. But though in the case of any other monarch there might thus seem little reason to attribute dif- ferent motives to the journey, it is not surpris- ing that in view of the Kaiser's known ambitions the European press should find it difficult to believe that the attraction of the Holy Places is all that takes him to Palestine. It is alleged, indeed, that the visit is under- taken in furtherance of a new idea of German expansion, that the Emperor sees in Asia Minor a field for German activity which would far surpass any that may be secured in Africa and the Far East. Nor in view of the condi- tion of Turkey, and the foothold Germany has already acquired in that quarter, is the idea one so incapable of realization as may at first appear, though attempt to realize it will, of course, arouse opposition on every hand. In the first place, German commercial interests in Asia Minor are already very large, a Ger- man company is building the railway which is ultimately to connect the Mediterranean with Bagdad, and the number of German settlers in Syria probably exceeds that in any purely German colony. Moreover, the influence of Germany at Constantinople is greater than that of any other power, owing to the assist- ance, political and material, rendered the Porte by Berlin; and though the Sultan would now no doubt like to release himself from dependance on the Kaiser, he has accepted too much to shake him off. Should, therefore, the Emperor follow the example of the powers elsewhere, and demand concessions in the out- lying provinces of Turkey which would prac- tically leave Germany in possession when the final break-up of the empire occurs, the Sultan might find it difficult to refuse. With so much in his favor, the idea of acquiring Syria, the territory between the Tigris and the Euphra- tes, and even Constantinople itself, may not seem to the Kaiser too unsubstantial for ulti- mate realization; and in any event, the notion of German possession of the Holy Land must appeal strongly to a mind like his. As we have said, the declaration of such a purpose would arouse opposition everywhere, as indeed the mere suspicion of it is already doing; for Russia would not quietly see the Holy Places pass into German hands, nor France give up her claims to Syria, nor Austria and Italy admit without adequate compensation the exclusive right of Germany to the most valua- ble portions of Asiatic Turkey. It may be, of course, that the Kaiser has no ulterior designs in his visit, that it is prompted only by desire to visit the cradle of Christianity, but it is certain that the rest of Europe will refuse to regard his tour as merely one of observation, and will grow more excited as it progresses.

Our Budget.

—Another bounteous harvest has been garnered.

—Let God be praised for his goodness unto the children of men.

—The original poems in our Family Circle this week are of special merit.

—Please notice what Benj. L. Smith has sent for this paper on Forefathers' Day and Children's Rally Day. One is past, the other is at hand.

—We are sorry to have to omit some interesting literature on C. W. B. M. Day, first Sunday in December, which came too late for this paper.

—The first edition of the special issue of the American Home Missionary on Children's Rally Day for America, we are told, is exhausted. The second is on the press. We are glad of the indication of success in this movement which this announcement affords. It will add enthusiasm to the cause of Home Missions in a way never felt before.

—The picture on our first page this week will immediately suggest the motto: "Home Missions to the Front," so thoroughly has Corresponding Secretary B. L. Smith identified himself with that good cause. It is not inappropriate that the picture appears along with our conference this week on the Jubilee Convention. Bro. Smith, as will be seen from his picture, is still a young man, and he may safely hope to live to see the fulfillment of his desires concerning Home Missions. The energy and wisdom displayed in the prosecution of this work under his joint administration shows that no mistake was made in his selection.

—See the announcement elsewhere concerning the educational conference at Moberly, Mo., Dec. 6th.

—Archbishop Ireland is trying to keep missionaries out of Cuba and Porto Rico by the "bluff" game. If they go, as they will, and fail, which they will not, the humiliation of the failure will not rest upon his shoulder nor the cost upon his purse; so why should he worry about their going on that account? We surmise that it is something else that troubles the Bishop.

—Special telegram:

Five Thousand Dollars from F. M. Drake for foreign missions. F. M. RAINS.

This balances up the ex-Governor's home and foreign mission accounts nicely, making $5,000 to each. Here is an example which a few more brethren might follow. Gen. Drake has done great service by setting the pace for us. By the way, we are glad to see that our esteemed contemporary—the Christian Standard—has taken Bro. Drake back into its fellowship. But why is this thus?

—The article in this paper from J. Z. Tyler, calling the attention of our Endeavor Societies to the importance of a special effort on their part to an increased effort in the salvation of souls during the present missionary year, is worthy of special attention. This matter should be properly and effectively presented to each society at the earliest opportunity by the pastor, evangelist or other suitable person. In many instances the society alone would meet the expenses of a protracted meeting in some needy place, if not needed in its own church. Of course, where the church is making special effort to convert men and women to Christ the Endeavor Society of that congregation should do its utmost to assist it in the work. If the church is not making that effort then the Endeavor Society of that church should see that it is made. Remember that this basic principle of the Endeavor movement pledges you to the "support of your own church" and this you can best do by assisting in the conversion of men to Christ.

—With the November number the Third Christian Church Bulletin, Philadelphia, Pa., begins its fourth volume. No church local paper comes to us in better garb or with more cheering messages for its readers than this one from Philadelphia.

—The friends of Christian education among us may well feel gratified at the success which is attending the effort of Hiram College to greatly augment its endowment fund. We began to print the names of those who have agreed to pledge not less than $1 to said fund, but Pres. Zollars has overwhelmed us with his list of donors and we are compelled for lack of space to give this general acknowledgment instead of the list of names. The movement is taking on immense proportions and bids fair to become a popular subscription. What the people do for Hiram College they are likely to do for other institutions, and have proven themselves worthy when the time comes and the opportunity is offered.

—Nels P. Nelson, of Holbrook, Neb., wants the address of J. Hurd, or some of his relatives.

—The annual report of the Children's Home Society of Minnesota for 1898, an illustrated copy of which has just been received by us, is an excellent testimony to the practice of pure and undefiled religion in that state.

—The city of St. Louis now has a curfew ordinance to regulate the presence of boys and girls on the street after proper hours of the night. The record of this law where enforced in other cities bears evidence of being a healthful protective measure for children and the home, and we hope that such will be its fruits in this city. It should have the moral support of all wise parents and be strictly enforced by the authorities.

—The Kinsman, published at Salt Lake City, Utah, is a strong anti-Mormon magazine, published semimonthly under the editorial care and management of Rev. Wm. R. Campbell. The special mission of this journal, it says, is to secure the enforcement of the Federal law against polygamy and to undeceive the people on the claims and nature of this religious monstrosity.

—By order of the executive committee of the National Pure Food and Drug Congress a call has been issued for the second annual meeting to be held in Columbian University Hall, Washington, D. C., Jan. 18-21, 1899. This seems to us to be an important meeting, especially since its object is to secure legal protection against the adulteration of food and drugs. We ought for commercial, hygienic and moral reasons to have a law to prevent the adulteration and misbranding of products which enter into the consumption of mankind. The secretary of this committee very pertinently says: "Our boys are taught in the Sunday-schools and by their mothers to be honest above everything, and yet the minute they enter the store they are taught to deceive the customer and to sell misbranded products for the genuine article." Already this Congress has endorsed a bill before our National Congress known as the Faulkner Bill, No. 4144, in the Senate, and the Brosius Bill, No. 9154, in the House, which ought to be resolved into a law, and you can greatly assist in securing such an enactment by writing to your Senator and Representative on the subject. Or, better still, get up a petition with as many names as possible and send them for the next congressional session.

—R. H. Jesse, president of the University of Missouri, is right in insisting upon the abolishment of entrance and tuition fees in all departments of the University. This ought to be done at the next sitting of the legislature. There is no reason why the young men of other commonwealths should have advantages not open to the young men of Missouri, as is now the case. Nothing would have a happier effect upon the enrollment list of our State University than such a move. These fees are barriers to many young men who might otherwise be able to secure a fine education within its courts and become useful men to the state. Let us have an open University.

—To care for the health, and to employ proper medical remedies, as the occasion demands, is a Christian duty. A deliberate neglect to do this amounts to self-murder. The laws of health written deep in the physical constitution of humanity are but the laws of God, to be "obeyed and respected accordingly."—New York Observer.

—The cost of the work of the Y. M. C. A. Int. Com. for soldiers and sailors during the past summer and until the close of the year is estimated at $80,000. The cost of the other departments of the work of the International Committee will be a like sum, necessitating the securing of $160,000 before the close of the year to meet the expenses of the committee. The associations take collections at one or other of their meetings. The churches and union meetings are asked to make a similar collection for the benefit of the committee, the amount thus secured to be forwarded to Mr. F. B. Schenck, treasurer, 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, New York.

—We have received a Bulletin of the Army and Navy Department of the Y. M. C. A Int. Com., issued November 1. It is an eight-page publication, illustrated with a number of cuts of camp and army life, and is filled with fresh and interesting news from the soldiers in the field and the sailors on our war vessels. A detailed statement is made in regard to the work of the committee, and many interesting incidents are given. The work is strongly indorsed by the President, the General of the Army, officers of all ranks, and soldiers and sailors. Any one can secure a copy of this Bulletin by writing to the International Committee, 3 West Twenty-ninth Street, New York, sending a one-cent stamp for postage.

—The Actors' Society of America has issued a circular, calling upon the preachers and pastors of the churches to assist in their freedom from Sunday shows. The society has adopted strong resolutions against theatrical performances at any hour of the day on Sunday, and appeals to the clergy and all Christian people to assist in securing this liberty by proper legal enactment. There thus seems to be a tie in Sunday observance that binds all hearts in a common want and this common demand must sooner or later be heeded by the lawmakers of our land. Let us have a weekly day of rest as demanded by the churches, the labor unions, the Actors' Society and other organizations.

—The Missionary Intelligencer for November is an unusually large and interesting number. It contains the annual report of the Foreign Society for the missionary year, ending Sept. 30, and should be kept for reference during the present year. The information it contains covers the entire work of the Disciples of Christ in the foreign field.

—Are you aware of the fact that you have a Roman Catholic pastor, no matter who you are, what you are or where you live? If not, perhaps the following paragraph from the Church Progress will be news to you:

Such expressions as "Bishop of the Catholic diacese of so-and-so," or "Bishop of the Catholic Church in such-and-such a place," are incorrect and should be avoided. The jurisdiction of a bishop is a strictly territorial one, and all persons within the boundaries of a diocese, whether Catholic or not, are subject to it, especially if they are baptized. The Non-Catholics living within the limits of a parish belong to it, and its pastor and the bishop of the diocese in which it is are their pastors, however unwilling they may be to recognize their authority. The proper expression in all cases is: The Bishop of N., etc.

—In this issue we publish an obituary of J. B. Crane, who died at his home at Waynesboro, Va., on the 18th of October, of apoplexy. The obituary was written by Rev. Cocke, the Presbyterian minister of Waynesboro, and personal friend of Bro. Crane. Bro. Crane knew the fathers of the Restoration personally, and in recent years has been committing much of his personal recollections of them and of the beginnings of the Restoration movement to writing. A number of his reminiscent articles appeared in this paper during the last few years and we still have a few unpublished articles. Bro. Crane has been an active servant of the Lord throughout his life and has gone to his rest with the honors of a veteran in the Lord's army.

—Miss Mildred Franklin was last heard from at Port Said. There were twenty-five passengers on the ship. Of these, nineteen were American missionaries. The time passes quickly and joyfully in such genial company.

—Dr. W. N. Hammond, 70 Yndustria St., Havana, Cuba, wants five hundred Spanish-English New Testaments. He is starting a Sunday-school in Havana and must have help in order to secure any large success. The Cubans want to study English while studying their Sunday-school lessons. Any one wishing to contribute funds for this purpose may send the same to F. M. Rains, Box 750, Cincinnati, O.

—The following clipping is from the Canton Press of recent date, and has a bearing upon the forthcoming educational conference at Moberly on Dec. 6th:

A delegation of nearly thirty persons went from Canton to Moberly Tuesday to attend the educational conference in the interests of Christian University. The first session of the conference, not being largely attended from other parts of the state, was mainly preliminary, and arranged for another meeting at the same place Dec. 6. It was proved that Canton acted wisely in sending a delegation large enough to control the organization and order for the next meeting, when the main issues are to be met! Joshua Alexander, an alumnus of Christian University, was elected president of the conference, and S. G. Clay, of Fayette, another friend, was made secretary. It was resolved that the next meeting should "consider and pass upon the propriety of establishing and endowing one or more colleges in this state; and if this be approved, ways and means should then and there be provided for this work." It will be necessary for Canton to be strongly represented at that meeting, for her interests will be opposed by men having similar interests in other parts of the state. Every man that can be used should go, Dec. 6th, to Moberly.

We hold no one responsible for the above but the Canton Press. It is needless for us to say that a conference, conducted in the spirit which this clipping indicates, will amount to nothing, no matter what its decisions may be. We take it that every fair-minded man in the state desires that the educational conference, to be held at Moberly, Dec. 6th, should be a representative body of men, representing all our educational interests, and controlled by men whose vision is broad enough to take in our whole educational problem in the state. If any local interest or any single institution should undertake to make the conference serve its own particular interests without regard to other educational interests in the state, it would deserve, and we hope it would receive, a prompt rebuke from the conference. As a friend of Christian University, who would rejoice in any successful effort to increase its endowment, and who stands ready to help it in every laudable effort in that direction, we should regret exceedingly to know that the above clipping represents the spirit and method of the president, faculty and trustees of that institution. We shall assume that it does not until developments prove the contrary.

—Prof. Charles W. Kent, in an article in Missionary Tidings for November speaks most encouragingly of the course of Bible lectures now being delivered at the University of Virginia, by Dr. C. A. Young, and also of the C. W. B. M. and the Cary heirs effort to endow a Bible Chair as a memorial to Colonel Cary. Toward this end the Cary heirs, as is known, have given $10,000, and the C. W. B. M. are endeavoring to secure an additional $15,000, upon raising which the gift of the $10,000 is made dependent. And so while lecturing at the university Dr. Young is visiting as many churches as possible in the interest of this work. Concerning the wisdom and the hope of this movement Prof. Kent says:

Our gratitude is elicited by our present success; our hopes are raised by this generous gift and the implied promise; our aim is high, for we are constrained to recognize the immense possibilities before us; our purpose should be well defined—to procure at once the remainder of the $25,000. Beyond even this is the vision of an endowment so enlarged as to raise the Lectureship to the dignity of a Chair put on the same plane as the languages and sciences. I could wish from the bottom of my heart that the University of Virginia might be the first institution to make the study of the English Bible in every respect co-ordinate with the study of Latin, or German, or Mathematics, or History, or any other course required for the Baccalaureate degree. If such a dream be realized it will be due to the wisdom and loyalty of the C. W. B. M.

—The Missionary Magazine for October contains the minutes of the 22nd annual convention of the churches of Christ in Missouri, held at Nevada, Sept. 26-29, 1898. Send to T. A. Abbott, 712 Commercial Bldg., this city, for copies. You need this number for study and reference.

—The acrostic form for a Bible reading, found elsewhere in this paper, by Sumner T. Martin, of Mason City, Ia., is worthy of your attention. It is commendable for its brevity, order and emphasis of the things to be brought out in the reading. We shall ask Bro. Martin to send us a few of these program readings that you may try them in your prayer-meetings. They, however, would not be difficult of preparation by any enterprising leader. Put this one on a blackboard before your meeting in the form given and note the effect.

—J. L. Darsie, financial agent for Bethany College, says that the report that this honored institution of learning was about to close its doors has greatly injured the college. He says that the situation is not one-half so bad as some people were led to believe and that she has no notion of suspending business. He also thinks that the report will so arouse her old friends that she will be immediately rescued from her present financial stress, and we trust that he rightly views the situation. Bro. Darsie is in the field to rally the friends of Bethany College to its present needs, and a better man for the place probably could not be found in or out of her alumni. We wish for Bro. Darsie the success that Bethany College rightfully expects of her friends. See an article from him in this paper on this subject.

SUMNER T. MARTIN.

Mason City, Ia., Nov. 8, 1898.

THE former Postmaster-General of President McKinley's administration has written for THE YOUTH'S COMPANION an article describing the discouraging difficulties and appalling dangers met by Uncle Sam's carriers on remote postal routes, one of which, in Alaska, is nine hundred miles long.

A Minister's Son

Face was a Mass of Sores—Advice of an Old Physician Followed with Perfect Success.

"Our eldest child had scrofula trouble ever since he was two years old and the doctors pronounced it very serious. His face became a mass of sores. I was finally advised by an old physician to try Hood's Sarsaparilla and we did so. The child is now strong and healthy and his skin is clear and smooth." REV. R. A. GAMP, Valley, Iowa. Remember

The S. S., Endeavor and Prayer-meeting Departments.

In response to our note in our last issue relative to the utility of the departments above named, we have received the following responses:

I think the present arrangement of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, so far as its various departments are concerned, is well-nigh perfect, and it is my candid opinion that the omission of any of these departments would be seriously detrimental both to the paper and to its large list of readers. C. J. KIMBALL.

St Louis, Mo., Nov. 14, 1898.

The Endeavor column by Bro. Jenkins and the Bible-school by Bro. Willett, and the "Quiet Hour" by the editor, are among the most valuable features of the paper. I am sure there would be a storm of protest if you dropped any one or all of these departments.

Yours, etc., W. S. PRIEST.

Lawrence, Kan., Nov. 12, 1898.

A well-known preacher in Missouri, who writes us privately, and whose name we therefore withhold, referring to the S. S., C. E. and prayer-meeting departments says he has inquired among the preachers and finds they do not read them. How far this applies to teachers, who generally have other means of preparing for their work we do not know. His own judgment in respect to the departments is as follows:

I believe they occupy space that can be put to better immediate service. I have been careful to inquire for months, especially of preachers, the utility of the work in consideration, and the answer has almost invariably been "I don't read them." So much S. S. matter is given in detail in papers devoted to that work that brief analyses are passed by. So of Endeavor lessons. But the prayer-meeting or midweek lessons are different. Those who use Christian Publishing Co. topics need what you say, and then for the homiletics, they are splendid. Let the S. S. and C. E. lessons go, but continue the midweek topics, and put on foot uniform midweek lesson.

If the prayer-meeting, Bible-school and the Christian Endeavor Society are useful means for advancing the cause of "Christ and the church," then surely their lessons should find a place in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We certainly have better prayer-meetings since we know the lesson theme a week in advance. I work in prayer-meeting, Bible-school and Christian Endeavor. Sometimes my lesson helps get misplaced, but the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, never.

THOS. R. THORNTON.

Lee's Summit, Mo., Nov. 11, 1898.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: — I see a comment in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, Nov. 10, page 585, that you make in reference to giving space in the paper for a Sunday-school and Endeavor department. You asked that your readers express themselves upon this subject. I would like to say that I believe the time has come when a paper that fails to give freely of its space, and which does not secure the very best talent to fill that space will be forced to take a back seat. I have heard almost every subscriber with which I have conversed upon the subject say that these departments were among the leading reasons for continuing their subscription to the paper. While every department is g d, still these two live subjects demand full rec ition, and the paper that fails to give them will lose many subscribers. E. C. ANDERSON.

Anniston, Ala., Nov. 12, 1898.

DEAR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: — While 'tis true that all subscribers may not appreciate these columns, yet I am persuaded that there are none, however learned they may be, who cannot study them with profit. It is my judgment that anything which stimulates thought and helps the disciple to a more liberal and perfect understanding of the Word is worthy a place in our papers and a careful reading by the subscriber. CHAS. E. FREEMAN.

Springdale, Ark., Nov. 10, 1898.

THE CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST: — Brethren, I arise to answer for myself about the various departments of a religious paper. I think it would be a serious mistake to leave off Endeavor Department, Sunday-school or any of those excellent departments. I see that some of our large secular dailies give an exposition of the Sunday-school lesson. Shall Christians be less wise? Maybe Bro. Ely would have the paper in tracts. These different helps go in to break up what might otherwise be monotony. Give us the CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST with its "Current Events" to its "Publishers' Notes." Fraternally,

T. F. DRISKILL.

Corsicana, Tex., Nov. 12, 1898.

By all means continue the departments in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Personally, I take great pleasure and receive much profit from the Sunday-school and Prayer-meeting columns. We use the topics in our midweek meetings. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST becomes better with each year. I am proud of it. RUSSELL F. THRAPP.

PERSONAL MENTION.

H. L. Willett writes that they are now nicely settled at Berlin, Germany, and greatly enjoying the surroundings.

B. F. Clay, the Western field secretary of the Foreign Missionary Society, called at this office while in the city last week. His home office is at Kansas City, Mo., but he expects to spend much time in the field in this the Jubilee Year of our missionary work.

A failure to make train connection at the Union Station, this city, last Thursday, gave us the pleasure of a call from W. S. Giltner, of Eminence, Ky. He was on his way to Jacksonville, Ill., where he expected to spend the Lord's day.

David Dick is attending St. Thomas Bible College, St. Thomas, Ontario, Canada.

L. W. Mulhall, evangelist, is stirring up the town of Centralia, Ill., all the churches and pastors co-operating.

D. L. Moody is now doing evangelistic work in Denver, Col., and is expected to begin work at Colorado Springs about Dec. 7th.

C. A. Young, who is delivering a course of Bible lectures at the University of Virginia, has been compelled to omit his Sunday work among the churches for a time, on account of ill health. This will account for the non-appearance of his letter.

W. W. Sniff, Gibson City, Ill., is in a very successful meeting with his congregation there, and Bro. Ferrall, of Watseka, is singing for them. There were 25 additions at last report.

J. B. Lehman and wife, of the Southern Christian Institute, Edwards, Miss., who have been refugees from the yellow fever for several weeks, have been visiting Bro. and Sister Sniff, at Gibson City, Ill. Mrs. Sniff and Mrs. Lehman are sisters. Bro. L. and wife returned to their work last week.

H. H. Peters has been unanimously called by the church at Rantoul Ill. for another year.

J. W. Lowber is delivering his fourth course of lectures at Grayson College, one of the affiliated colleges of the University of Texas.

Wallace Brockman, of Jacksonville, Ill., was recently married to Miss Fannie B. Kennedy, at Waverly, Ill., by Geo. L. Snively, pastor of the church at Jacksonville. They will reside at Jacksonville.

G. C. Ardrey has received a unanimous call from the church at Burton, Kan., for the third year of service there.

A. P. Cobb's permanent address is Decatur, I.

J. A. L. Romig has gone to Liverpool, England. He is to spend six months in evangelistic work among our English brethren.

M. P. Hayden, of Eureka, Ill., now engaged in evangelistic work, desires to locate as pastor of a church. He can begin work with the new year. Correspondence is solicited from churches seeking a pastor. Address as above.

Wm. Stanley has resigned his work as pastor of the church at Glasgow, Ky., and would like to locate with some church in Missouri or Texas. Bro. Stanley is a man of deep piety and ripe scholarship and leaves the church at Glasgow with its prayers and best wishes. Here is an opportunity for some church to secure an efficient preacher.

M. P. Hayden, of Eureka, Ill., has a highly commended lecture on "Phases of Physical Healing," which he is delivering wherever desired.

M. L. Anthony, since taking the work at Elkhart, Ill., has succeeded in stirring the church up in such a way that they have built a nice parsonage and made many other moves forward. They are now enjoying a good meeting with A. O. Hunsaker assisting in song.

F. N. Calvin has gone from Waco, Texas, to Milwaukee, Wis., instead of Kankakee, Ill., as stated in this column last week. He has accepted a temporary call at Milwaukee to begin December 1st.

M. Ingels, of Kansas, and L. O. Routh, of Missouri, have united for evangelistic work. They will make a str ng gospel team. They are now at Fontana, Kan., and where also they may be addressed by other churches wanting a protracted meeting.

W. G. Smith has closed a successful pastorate of two years at New Castle, Ind., during which there were 74 additions. All the different activities of the church are reported greatly enlarged and his ministry. A fine report of his work was published in New Castle Press.

Thos. E. Jones, the evangelistic singer, who has been spending a little time in New York, under a distinguished vocal teacher, has returned to Chicago, and is ready once more to enter the evangelistic field. Bro. Jones is undoubtedly a singer of great power as well as a sincere, earn st Christian. He may be addressed care Christian Oracle, 358 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

C. H. Trout has resigned his work at Mishawaka, Ind., on account of the financial condition of the church. During the past year there were 21 additions. Bro. Trout now desires correspondence with any church in need of a pastor. He leaves Mishawka with the good will of the church and commendation of its official board.

Elder George F. Assister, who has been acting as a supply pastor for the Christian Church at Chillicothe, Mo., for a number of months past, and who was on last Sunday called to the pastorate for the ensuing year, has announced his declination of the call and submitted his resignation, to take effect Dec. 21. At what point he will locate Elder Assister is not aware. He is a preacher of much ability as well as a careful, painstaking pastor, and is well calculated to do good work for the church whose call may prove acceptable to him.—Chillicothe Daily Mail.

G. W. Muckley has been on a trip out West and secured more than $500 for Church Extension on the church at Colorado Springs.

A. McLean has returned from a visit to Havana, Cuba, whither he went to look over the field with a view to m ssionary work in that city. The field seems ripe for Protestant missionaries, and especially those who will declare the pure, simple gospel of Christ.

CHANGES.

H. C. Shipley, Ionia to Jewell City, Kan.
R. Watson, Lebanon to Salem, Mo.

CAN I LOVE MY ENEMIES?

N. J. AYLSWORTH.

IV.

Our feelings are subject to a law of their own. We cannot love and hate at will. No command, even from heaven, can cause us to admire what is disgusting and loathsome. No command and no act of will can make beauty repulsive. It is a law of our nature that we shall love what is lovely and hate what is hateful. How, then, can we love an enemy whose conduct toward us is hateful? It does not seem unnatural that we should love our brethren. The mutual love of Christians resembles that of the family, and we can understand it. Why should not those having the same aim in life, the same hopes, the same Father, and possessing in various degrees the beauty of the Christian character, love each other? Nor does it seem strange that we should be moved by spectacles of suffering or feel a sympathy for the downtrodden and oppressed. Such things appeal to our pity, and in proportion to our tenderness of heart we are moved by them. That we should feel some sympathy for a brave enemy in war who has never borne us any ill-will, and whose gallantry challenges our admiration, seems possible. Is it not also possible to understand the compassion for the criminal, whose lot is so hard, and who, though an enemy to society, has never done us personally any wrong? And, under the quickening influence of Christianity, is it surprising that all these sympathies should grow very strong and fill life with the beauty of their ministries? But how can all this help us to love a personal enemy who stands before us in his hatefulness? On what principle shall we do ought but hate him? Must not the love of such an object contravene the fundamental law of our feelings? Is it not impossible? Is there anything in the nature of the human heart which will enable it to surmount such an obstacle, and bestow its love on the offender?

There are two terms in our language which yield us a very important suggestion at this point. The unconscious philosophy of human speech is generally correct. Words embody the common perception or average judgment of mankind, and this is seldom at fault.

When a man's selfishness manifests itself in trifling exactions in deal, we say that he is "small;" that is, extreme or refined selfishness is smallness of character. If this selfishness leads the tradesman to overreach or misrepresent, we say that he is "dishonest." The smallness is still there, but the breach of honesty strikes the imagination more forcibly, and thus gives the name to the act. Take away the dishonesty, which partially obscures the other quality, and the smallness stands out clearly to view. Extreme selfishness, as it manifests itself in deal, is seen by us to be smallness.

The smallness of selfishness will become still more apparent if we consider another term. If a man deals handsomely with his fellows; if he is slow to take offense, and overlooks many of the slights and injuries of others, and continues to bestow upon them kindness out of the abundance of his good-will, we say he is "magnanimous." This term is derived from the Latin words magnus, meaning great or large, and animus, mind. Magnanimous, therefore, means large-minded. Webster defines it as "great of mind." An abounding good-will, which flows out to all and is not turned aside by many of the little meannesses of men, we perceive to be large-mindedness. But this good-will, this benevolence, is but one of the degrees of that love of which we are speaking—the love of mankind. Love is largeness and selfishness is smallness of character. This is an intuitive perception of mankind, and has left its deposit in language. Webster defines magnanimous affirmatively as "great of mind," and negatively as "not selfish." Great-mindness is the opposite of selfishness; selfishness is smallness.

This has an important bearing on the question of resentment and retaliation. If, when passing on the street, a little dog runs out and barks and snaps at your feet, you do not get down on all fours and bark and snap at him! You do not feel like doing so. Yet this would be retaliation in kind. You do not feel like retaliating because you are a man, and your character is larger than the cur character, and you instictively feel that it would be beneath you. Your dignity and largeness of feeling stand in the way; and you snap your finger at the dog and call him pet names, and he trots along at your side pacified. This is what you do, and what you feel like doing. You feel above resentment; and because the cur has acted like a dog to you, you do not feel that you can afford to descend to his level and act like a dog to him. But you can afford to do this quite as well as you can afford to descend to the level of some small-minded person who, with the spirit of a cur, has said or done something mean to you, that you may say or do something mean in return. You cannot do this without first descending from your high-heartedness and getting his mean spirit.

There is a tendency for every spirit to beget its own likeness—for the angry word to call forth the angry word, and the hateful act to provoke a hateful act in return—but if you are to be a victim to all such influences your character is of very small proportions. A leaf may dam a rivulet, but not the mighty river. It causes scarcely a ripple on its surface, and then is borne along by the majesty of the flood. If the flow of your heart-life be large, deep and strong, the thousand little meannesses which you encounter in life will not turn it aside. Its magnificent good-will will override them, and you will feel that you cannot except from your benevolence those who are guilty. You will rather be moved to pity this littleness, and seek to lift them above it, than stoop to this level to retaliate.

Wherever we look we behold this actually taking place. The noble in character are ever moving above the littlenesses and meannesses of the small-hearted about them, and by reason of their very largeness, refusing to descend to the retaliations of life, are shedding their good-will like God's rain and sunshine on all. Wherever we find nobleness of character we find this tendency operating.

And here again, we reach the important truth that it is natural to love our enemies. This behavior of the noble-hearted is spontaneous. It would be contrary to their feelings to do otherwise. They scorn to be little. Resentment may be said to be natural to small, low nations; but surely these are not entitled to a monopoly of human nature. It is natural for the magnanimous—the large-hearted—to be unaffected by the entire brood of little hates and spites, and even to be drawn to those who harbor them by a pitying sympathy. Whether it be natural to hate or to love one's enemies is a question of smallness or largeness of character. As it is natural for small people to do small things and for great men to do great things; so is it natural for the small-hearted to resent and hate, and the great-hearted to bless and seek to benefit out of the abundance of their good-will. Tennyson speaks of "the little hearts that know not how to forgive." He who claims that one cannot love those who wrong him makes a humiliating confession, and reveals that he lacks experience in the higher manhood. In demanding that we shall love our enemies Christ is but calling us out of childhood into the manhood of the human heart. His command calls for nothing extra human nature.

There may be a personal wrong so great and so aggravating as to stagger even a large noble-heartedness, and love's way of mastering in such a case will be considered in another place, but magnanimity or largeness of character—which all the forces of Christianity tend to foster—completely disposes of all the petty hates and resentments so common in the social relations of life.

Another fact which here comes into view is that the love of enemies is not a different affection from that by which we love our brethren, compassionate the suffering or seek to rescue the fallen. It calls for no new faculty, nor even for a different exercise of the same faculty; it is the same love triumphing over difficulties. He who loves his brethren with any considerable degree of strength has learned to love his enemies; and he who finds himself—like the the small-hearted about him—harboring grudges, feeling small resentments and engaging in little acts of retaliation, may well ask his heart some searching questions, and will then be likely to make an important discovery. He will find that his love, even toward his brethren, is partial; and this is a matter of great moment. For certain of his brethren whose stations in life correspond with his own, whose tastes and manners are congenial and pleasing, and whose society is enjoyable, he feels an attachment; but towards the rest he is indifferent. This is not brotherly love, but only the love of such brethren as please him, and is founded on characteristics quite other than that of brotherhood. Such love is little more than a form of selfishness. If we are drawn to others only in so far as they please us and minister to our enjoyment, our love moves wholly within the sphere of the selfish. This is a love which may be found in even the wickedest and most abjectly selfish of mankind. This mere love of complacency is not brotherly love. Take a brother to your heart and into your society who is poor, ungainly in manner, ignorant, and who not only possesses no attractions of person or station, but has many trying and annoying faults to be overcome, and you have passed into another region. The love that does this is generous and self-bestowing in its nature; and such love, if it be strong, can surmount still another obstacle—resentment. He who is learning to love his brethren is learning the lesson of all noble love, including that of the enemy. The river which flows peacefully between its banks will also leap a barrier and form the cataract. The same forces which cause the one accomplish the other. If love in its gentle flow encounters a personal wrong or an act of hatred it receives a shock. There is commotion and a conflict of feeling, and perhaps a dash of resentment, but at last the rising tide of generous emotion rolls over it. It is love's Niagara. Such a flood was David's grief for Absalom, his enemy. It was hatred lost in love's deep agony. But this was only because parental love is a generous, self-sacrificing affection. All generous love, in proportion to its strength, will do the same. Since that mighty-hearted affection rolled over the death-agonies of the crucifixion in the words, "Father, forgive them!" love has known many Niagaras. They are the sublimest spectacles in human history. A rainbow spans Niagara; the light of heaven shines on these.

Even a brook will sift its silver over a rock, forming a little waterfall, and no very large amount of generous affection should be sufficient to surmount the petty resentments and little meannesses of life, and go on its way loving still. All generous love is enemy-loving in its nature. Let him who finds no such tendency in his heart beware! He has yet to learn Christ's first lesson in love.

It is unfortunate that a feeling which may dwell in the heart of the most adjectly selfish should go by the name of love. But as it does so it is of vital importance that the distinction should be made broad and clear between this fruitless sentiment and that generous affection which is enemy-loving in its very nature, and without which we must lack the fundamental virtue of the Christian character. And with every one the question should be asked searchingly, Am I living in the littleness of selfishness, or are my feelings too large and high for petty resentments?

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The sessions of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church excited more than ordinary interest in our city, accustomed as it is to great gatherings. The spectacular parade on the opening day, when seventy bishops, attired in their stately robes, filed into the Epiphany Church; the distinguished appearance of the six hundred clerical and lay delegates, the brilliant debates upon the floor of the House of Deputies, the dignity and orderliness which characterized the proceedings, tended to produce an exceptional and favorable impression.

As the convention proceeded to business I was reminded of a remark made by Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, that "Christian union is in the air, it is in the thinking of men and in the deliberations of assemblies." The most important question which came before this convention was that relating to Christian unity. Rev. W. B. Huntington, of New York City, introduced the church unity amendment. After considerable discussion a substitute, proposed by Rev. J. J. Faude, of Minnesota, was adopted. This amendment to the constitution is as follows:

But the provision may be made by canon for the temporary use of other forms and directories of worship by congregations not already in union with this church who are willing to accept the spiritual oversight of the bishop of the diocese.

The purpose of this amendment, it is declared, is "to meet the case of certain congregations who, while they feel attracted to the doctrine and the form of worship of the EpiscopalChurch, and would gladly put themselves into relation with its ecclesiastical authorities are, nevertheless, not willing to accept all the forms of worship now prescribed. By allowing entire congregations to put themselves under the oversight of the bishop' it is hoped that they will gradually come to love the entire service of the church and will become in every sense members of the church."

The ultimate design is thus to unite all the Christians of this country into one great church of the American people.

The question of changing the canons of the church relating to marriage and divorce was the subject of prolonged debate. The present law of the church is that no minister shall solmnize the marriage of any person who has a divorced husband or wife still living, except in the case of the innocent party in a divorce for the cause of adultery. The committee to whom the matter had been referred proposed to omit this exception and make the marriage tie indissoluble. The convention decided by a small majority to adhere to the present canon. The question will be reopened at the next triennial convention, and it is thought that at that time the advocates of a change may triumph.

The principal event of the closing week was the unveiling of the Peace Cross on Mount St. Alban, the site of the great cathedral which is yet to be built. The cross is twenty feet high and bears the date, the arms of the diocese of Washington, and the inscription, "Jesus Christ himself being the chief cornerstone." On the other face is a sentance from the Litany, "May it please thee to give to all nations unity, peace and concord."

Many of the Protestant pulpits were placed at the disposal of the Episcopal brethren, and some of the visiting clergymen accepted the invitations and made engagements to preach on Sunday. Bishop Satterlee, however, vetoed this and ordered the engagements canceled, giving as his reason that as Episcopal pulpits could not be opened to clergymen of other denominations, it would not be proper for his brethren to speak in their pulpits. The next convention will assemble in San Francisco.

Upon Wednesday, Nov. 2, at the residence of the bride's parents, Miss Abigail Power, only child of Bro. and Sister F. D. Power, was united in marriage to Mr. J. Ernest Sparks, of Washington, D. C.

The Third church of this city has secured an option upon a valuable property in South Washington. W. J. Wright, the energetic pastor, has $5,000 available, and if he can arrange to get $2,000 in addition will purchase the property.

J. R. Maxwell, who goes from Rockville, Md., to the Third Church, Richmond, is a man of excellent gifts. He had an exceptionally fine record among the Methodists during his fifteen years of service with that people. There is no better field on the Atlantic shore than East Richmond. We shall be surprised if we do not hear some good news from that quarter in the coming months.

W. R. Watkins, a late accession to our ranks, is with J. A. Hopkins in a meeting at Jerusalem, Hartford county, Md.

I expect to help Peter Ainslie in an evangelistic effort at the Calhoun St. Church, Baltimore, for two weeks in November.

EDWARD E. BAGBY.

New York Letter.

On Saturday, Nov. 5th, at eleven o'clock in the morning, two of our sisters, Dr. Olivia A. Baldwin, of Austin, Texas, and Miss Anna Lackey, of Fayetteville, Ark., sailed from this port on the good steamship "Etruria" of the Cunard Line, for their field of labor at Deoghur, India. A number of friends from our churches in New York saw them off at their pier, giving them many well-wishes and God-speeds on their long journey and in their great work among the heathen. They both attended our prayer-meeting on Wednesday evening, Nov. 2d, when Dr. Baldwin told in most fitting terms of her work in India and of the orphanage work she will take up on her return. Her descriptions of that people's condition and great needs touched all our hearts and caused us to feel that she was indeed the messenger of Christ unto them. She strengthened us very much by telling of the beautiful Christian character and blessed influence of one orphan girl who had grown up in our home in India. When she told us her name was Fulmona, we all immediately recognized her as the one our Mission Band in the 169th Street Church adopted and supported. This voluntary report did us much good and naturally causes us to hope that Mary Willis, the one our Band has adopted and now supports, may be as faithful to Christ as was Fulmona. Miss Lackey told us in her simple, girlish style of her joy in the Lord, now that she was on her way to this great work. Her words were truly heroic. These good sisters go out under the auspices of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and will be a strong addition to their forces in that field. They expect to reach Bombay on the 9th of December.

On October 23d, Bro. G. A. Reinl and the congregation at Brockton, Mass., solemnly dedicated to the service of God their beautiful new church building. The church is located on Crescent Street, and is a two-story structure of Gothic architecture. The pulpit is arranged at the northerly end of the building, and at one side is the organ, and at either side of the pulpit small robing rooms are arranged. On the floor above is another large room which will be used for the primary department of the Bible-school. A small room is set aside there also for use as a library. The interior is finished in cypress wood and is tastefully furnished with carpets, nicely cushioned pews and a prettily draped pulpit. Everything about the building is thoroughly in keeping and it is a credit to those who have labored long and well to secure for themselves a house of worship. Bro. Roland A. Nicholas, of Worcester, preached the dedicatory sermon, and Bro. S. M. Hunt, of Springfield, raised $1,000 of the $1,600 which the church owed, leaving an indebtedness of only $600. Bros. R. H. Bolton, of Everett, and E. C. Davis, of Springfield, took part in the services. The churches at Worcester, Springfield, Taunton, Malden, Everett and New Bedford, were all represented in the services. In the afternoon ordination services were conducted, in which C. H. Everett and A. H. Barrows were set apart to the office of eldership, and J. F. Gardener and Z. F. Dunbar to that of the diaconate. It was a glorious day in the history of that noble band of Disciples of Christ at Brocton. This material prosperity represents much sacrifice and devotion on the part of Bro. C. A. Reinl and his faithful flock. May God richly bless them and may this evidence of growth inspire all New England to greater zeal for the Lord.

A course of lectures on "The Religion of Israel from the Earliest Times to the Exile" is being delivered now at Union Theological Seminary in this city, under the auspices of the American Committee for the Study of Religions. The lecturer is the Rev. Karl Budde, D. D., Professor of Hebrew and Old Testament Exegesis in the University of Strasburg. The program is an inviting one for the Bible student and is as follows: I. The Origin of the Religion of Yahweh. II. Yahweh and His Rivals. III. Priests, Prophets and Kings, the Champions of Yahweh. IV. Foreign Powers and the Written Prophecies of the Northern Kingdom. V. Similar Conflict in the Southern Kingdom. VI. Judah's Collapse and the Basis of its Re-establishment. The Committee under whose auspices these lectures are given represent a number of the leading colleges, seminaries and universities of the East, and the lectures they provide will be repeated at several of them. This is the fourth season of the Committee and also the fourth series of lectures given to the public through them. The first course was delivered by Prof. Rhyss Davids, on "Buddhism." Prof. T. K. Cheyne lectured last year. Judging from the first of Dr. Budde's lectures the course will call out no little comment from critics and religious editors. Some of his positions are new and quite fascinating.

The Triennial Episcopal General Convention at Washington faced four questions of grave importance to that community of believers. They were: (1) The proposed canon on marriage and divorce; (2) The proposition to change the name of their church; (3) The advisability of establishing missions in Roman Catholic countries; and (4) A proposition authorizing bishops to take under their care and oversight alien congregations not using in full the offices of the Prayer-book, but willing to accept the spiritual oversight of the bishop. For many years Episcopal clergymen have performed marriages for divorced parties if guiltless of the sin of adultery. This is allowable by an exception to the Church Canon. The exception to this law was the battle ground in the Washington Convention. Ultra High Churchmen wished it abolished, believing with Roman Catholics that divorce under any circumstances is un-Christian. The proposition was so loaded with amendments that its purpose was practically changed and its friends voted it down, hoping to renew it three years hence. The proposition to change the name of the church was not a new one. Its summary defeat, however, shows it is losing ground. The proposition came up in a form something like this: "To designate the Church in the Constitution as the church known in law, as the Protestant Episcopal Church," etc. This appealed to the humor of the convention and all united in laughing it off the calendar. "We look on the church as our mother," said one deputy, "but if this passes it will be our mother-in-law." A great daily of New York said editorially:

For a Church numbering less than 700,000 communicants to call itself "the American Church," as has been proposed, would look like a piece of grotesque assumption to average people not biased by ecclesiasticism, and in the opinion of some of the wisest churchmen, the ridicule that it would provoke would paralyze the growth of the Church. It is not likely that the agitation will survive many years more.

The decision to establish missions in Roman Catholic countries was a radical step. The Episcopal missions in Mexico and Brazil were strongly opposed a few years since. The Convention reaffirmed the right of the Church to enter Roman Catholic countries whenever that church proved recreant to its trust. It has gone so far as to appoint a Bishop to Brazil and has taken measures looking toward establishing Episcopal propagandism in Cuba and Porto Rico. The adoption of Dr. Huntington's proposition (number 4 above) in an amended form marks a distinct change in the aloofness which hitherto characterized that church, and doubtless is a prophecy of even more liberal measures in the future. Taken altogether, it seems the Convention was a condemnation of High Churchmanship. It will not please the sectarian dogmatist, but it looks in the direction of American progress and individual liberty.

Constantinople Letter.

On September the first Mrs. Chapman and I left Greensburg, Ind., for our chosen field of labor in the Turkish Empire. On our way to New York we visited friends and relatives in Cincinnati, Claysville, Pa., and Washington, D. C. We set sail from New York September the tenth, on the "Aller," of the North German Lloyd Steamship Line. Our ship was a fine one, with every modern comfort and convenience. When it comes to the test, it is no easy matter to say good-bye to lifelong friends and native land, but believing that duty was before us, we kept back the tears and set our hearts upon Constantinople, our future home. As we sailed out of the harbor we saw the "Indiana" and the "Brooklyn," of the United States Navy, and while we long for the the time "when war shall be no more," still we felt that for years yet God will use the United States Navy to advance the cause of liberty and humanity throughout the world. In my inner pocket I carried our certificates of citizenship of the grandest nation on earth and among our baggage were several United States flags which shall adorn our home and henceforth be doubly beautiful to us.

It was all a new experience to us upon the "briny deep," and it is needless to say the voyage was full of interest and pleasure. The sea was smooth and the weather delightful. The only thing which marred the pleasure of voyage was seasickness, which takes all the spirit out of one and makes him very humble. When a man is seasick he wants the fact to be fully appreciated, though he rarely gets the sympathy that the circumstances demand. There were but twenty-eight cabin passengers on board our steamer, as there is comparatively little travel East across the Atlantic during August and September. In our company were an Italian baron and several of New York's "four hundred." While we were satisfied in being neither of Italian royal blood nor of the "four hundred," of New York, no doubt they felt sorry for the poor missionaries, of whom there were six on board, all bound for the Turkish Empire. We became very well acquainted with the four workers of the Americhn Board, whose company we enjoyed all the way to Constantinople.

As we approached Gibraltar the sun was setting, his last rays making glorious a scene well worth crossing the Atlantic to see. On one hand was old Spain with her mountain peaks running up into the clouds, on the other hand was Africa with her rocky cliffs and in front of us was the Rock Gibraltar, a grand and impregnable fortress where floats the "Union Jack." We spent a few hours ashore in the narrow streets among strange people—Moors, Spaniards and British redcoats — speaking different languages, of which Spanish seemed to be used the most, and saw the barracks where five thousand English soldiers are stationed.

We reached Naples in ten and one-half days after leaving New York. Naples is a very interesting city to travelers. It is full of beggars and rascals. When a stranger arrives it seems that the whole city combines in one grand effort to get his last cent. I have never seen more poorly dressed, deformed and degenerate people in one city than are to be found in Naples. We were compelled to remain a week in Italy before we could get our ship from Brindisi to Constantinople, and determined to make the best use of our delay, so after visiting the excavation at Pompeii, seeing the smoke and lava issuing from Mt. Vesuvius and visiting other points of interest in and about Naples, we took the train for Rome, a distance of one hundred and fifty miles.

Modern Rome is a city of five hundred thousand inhabitants and is a much cleaner and better city than Naples. In our limited time we could make only a hasty survey of the principal places of historic interest. The grand old ruins of the ancient city walls, the Colliseum, the Forum, Cæsar's palaces, the Baths of Caracalla and the obelisks—all speak of the "Rome which sat upon her seven hills and ruled the world." We took a drive out the Appian Way and thought of how Paul came to Rome, a prisioner in chains. We were in a dungeon which is confidently claimed to be the one in which Paul was confined, and saw the church said to stand over the place where "Paul spent two years in his own hired house." But after being shown two churches, one in Naples and the other in Rome, in each of which we were told Constantine was baptized, one is inclined to become skeptical as to the authenticity of current traditions. We also visited St. Peter's, St. Paul's, the Sancta Scala and the Catacombs. After seeing people kissing a vessel said to contain the blood of a saint who died fifteen hundred years ago, or kissing the toe of a bronze statue in St. Peter's, or climbing the Sancta Scala on their knees, saying a prayer on each step, one is strengthened in his conviction that the Roman Catholic Church is a great system of idolatry and superstition, with enough of the leaven of Christianity, we hope, to save many sincere but misguided souls.

We went from Naples to Brindisi by rail, passing through thirty-six tunnels on the way. At Brindisi we boarded the "Euterpe," of the Austrian Lloyd Steamship Line, and in two days reached Piræus. Here we had nine hours in which to visit Athens, four miles distant. We saw the Museum, the Cathredal, the Atrium, the Acropolis and stood on Mars' Hill, where Paul preached to the Stoics and Epicureans.

The next day we entered the Dardanelles. Fortifications are to be seen all along this narrow channel. No one less than a Dewey could reach the Bosphorus with a fleet against a hostile foe. Early Monday morning, October the second, we reached the capital of the Turkish Empire. A dense fog obscured our vision of the city and we were filled with disappointment, for we had heard so much of the magnificent view at the approach of the city. But at exactly the right time the morning sun arose above the Asian hills and scattered the fogs, and we beheld in its greatest beauty what is said to be one of the grandest views in all the world. If I could have put this scene on canvas or written it in a poem my fame would at once have been established, but unfortunately I had no canvas and my pen and ink were packed for landing and by the time I got through the Custom House my thoughts were all turned to prose and I am yet in obsucrity. "All is not gold that glitters," we found to be true upon entering the city. The streets are narrow and dirty, and the dogs—their name is legion! We were warmly greeted and welcomed by Bro. and Sister G. N. Shishmanian, at whose home we are at the present comfortably quartered.

We have begun the study of the language, the people, customs and situation. At another time I will write of our work and the needs of the field. The Lord has been very good to us in giving us a pleasant and prosperous voyage and a safe arrival. We hope to be useful in this part of the Lord's vineyard. "Brethern, pray for us." Very fraternally,

A. L. CHAPMAN.

Our School Problem.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—Permit me through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, to say a few words, in regard to the question which is now engaging the minds of many of our brethren, viz., schools, or higher education. I have been surprised at the spirit manifested by some in this matter. We as a people stand for union and unity. In theory we oppose all sects, while in practice we are divided among ourselves, and some are exceedingly sectarian. In the consideration of this important question we are not willing to lay aside personal interest and prejudice, but with the spirit of an iconoclast we set about to destroy whatever seems to conflict with our cherished theory or institution, and often in our attacks we make assertions which appear absurd to those who are acquainted with the facts in the case. No man ever accomplished a great work by tearing down a work of the same nature. Jealous divisions and bitter speeches are no less harmful in the educational world than in the purely religious. Now would it not be better to contemplate this question from a financial, intellectual and Christian standpoint, considering first of all the cause of Christ in its broad and most comprehensive sense? The field of the ministry offers the greatest opportunities, and we need men in that field who are equal to them. Goodness is absolutely necessary to be a true minister, but the time has passed when goodness is regarded as the only requisite. A minister must have preparation as well as piety; he must know men as well as mercy. I am in favor of an institution that will produce and develop all these requirements, be it what or where it may.

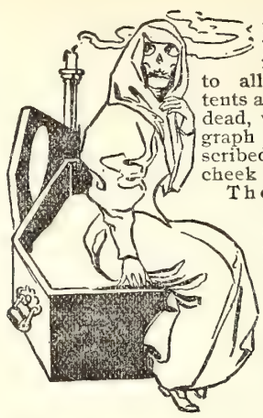
I want now to call attention to a statement which we often hear in connection with this question: "State Universities are hotbeds of infidelity; it is almost impossible to maintain faith in God in one of these institutions." In the darker days, when every man was branded an heretic who ventured an opinion contrary to the religious traditions of his father, this saying had its birth, but I am surprised to hear a man in this age make such a statement. Please pardon a bit of personal experience. I spent five years in one of these State Universities, taking the regular classical course. During that time I met no infidel professors, although I was acquainted with about forty of the instructors in that institution. Each year I met and mingled with about five hundred young men and women and I can remember only one instance of a student having his faith shaken, and that young man found the literature which shook his faith in the library of one of our best ministers. There was no "Bible Chair" in connection with the institution while I was there, but I came out with my faith in Christ Jesus strengthened. I spent one year in one of "our own schools" and can truthfully say, I found as high a standard of morality, and as much genuine reverence for God in the State University as in "our own school" (and it was one of our best). Again, if we grant that the atmosphere of our Universities is not wholly religious, does that argue that we must withdraw all religious influence from them? Did Jesus teach that we are to take men entirely out of the world and its problems in order to prepare them to preach? If these are questions which are troubling the minds of my fellowmen, is it not my duty to grapple with those questions and assist in the solution of them? Sometime, somewhere, the minister must meet these questions which are engaging men's minds. Shall he face them and master them, or shall he "look upon them and pass by on the other side?" That we ought to have a GREAT SCHOOL, richly endowed, I readily admit; that we have none I sadly affirm. What is the best thing to do under the existing circumstances? is the question we must answer. I trust this question will be thought of, agitated and prayed over until it is solved in the spirit of the Christ, and settled in that manner which will be to the supreme interest of his kingdom.

I am sincerely,

C. A.

Introductory Letter.

As State Evangelist and Superintendent of Bible-schools and Endeavor Societies of Iowa, chosen for this work at our last State Convention, I feel that a few words by way of introduction will notbe out of place at this time. My work with the East Side Church in Des Moines did not close until the first of this month. Time has scarcely been sufficient, as yet, for adjustment to my new position. I am ready now to be a helper to all the churches, by whom I have been chosen, so far as time and ability will permit. If I can serve you in locating pastors, helping you to secure an evangelist, or assist you in a meeting personally, or to aid you in adjustment of difficulties, do not hesitate to call upon me; it is for this purpose you have chosen me. This is especially the time of the year that evangelistic work should be pushed to the front. Let as many meetings be held in Iowa this winter as possible. Remember, brethren, we have more than a million souls in this state, above the age of ten years that are non-Christian. There are about 30,000 in this state that have indicated their preference to be that of the Christian Church. These people are already converted to the plea we make and should soon be brought into full fellowship with it and us. Let the motto of every church in Iowa be, "Enlargement."



This will be impossible unless you come more largely to the help of the work than you have in the past. Do not fail to respond promptly to the communications sent you by our corresponding secretary, Bro. B. S. Denny. Iowa should raise at least $5,000 this year for state work. This would be less than ten cents per member. We have very few members who are not at least able to do this much, and these are many who will give many times more than this. This leads me to say some things to the

BIBLE-SCHOOLS AND ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES.

Last year there was practically nothing given for state work from these schools and societies. This year we expect to come to you and ask for your apportionment due the state. We hope to have such a liberal response from you that next year a man may be chosen whose entire time shall be given to this work. Your superintendent is planning together with his helpers, to arrange for four special days during the year. These will serve as rally days and will be of great service in building up your schools and societies. We want that these special days shall serve to build up your home work. Bro. W. Orr, of Clarenda, Iowa, is to have special charge of the arrangement of this program. He is the great rally man of Iowa.

He is now at work on the first program. At our last convention we were instructed to ask that our schools and societies contribute to state work "two cents per quarter" for each member. If this small amount is collected from this source it will give $2,800 to be used in the enlargement of the work in Iowa. Now all we ask of you is that upon these special days you take this offering for the state work.

I want that you shall become acquainted with

Think of living a year or two after one is dead; dead to all practical intents and purposes,—dead, with the autograph of death inscribed on brow and cheek and lip.

Thousands of women live for a year or two after all helpfulness and happiness have gone out of their lives. When a woman becomes hopelessly helpless and unhappy she is practically dead. The young woman to whom the future is a dreary waste, the young wife who is a helpless, nervous invalid, the mother whose babes are a burden instead of a blessing,—all these, unless they take the right measures to recover their health, are better dead than living. In the majority of cases these ghosts of women owe their condition to weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism. Frequently they have been deceived by the incorrect diagnosis of some obscure physician and do not understand the true nature of their trouble. It only costs a two-cent postage stamp for a woman to write and describe her condition to Dr. R. V. Pierce, an eminent and skilful specialist, for thirty years chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute of Buffalo, N. Y. He will answer letters from ailing women without charge. He is the discoverer of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the greatest of all known medicines for women. It acts directly on the delicate organs concerned in maternity and makes them strong, healthy and vigorous. It banishes the indispositions of the anxious period and makes baby's coming easy and almost painless. It cures all disorders and displacements and checks exhausting drains.

"Previous to motherhood my wife was very sick," writes Dennis H. Connelly, Esq., of Clear Water, Wright Co., Minn. "Two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription made her well and strong."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure biliousness and constipation. One a dose. They never gripe.

Sister C. C. Rowlison, of Marshalltown, who was selected as superintendent of the primary work of our Bible-schools. If all the primary teachers and workers will secure a copy of "Instructions to Primary Workers" that is now being prepared by Sister Rowlison it will be of great help to them. We are expecting to have this and other helps for distribution this winter. Watch for the program which will soon be out for your first rally. Trusting that the Lord will bless you abundantly in your labors this year, while "trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength," remember that your life should be: "For Christ and the Church." D. A. WICKIZER.

Texas Letter.

Texas is just now indulging in a broad smile of pardonable pride. "Why?" you ask. The cause is a good one. At the Omaha Exposition the other day she took the prize for the best state exhibit. Is not that a good reason? Wouldn't your state smile, too, under similar circumstances? "Keep your eye on Texas."

Dallas, the Texas metropolis, is smiling, too, and why is that? Again, the cause is a good one. It is this: Within the last year she has gained about 5,000 in population, and now has 65,260 people within her corporate limits, and these limits are very small—so small that her suburbs, Oak Cliff and Fairland, are not included. "Keep your eye on Dallas."

Percy T. Carnes, after a stay of two years in New Mexico, comes back to Texas and locates at Italy, and our people are glad to have him return.

F. N. Calvin, as we feared, is to leave our state. He goes to the Far North, and takes up the work in that important city, Milwaukee, Wis. Thus we lose one of our very best men, and we want one as good in return. Calvin is systematic, energetic, polished and strong, both as pastor and preacher, and Milwaukee is to be congratulated.

B. B. Saunders has a fit closing of his work as an independent evangelist in the Terrell meeting. At this meeting there is intense interest and 30 additions, with more to follow. At the close of the meeting he takes the work of corresponding secretary of our state work.

J. W. Lowber is pushing things at Austin. The cornerstone of the new church will have been laid before this is in print. And he has been lecturing to the State University students on the first chapter of Genesis with good results.

John Ferguson has returned from Colorado, and is now at Taylor. He is ready for work either as pastor or evangelist, and our people know him too well for him to be idle very long.

J. B. Boen has received a call to the pastorate of the church at Guthrie, the capital of Oklahoma. We hope he will remain with us. He has been here so long, and has done so much work, that it would seem a little awkward to see him anywhere else. Boen is best known as an evangelist, but he is also a fine pastor.

Our meeting at the Central Church, with S. M. Martin as evangelist, is two weeks old, and seems to be steadily growing. All audiences are good, but those on Sunday are fine. His lectures on Sunday afternoons to men alone and women alone, alternately, are heard by immense crowds; and on Sunday evenings, after our 1,500 seats are filled, with many standing, hundreds are turned away.

A Bit of Dixie.

The General Christian Missionary Convention is over, and although it was even beyond the borders of our center of population, a host of Christian soldiers camped on the old battlefields of historic Chattanooga. Proverbial Tennessee hospitality was shown by our generous Chattanooga, from the mayor down to the ragged urchins, who sang out cheerily, "Times, sir; all about the convention!" We trust the convention impressed on all the ripeness of the Southern fields. Like the broad cotton plantations of Mississippi and Texas, "they are white unto the harvest." The South is a Macedonia calling for Pauls, "Come over and help us or we die."

We, the School of the Evangelists, were well represented at the convention. Our president, Dr. Johnson, and wife, together with twenty students, attended. Several have returned our call and others promised to visit the school later on. Our visitors last week were A. T. Fitts, state evangelist of South Carolina, Dr. Butchart, of China, A. F. Franklin and M. E. Dawson, of Milligan College, Tennessee, and a party of Ohioians. We hope others will visit the school if opportunity permits.

Christians who mean business and want to keep up to date are "conventionists." The progressive, push-ahead spirit permeating these gatherings gives momentum and stimulus for a year's onslought. Anti-ism begets a passiveness that at length stagnates spiritual growth. It builds about itself a Chinese wall of conservatism. It isolates itself from so many of God's blessings, placing them under the ban of "non-apostolic," that we cannot but pity such scriptural blindness. But I am off the subject.

Standing on Point Lookout, my fears kept whispering, "Lookout! Lookout!! Lookout!!!" Beneath was a precipitous fall of hundreds of feet, inviting death and destruction. We as a religious people stand on "point lookout" beneath which stretches out the kingdoms of the earth, all Christ's and ours, if we but make the strategic move; but halt! There yawns the chasm, "beware, Lookout!" One misstep may plunge us down, down, down!

Numbers of Tennessee's faithful prearhers were at the convention. Among them we remember seeing A. I. Myhr, state evangelist; J. L. Haddock, traveling evangelist; R. M. Giddens, Paris; J. P. Holmes and J. E. Stewart, Knoxville; Dr. Johnson, Kimberlin Heights; A. R. Moore, Memphis, and of course Bro. Ellis, of Nashville. Let us get ready for Cincinnati next year and make it the Convention of conventions.

OPEN PARLIAMENT ON OUR NATIONAL CONVENTIONS.

The following questions have been sent to several brethren by way of opening the discussion. If others have suggestions let them be brief, as the following are, and to the point:

While the memory of our National Conventions is fresh in your mind will you please answer in about 200 words the following questions for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

1. What changes, if any, would you suggest in the manner of conducting our conventions?

2. What suggestions have you to offer as to the Jubilee Convention?

An early reply will oblige

THE EDITOR.

In answer to your questions in regard to our National Conventions would say, first we have too many speeches and too little time for business. Change to one strong, well-prepared address for each half-day and night and give the rest of the time to the proper consideration of important business matters. Instead of giving wise and helpful direction to our national boards we are becoming ratification meetings only.

Second, let our Jubilee Convention become historic by unitizing our great missionary interests. The time has come when our state and national work should be one work; our foreign work should be our home work, the home, the foreign; the woman's work the men's work and the whole work one work. It would be a great blessing and an inspiration to our churches if we could unite all our forces and simplify our missionary machinery. Let the Jubilee Year become the beginning of this greatly desired end. G. A. HOFFMANN.

Columbia, Mo.

1. I have no suggestion as to the manner of conducting our missionary conventions.

2. As to the Jubilee Convention I have two things to suggest. One is that a whole session should be given to the business men of the convention. Not to handle new themes, however, but to handle the old themes. Let one give a business man's view of Foreign Missions, and another of Home Missions, and a third of Church Extension. Let a fourth tell how all our missionary methods may be improved, and let him criticise freely any faults in prevailing methods. In short, make up the entire program of the session from the ranks of business men, and don't let a single preacher have a word to say, even in pronouncing the benediction! It seems to me that it would be a most unique and helpful feature of the convention. The other suggestion, for the Jubilee Convention, is that two sessions (a morning and an afternoon session) be given to Christian Endeavor, and that the best Endeavor speakers and leaders in the United States, both among our own and other bodies, be engaged to speak. Make the program an irresistible enticement. Then run cheap excursions for that day on all the railroads going into Cincinnati, from 50 to 200 miles out, and get 3,000 Endeavor delegates into Music Hall. It can be done. The time is ripe for it. They can go in the morning and return in the evening. And it will be the grandest thing ever done at one of our conventions, to fill 3,000 enthusiastic Endeavorers chock full of zeal for our great work of Home and Foreign Missions. GEORGE DARSIE.

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 7.

1. Our missionary conventions have all along been so ably, wisely and I think efficiently conducted, that I am unable to see wherein they can be improved upon.

2. The Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati will be the greatest event to occur in our religious history. The officers of the American Home Missionary Society, the Foreign Missionary Society, Society of Christian Endeavor, C. W. B. M., Church Extension — all organizations should commence at once through the Christian press, by circular and otherwise to awaken a deep interest in every quarter and locality where our membership exists. This work should be reinforced by all the Christian papers, by editorials and otherwise; and all the faithful and energetic Disciples should in season and out of season busy themselves in speaking of and encouraging the membership to increase their contributions and to attend the Jubilee Convention. This should be a recurring fire and kept up constantly to the time of holding the convention; then, these things being done and others which I know will be devised and suggested, the attendance will be immense and it will be indeed the year of jubilee. Yours fraternally, F. M. DRAKE.

As to changes in next year's program:

1. Let a board be organized, composed of an equal number from the three societies, to whom shall be referred several questions which now come to the convention.

2. Let one half-day session be broken into conferences and let as many be called as the various interests among us may demand.

3. Let a part of one afternoon, say from three to six, be given to sight-seeing under proper guides, that the session may not be broken from that cause.

4. At this Jubilee Convention let the best men in the brotherhood be on the program regardless of how lately they were on. But let none be on whose voices can not be heard in music hall (let the women make note).

Plans for a large convention:

1. Take note that Cincinnati is the liveliest place among the Disciples this year. No city is doing more aggressive missionary work than we are now.

2. Push every missionary work as never before.

3. Let the campaign for souls be such that every pastor will indeed become an evangelist.

4. Organize in every city or wherever we have a goodly number of Disciples and begin a campaign for delegates for the Jubilee Convention.

5. Put a speaker on every convention program this year who is awake to the needs of a great convention next year.

6. Let all secretaries and pastors have on their letter heads "Jubilee Convention, Cincinnati, '99, Oct. 12-20. 10,000 delegates; 10,000 souls for Christ; $1,000,000 for missions" (or at least time and place of convention).

7. Let all of our papers keep it constantly before the jubilee and at some time give us a special issue devoted largely to Jubilee Convention.

Brethren, it will be a great convention. Let us all have a part in making it such.

A. M. HARVUOT.

1. I think there might be a great improvement in our conventions by making the devotional part very pronounced and thorough. Well prepared short addresses on such subjects as Prayer, The Holy Spirit, Consecration, The presence of God, Feeding on the Word, The Spirit of Missions, Waiting on God, The Love of Christ, and so on, by men and women who are themselves full of the Holy Spirit and who speak out of deep and triumphant experiences, as well as according to the Scriptures, would be exceedingly profitable and inspiring. We ought to have the sweetest and most uplifting fellowship possible with our brethren and with our Heavenly Father. The addresses might be followed by earnest and specific prayers and a few choice hymns.

2. As to the Jubilee Convention, I think we should aim to secure a very large attendance, but more particularly to so infuse into all who attend the very Spirit of Christ that great fruits will necessarily and spontaneously result. In expecting and attempting great things we must depend upon the closest and fullest communion possible with the great, gracious and wonder-working God of Missions. Special prayers for the convention ought to be offered for a week or more preceding its first session. I. J. SPENCER.

Lexington, Ky.

1. That so many interests cannot be served best in the length of time given. I think conferences on Education, Benevolence, State Missions, Evangelism S. S. and C. E. work may be treated in separate meetings by those specially interested, but at hours which will not conflict with the business sessions of the missionary societies. I think those who are members of the several associations should have seats together, and in front, during the business sessions.

2. The Jubilee Convention ought to be made an object-lesson, emphasizing the great plea of the Disciples for Christian union, and showing that the Disciples of Christ are in fullest sympathy with the efforts of all other evangelical Christians to bring the whole world to a knowledge of Christ and his salvation, and this can be done by the attendance of multitudes, the reports of large offerings and enthusiastic addresses. The program should be prepared with unusual care and the papers should call frequent attention to it during the entire year. R. MOFFETT.

Cleveland, O., Nov 5.

Complying with your request of the 3rd inst.:

1. I would like to see greater deliberation in passing on important and far-reaching measures. We cannot afford to carry things by hand-clapping, nor in any way give room for the impression that business is being "put through" without time for sober judgment.

2. I think the business ought to be so brought before the brethren as to lead them more and more to feel that these are their affairs, and that they are perfectly competent to form independent judgments as to what they want done, without any effort to formulate their policy for them.

3. I believe our next convention ought to meet in sections for much of the business, only certain features to be presented before the whole convention. If we have as large a convention as I hope to see, this is the only practicable way to handle the business.

4. I believe there ought to be a more strict ruling as to the right to vote; or else let us hold only mass meetings, and not call them conventions of constitutional bodies.

5. Let the Jubilee Convention be made big enough to shake the country.

6. Make it a memorial of the pioneers.

J. H. HARDIN.

Eureka, Ill.

As to changes in our methods, I do not feel that any radical departures are called for. May be the following considerations are of some slight worth:

1. Much of the routine work of our conventions should be done through committees and the time now given to a perfunctory consideration of certain phases of the work be devoted to edifying and inspirational discussions.

2. Some way must be found to secure a larger representation of what we are pleased to term the "laity." Conventions of preachers are not representative. Our business men must be induced to come and both on platform and on committees should have largest place. Systematic and persistent effort must be made to bring our churches as churches, and not simply our preachers, into our convention work.

3. The interests of the convention are too large ever to be sacrificed to local needs. For the present at least central places should be chosen. World-wide interests must never be offered up upon the altar of a neighborhood need.

4. May it not be that biennial rather than annual conventions would accomplish the largest good?

As to our Jubilee Convention, whatever of worth there may be in above suggestions.

Notes and News.

Any congregation desiring the services of a young student minister a part of the time at a small compensation is requested to address Box 191, Eureka, Ill.

The church at Burlington, Kan., Park C. Herbert, pastor, has issued a neat annual bulletin of its services, etc.

F. M. Phillips, of Hurricane, Ill, writes that the little band at that place is building a house of worship.

The Golden Jabileee of the Westport Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., was observed on last Sunday with appropriate and impressive services. Thos. J. Dickson, pastor. About all of the Christian preachers of Kansas City seem to have been present.

The minutes of the 19th annual convention of the Missouri C. W. B. M., held at Nevada, Sept. 27, 28, 1898, are now in pamphlet form for distribution. Address Mrs. Virginia Hedges, Cor. Sec., Warrensburg, for as many copies as you need.

Dedication.

The new church house of the Disciples of Christ at Anita, Ia., will be dedicated Nov. 19th and 20th. The dedicatory sermon will be delivered by A. M. Haggard, Osakloosa. Ministers expected to be present and assist are E. H. Votaw, J. W. Neeley, J. McCauley, Geo. Herrick, ministers of Anita, and and J. T. Spurrier, Massena; W. E. Jones, Cumberland; E. E. Kneedy, Lewis; J. C. McInerry, Exira; J. D. Corbett, Bethel, and R. V. Leeson, Audubon.

First News from Missouri Day.

E. E. Merrill sends word that Troy observed the day and took collection. Simpson Ely, closing a meeting at Mound in Shelby County, observed the day, took up a collection and sent over $2 more than apportionment. Trenton, Plattsburg, Camden Point, Pattonsburg, Linneus, Rutledge, Wyaconda, Steffensville, New Bloomfield and Boydsville have reported. Who next? Missouri missions have the right of way. T. A. ABBOTT.

A Pastor Wanted.

I can put a church in correspondence with a pastor desirous of making a change, who is well educated, of excellent ability both as a worker and speaker, and whose wife is a helpmeet indeed, being a splendid musician and soloist. They are young and able to work. Salary, $800. J. W. VANDERWOLKER,
Pastor Christian Church.

Sioux City, Ia., Nov. 11, 1898.

Dedication.

The writer was asked to dedicate the church at Mingo, Iowa, last Lord's day. The day was a beautiful one and the people came until many stood upon the outside. The brethren there number only about 30, but are full of zeal, and judging from their works their zeal has been according to knowledge. The building was one purchased from the Methodist people. Three lots were procured and the house moved upon them. It has been repainted on the inside and out, and also nicely papered. Has a seating capacity of more than 200. The money had been raised to meet all indebtedness previous to day of dedication except eight dollars. We asked the people for an offering of $50, and when the collection was taken it amounted to over $60, mostly cash.

The writer was locked out of this same building some three years ago while holding a meeting at Mingo. He was glad, however, to see the ones who were instrumental in the above at the dedicatorial services. The few brethren there are worthy of much credit for the sacrifice they have made to secure for themselves a church home. They expect to soon arrange for a series of meetings, after which they will arrange for regular preaching. Their work in securing the building has been accomplished without the aid of a minister. A consecrated people can accomplish much in the name of the Lord. D. A. WICKIZER.

Our Annual Rally.

November 6th was a great day with the church at this place. It had been set apart as the "Annual Rally Day" for the church. A pastoral letter had been sent to each member calling attention to the rally and urging an attendance. In each one of these letters a blank card was enclosed with the request that each member write his or her name thereon and bring it to the church on that day, when it would be taken up, thus enabling us to know just who were present. The attendance of the membership was the greatest it has been at a service for two years. The offering was the largest ever taken at a single service in the history of the church. We are following the rally with a meeting. Prof. C. E. Millard has charge of the music. The church and its minister are doing the preaching and praying that we may be used of God to his own glory.

A New Church at Tulip.

It was my pleasure to attend the dedicatory services of the new union church at Tulip, Monroe County, Mo., the last Sunday in October, and to preach the morning sermon and raise the money. It was my first work of this kind, but the money was all raised, and I was not sorry when the strain was over. After a short meeting I organized a church of 26 members. The Presbyterians and Methodists each have organized there. I expect to hold a short meeting for them as a present to the community and the Missouri State Board. The community is a good field for our brethren, and I expect to hear of good work done by our little band. H. A. DENTON.

Kansas District Convention.

The semi-annual district convention of the fifth district will be held at Abilene, Nov. 23-25, 1898. Let each church in the district be represented. W. S. LOWE.

Personal Benefits of the C. W. B. M.

A Christian woman should join the Auxiliary for her own sake, apart from all considerations respecting the advancement of Christ's cause at home or abroad. The benefits accruing from the Auxiliary to herself are neither few nor small. Her service in it will widen her intellectual horizon; it will deepen her spiritual life. She cannot help gaining a better knowledge of the world and its nations; she cannot help but be brought into closer fellowship with Christ. She will learn to pray in secret and in public. She will learn to write and to speak with power. There are thousands of women known to me whose lives have been enriched and ennobled by what they have done to help evangelize the world. If not a soul had been saved or helped through their efforts, the good that has come into their own lives is worth many times what it has cost them in time and thought and money. When, in addition to the cultural value of this relation, we think of the work that has been done by the missionaries, who are sustained by the Woman's Board, and the young men of the universities who have been saved from skepticism and agnosticism and materialism, it will be seen that there are sufficient reasons for uniting with the Auxiliary and working constantly and faithfully in it. The first Sunday in December should witness a great number of recruits. A. MCLEAN.

Our Report.

We closed a four years' ministry, one-fourth time, with the church at Brooking, Clinton county, Mo., yesterday. During these years of, to us, pleasant ministry, 97 were added to the little congregation. They are in sympathy with missionary work and at peace among themselves. My successor will find this a pleasant field among whole-souled and sympathetic brethren. We are now open for engagement, part time, or protracted meetings. Address me at St. Joe, Station C.

Colorado Convention.

The theme of President Grant K. Lewis was "Some Responsibilities of the Churches." Dr. B. B. Tyler spoke on "Have we a Scriptural Eldership." The subject of Elmer W. Cole's address was "The Preacher of To-day—His Opportunities." Leonard G. Thompson delivered an address on "Fishers of Men," while R. B. Preston's theme was "Beginning at Jerusalem." The evening sermon of the second day was delivered by M. L. Streator on "The Coming of the Lord." There was a large number of preachers present. These items are hastily scratched from the Pueblo Chieftain, Nov. 3rd.

Important to Ministers.

THE LAST CALL.

If you don't think that it is important that your name and proper address shall appear in the OFFICIAL list, you need be at no pains to send either name or address for publication, or the twenty-five cents to pay for the magazine. But if you wish to avoid trouble when you apply for your railroad permit for 1899, my advice is that you write me at once, as the list MUST be in the hands of Mr. Caldwell by Dec. 1. This means you.

Beloit (Kansas) Notes.

Here is a card received by Bro. O. L. Cook. Its contents give us a sample of the obstacles in the way of co-operation among our churches. From the tyranny of such men may the good Lord deliver our churches! Here is a text for a sermon on ignorance, egotism, prejudice and "bossism." We give the card verbatim, omitting name and place:

——Ks Sept 29

BRO COOK We cant hire the Bro. you sent here A good meny want him but som of us is oposed to him We dont want no preacher thats parts his hare in the midle. RULIN ELDER.

After the Willington convention the editor and his wife spent a week visiting old friends in Wichita. On Sunday, Oct. 9th, we worshiped with the Central Church and participated in the burning of the mortage that for so many years has been a burden to this congregation. The occasion was a happy one and we congratulate the church and its pastor, Bro. Dubber. May the Lord bless them and make his face to shine upon them. We feel great concern for their prosperity and happiness. Nowhere can there be found better, truer people than in the Central Church at Wichita.

Bro. Garner has returned from his trip to Kentucky. In the absence of the pastor he preached for the Beloit church, Oct. 9th. He showed his interest in the Kansas Evangelist by bringing a number of subscribers from Kentucky.

Bro. Drummond, of Smith Center, has been visiting his parents in Enid, O. T. A card just received from him says: "Have been preaching here a week. Three additions by letter and two by baptism."

Sister Hazelrigg writes from Plainville: "I will see that every family takes the paper if possisbe." W. T. HILTON.

Another Thousand Dollars.

A sister who has a deep interest in Foreign Missions, has just turned over $1,000 to the Foreign Society on the Annuity plan. She is well along in years. She will have no care about collecting interest, and will receive her annuity promptly every six months as long as she lives. We commend this plan to the friends of world-wide missions. There ought to be a number more to place money with the Society in this way. For full particulars, address F. M. RAINS, Treas.

Dedication.

Sunday, Oct. 30th the new house of worship at Shady, Johnson County, Tenn., was dedicated by the writer. There was a large attendance, dinner served on the ground, the necessary money made up and the brethren all happy in their no home. This is a small, young congregation and they are to be congratulated on their success and commended for their zeal and self-sacrificing spirit in the Lord's work. Two additions at Bristol recently. Convention at Carthage.

The fourth annual convention of the Christian churches of the Springfield district, Mo., will be held at Carthage, Nov. 28, 29 and 30, 1898. A good program has been prepared for this convention.

Come. All preachers in the district are especially requested to attend this convention.

An open parliament on the March offering will be held in connection with this convention.

W. A. OLDHAM, President.

Intensive vs. Extensive Education.

To the small college, after all, is due the credit of most successfully calling out all that is best in our young people. Intensity, thoroughness, individuality, self-reliance and self-assertion on the part of the student are the results thus best attained, while personal attention and the energizing power of the instructor in stimulating and inspiring his pupils is always best effected in small classes. The personal identity of the student is almost entirely lost in large classes where quantity rather than quality is the objective. Animals do not thrive or fare as well in large herds as they do in small companies, and students are intellectual animals, grazing in the fresh pastures of intellectual and moral achievement. This is one reason for the exceptional training and attainments of Bethany graduates. There is no shirking simply because there is no chance to shirk; no game of hide-and-go-seek with the professor, because each one is directly under his eye and has to stand the ordeal of the recitation room, where the question passes around and overtakes him much more frequently than once a week or once a fortnight. He has to run the gauntlet every day in classes large enough for such rivalry and spirit as will put him on his metal and keep his mind alert, while they are not too numerous to drown out his individuality.

There must be something in this kind of training when it produces men that are in demand to fill professorships in the foremost universities of our country, and when you can number them by the scores occupying similar positions in our own colleges and universities.

The intensive method is, in the end, bound to surpass the extensive. Men and women that can command all their abilities, and assert their best selves is what she strives to produce, and the history of Bethany's past shows how well she has succeeded. Could she do this if she were differently situated, or if she sought to be a great university in point of numbers and patronage? I doubt it. To be and to do what she has always sought to be, should still be her mission, and it is the duty of our great brotherhood to fully equip her for it. The start she has made, her history, her splendid traditions, her holy memories and her noble spirit can be reproduced in no other place or age. She is sui generis. She looks confidently to the future, as she can with satisfaction contemplate the past.

Hiram Jubilee Endowment Movement.

The great movement has started in earnest. Names are being collected as rapidly as we could hope for at this stage of the movement. About two hundred additional names appear in this week's issue and we expect these lists in the course of a few weeks to run to 500 or 1,000 per week.

One thing that we appreciate very greatly is the cordial sympathy and support that our colleges are showing. President Hopwood, of Milligan College, in Tennessee, sends us his name to be enrolled in the great Hiram army, President Coler, of the Bible Chair work in Michigan University, sends in his name, Chancellor W. Bayard Craig sends his name with words of approval, and Hiram VanKirk, of the Divinity House of Chicago, sends his name. All seems to recognize the fact that Hiram is not a rival, but simply a co-operative friend with other institutions of learning. We will reciprocate this kindly feeling in every way that we can.

E. V. ZOLLARS, President.

Hiram, O., Nov. 3, 1898.

Our Young People and the Evangelistic Campaign.

The Chattanooga Convention decided to signalize our Jubilee Year by an evangelistic movement all along the line. It seems fitting that while we are planning to increase our offerings for missions, both at home and abroad, there should be also an increase in our personal efforts to bring souls to a saving knowledge of Christ. There ought to be a deep and widespread movement to turn great multitudes to the Lord. There ought to be a great revival of genuine piety and a great deepening of the spiritual life among professed Christians. We need to learn the meaning and the joy and the power of a true consecration to Christ.

All our young people should be enlisted in this movement. Every Christian Endeavor Society should prove itself a great evangelistic force in its own community, and I call on every C. E. Society to set apart the first Lord's day in December for the prayerful consideration of this matter. Confer with pastors and church officers, with Sunday-school superintendents and teachers, concerning this matter, and invite them to attend this meeting. With the concurrence and co-operation of others, begin at once to plan for a genuine revival in your own church. Young people are especially favored as soul-winners, and so a special responsibility rests upon them in connection with this evangelistic advance. I put the bugle to my lips and blow a blast, which I hope every Christian Endeavorer among us will hear, calling them to rally and to march in the front ranks of this evangelistic forward movement.

Educatioaal Conference Tuesday, December 6th, at Moberly.

By order of the Educational Conference, held at Moberly Nov. 1st, I call the attention of the Disciples of Missouri to the fact that there will be an Educational Conference held in the Central Christian Church, Moberly, Mo., Tuesday, December 6th, at 2 P. M., 1898. Every college, church and preacher in the state is urged to realize the importance of this conference and to be present by proper representation. Our educational interests are to be considered, and if possible some definite action taken that will render our educational affairs more efficient. The convention at Nevada, in September, ordered a conference to be held at Moberly, November 1. That conference met there at the time. The attendance being small and the representation being principally from one section of Missouri, the conference ordered another conference, or a reconvening of the same, at the Central Christian Church, Moberly, Mo., Tuesday, 2 P. M., December 6, 1898. It is earnestly hoped that all parts of the state will be represented there. The representation is as follows:

1 vote to each congregation of 200 or less.
2 votes " " " 200 to 500.
3 " " " 500 or more.
2 " " college.
1 vote " Missouri preacher in attendance.

A commiitee of arrangements will announce in our papers about the entertainment.

The Dedication at Virginia.

On Oct. 30 the new church house at Virginia, Ill., was dedicated. The day was ideal, the audience immense and the services deeply impressive and inspiring. A full-page report of the services, with cut of the old house and the new house and three preachers appeared in the Virginia Gazette, Nov. 4th, from which we gather the following facts. The new house cost $8,445.65:

Through C. W. Savage the building committee reported as follows: The total cost of the building complete, with the lot, was $9,050.00. The cost of the church alone was $8,445.65. Of this sum the insurance on the burned church, the furniture, etc., saved covered $3,159.53, leaving balance to raise of $5,260.12. $2,917.97 had been raised by subscription, etc., leaving $2,368.15, the net balance yet remaining unprovided for. Judge Scofield then took charge of the services in an endeavor to raise this last sum.

The address of Judge C. J. Scofield, at the evening service, was listened to with the deepest interest by the large audience. It is spoken of by many as being one of the strongest ever delivered in the city. His thought was taken from 1 Peter 2:4, 5.

The pulpit at the morning service was occupied by the pastor, G. F. Shields, Hon. C. J. Scofield, of Carthage and Rev. J. F. Humphrey, of the Methodist Episcopal Church and Rev. A. B. Welch, of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church.

Indiana Items.

We hear that L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, is in a fine meeting in Gas City. The outlook is promising. His meetings are uniformly successful.

W. T. Brooks is conducting a successfu meeting at his home church in Ladoga. The meeting is gathering force each night, and 23 have been added; nine in one evening. C. M. Hughes, of Kentucky, leads the music.

A. M. Hootman is assisting G. W. Ford in a meeting in Poseyville. The Poseyville church is earnest and consecrated, and a good meeting is anticipated.

H. C. Patterson is doing his capable best to get the cause in Seymour in a good condition for permanent usefulness. He has been there under direction of the state board for a month and the money has been raised to purchase a good lot. A house will soon be under way and the outlook is quite assuring.

T. M. Myers, of Jeffersonville, has just closed a fine meeting during which 29 were added. He is now in a meeting in Louisville, Ky. C. C. Cline led the singing and the meeting was greatly enjoyed by the Jerffersonville people.

The Greensburg congregation has just completed the remodeling of their church and it was reopened Nov. 6th. D. R. Van Buskirk. pastor, is highly pleased with the improvements and the whole community participates with him.

The Bethany Church, Evansville, has the foundation in for a house of worship. It will be dedicated in January by State Evangelist T, J. Legg and C. R. Scoville will hold them a meeting.

The new congregation at Tennyson dedicated a new church recently and are flourishing nnder the leadership of their hard-working preacher, J. J. Jacobs, of Lake.

A new house was dedicated a few weeks ago at Velpin, Pike County. Sampson Cox is their preacher.

The fall convention closed with the meeting of the fourteenth district in the Central Church, New Albany. These conventions are invaluable as a means of cultivating the spirit of co-operation. Then, too, a three days' convention with such speakers as Henry R. Pritchard, D. R. Lucas, T. J. Legg, Mrs. S. K. Jones and the many men filling the "Indiana pulpit," can only be good for the community where the meeting is held. Long may they continue. E. B. Scoville.

Indianapolis.

A Preacher Wanted.

Bro. J. William Gorrell resigned the pastorate at Joplin, Mo., and has gone East and the congregation at Joplin is in need of a pastor, preacher and financier all in one man. The field is large, deserving a man of educational, spiritual and physical ability. With disposition he can make a mark that the passer-by will see. He can have the support of a working majority of our memberseip. We have numerous applicants for consideration, but deem it unwise to employ until we find the man we believe can make a success of our work. Failures are detrimental to both congregation and pastor. Our field is a mining city of some 20,000 people. The weekly output of lead and zinc ore is now $35,000 in Joplin alone; the entire district, $170,000 last week. Our schools are all that could be desired.

Respectfully,

J. C. Faulkender, Church Clerk.

State Mission Notes.

The report of the treasurer, T. R. Bryan, at the last board meeting, was startling. The receipts of the month from all sources were about $130 and the expenses were over $300. It does not take a graduate in mathematics to discover that at that rate we shall soon go into the hands of a reciever, if we could find one foolish enough to receive it from our hands. It is of the highest importance that the day for state missions be preached in all our churches. If you did not take it the first or the second Sundays, I want to emphasize the fact that when we have a general collection the whole month belongs to it. The month of March, Foreign Missions; May, Home Missions; June, Children's Day; September, Church Extension, and the month of November, not simply the first Lord's day, belongs to State Mission, and no other collection ought to be allowed to interfere with it. So if you have not taken your State Mission collection, take it next Lord's day take it any day, only be sure that you do take it; and if you can't take it this year in this month, then use the old month January for this purpose. One day in the year in all the churches ought to be set apart sacredly for State Missions. On that day we ought to sing, talk, pray and give for this holy cause. The need is greater to-day than ever before for pushing this work. If we could bring before you all the evidence that we hear of need, urgent need, strong crying need for enlarged contributions to this work, we are sure that you would see it in such a way as to move you to assistance as never before. Here's my hand for the greatest year's work we have ever done. "If thy heart is as my heart, give me thine hand."

I am making a tour of the churches in the north part of the state, and I thank God that in every place the brethren are giving me a cordial, hearty welcome. Trenton, Plattsburg, Camden Point, Pattonsburg and Humpherys have already been visited. At the latter place I was snowed out and have to go on to Milan. May God bless the hearts loyal and true who respond so heartily to these appeals. Remember November is State Mission month.

Yours in his name,

T. A. Abbott.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

The schools at Maryville, Tarkio, Mt. Cabanne and Mound City will introduce home departments immediately, while others are talking it up. Let us go up to Plattsburg next June with good reports of home department work.

The third Sunday in November is to be Children's Day for Home Missions, and while it was the candid judgment of your Bible-school board and last convention that one enthusiastically observed day would result in more funds for both Home and Foreign Missions, yet if you do not think so, do not forget Children's Day for Home Missions, third Sunday in November. Make it a great day.

The afternoons for Bible study under the auspices of the Bible Study Union, of St. Louis, with D. R. Dungan as leader, are seeing the large room in the Holland Building well filled with interested people. This is another indication of the growing interest in the Word of God, with a general desire to understand its teaching. No better selection for teacher could have been made.

Our evangelist, Geo. E. Prewitt, has lately had some experiences that tend to try one in a good work. At Dresden, where he went to help them reorganize their Bible-school he was advised to retrace his steps, as it was useless to undertake such a thing. At Beaman the people gave him their judgment of the situation by remaining at home.

Lexington has just secured a suitable assistant in their work, but even before he came E. M. McCausland remitted their quarterly payment to our Bible-school work, in which he is always interested and to which he always contributes.

Monroe City has grown in zeal and works, during M. J. Nicoson's stay with them, even more than in numbers. The Bible-school under J. T. Hickman is doing better than any other department of the church. The "O. T." (on time) badges are doing good work in bringing all grades more punctually, while the banner for attendance was held by a class of children just in their teens. In their offerings the school is growing, while in general deportment they are in advance of many of the larger schools in the state. One of their teachers, with his family, rides four miles and is always on time. The outlook for the work was never so bright in the history of the church. D. D. Boyle was with them in a meeting and was giving general satisfaction, as he does wherever he labors.

The cards going to our friends this week because of the emergency are made as appealing as possible, for the schools must help or the work will be seriously hindered. Will not my preaching brethren see that an arrangement is made immediately by which at least half of the pledges or apportionments are paid? You have never forsaken the work in the past and I appeal to you for the necessary help at this time. Some of the men are not paid for August, none of them for September nor October. Think of yourselves, brethren, think of your own loved ones, then ask your brethren to labor with us and offerings will come.

At Pleasant Grove, Monroe County, where many happy days' work were given with a people who loved their Master, and with whom this was my first institute, and from first to last the work and co-operation were enjoyable. In the examination on the "Land of the Book," taken from the Normal Instructor, the grades were high. Miss Alice Willis is superintendent, while her assistants were faithfully laboring to enable the school to do the best work for Christ. The only trouble at the Grove is neglect on the part of so many of the older members of the church. W. G. Surber, by ratification of the official action of the board, will be retained another year, all testifying to his efficient work. One cloud of apprehension from one of the workers of the church, a daughter of my dear old friend, J. R. Reavis, hung like a pall over every service, and our every prayer was that Israel's God would spare her to the church and home.

Rosendale, the home of our country Bible-school superintendent, Alvah Pettijohn, joins us in this work for Christ.

Louisiana, E. B. Rule superintendent, sends one half their apportionment promptly, and always will while E. J. Lampton is pastor.

Children's Day for Home Missions, third Sunday in November, ought to be a great day for the children in behalf of the gospel in the destitute parts of the United States.

F. L. Moore is giving all his time to the work at Fredericktown, with the understanding that the congregation is to allow him to help the struggling band at Marquand on the third Sunday night and the Monday night following in each month, and by this arrangement the little company at Marquand is getting stronger in numbers and faith.

The church at Dexter, years ago, met in a small one-room house, with room to spare, but now have a modern commodious building, with preaching every Lord's day, by E. E. Davidson, whose work is such that he has been called for another year.

No man in all this country is doing more gratuitous work than A. F. Holden, who labors one-half time at Charleston and one-fourth each at Marble Hill and Bertrand. Bro. Holden gave one-fonrth time last year to the church at Morley, for which he received twenty-three dollars.

Geo. F. McGee, who gives all his time to Poplar Bluff, also has arrangements by which he gives the Cedar Valley Church Sunday afternoon meetings, hoping thus to revive them again.

Eugene Burr, DeLassus, is preaching for Farmington, Silver Point, Flat River and Doe Run, much of it being a labor of love, for which God only compensates.

Reuben Taylor, Anniston, has just closed a meeting at Blodgett, organizing a congregation of twenty-four members, in a house built by others but turned over to us on the condition that our brethren would complete the same.

A. M. Harroll is giving all his time to the congregations at Piedmont and Mill Spring. But like the other watchmen of Zion in that territory he will help many of the weaker churches during his year's labors with the home churches. No class of men in the state are doing more purely mission work than the preachers of extreme South Missouri.

W. W. Harris, Cape Girardeau, also holds up the work at Jackson, the county seat, hoping sometime in the future to see the congregation self-sustaining. H. F. Davis.

TEXAS.

Ballinger.—There were two additions to our membership on the 6th, inst.; one young lady reclaimed and one made the good confession. We had large attendance at both morning and evening services. Our little church has completed a parsonage and the preacher and family will enjoy the pleasures of a nice new home. God be with you.—HENRY A. MAJOR.

KANSAS.

Pawnee Rock, Nov. 1.—Just closed a good meeting with 32 additions; 21 by confession and baptism and 11 by statement. The meeting was the result of a great spiritual awakening among our members.—CHAS. D. PURLEE, Evangelist, ELLIS PURLEE, Pastor.

Howard, Nov. 11. — Meeting closed at Cresco Wednesday evening. Ten days, 16 additions. Two confessions last night.—R. E. ROSENSTEIN.

Pawnee Rock, Nov. 1.—Just closed a good meeting with 32 additions; 21 by confession and baptism and 11 by statement. The meeting was the result of a great spiritual awakening among our members. Chas. D. Purlee, evangelist.—ELLIS PURLEE, pastor.

IOWA.

Dysart, Nov. 7.—Tabernacle meeting here is progressing nicely. Every corner was jammed and packed last night, and a good interest manifested. — WRIGHT AND MARTINDALE.

Irwin, Nov. 7.—We are in a meeting with our pastor, D. H. Bays, doing the preaching and presenting to us some most wholesome truths. Attendance large and good interest manifested. We expect the singing evangelist, Bro. Frank McVey, of Concordia, Kan., here in a few days to labor with us, and think we will have a grand meeting.—W. A. LESSENGER.

ARKANSAS.

Fayettville, Nov. 7.—There were three additions to the First Church last Sunday, one confession and two by letter.—N. M. RAGLAND.

Bald Knob, Nov. 9.—Seventeen additions, 16 baptisms at Harbor Schoolhouse three miles west of here. One-fourth the writer's time will be devoted to the cause at that place the coming year. Forty-eight young converts to be trained in the Master's service in this town and community around gives us pleasure and work.—M. A. SMITH.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 8.—Three added here since last report; one baptized and two by letter.—W. H. BAGBY.

KENTUCKY.

Stanford, Nov. 8.—There were 36 additions in our meeting, which is considered one of the best in every respect held here. We made no mistake in calling Bro. H. A. Northcutt to do the preaching, which he did most acceptably for nearly four weeks. Our success is no small compensation for missing the Chattanooga Convention.—FRANK W. ALLEN.

Stanford, Nov. 4.—We closed our meeting here last night with 37 additions. F. W. Allen is doing a fine work.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Russellville, Nov. 12.—Am in a splendid meeting here. Large audiences, deep interest. Nine accessions to date by confession. A. M. Growden, evangelist.—W. B. WRIGHT, pastor.

MISSOURI.

Canton, Nov. 5.—There have been nine added here during the month of October. The church seems to be taking on new life.—D. ERRETT.

Sheridan, Nov. 11.—Our meeting here is booming; 163 additions, six last night. T. W. Cottingham, district evangelist.—E. E. LOWE, pastor.

De Lassus, Nov. 9.—Three additions to the church at Flat River, Sunday; two from the United Brethren and one by baptism. Will begin a meeting this week.—EUGENE BURR.

Frankfort, Nov. 12.—Our meeting closed with five baptized and the church greatly blessed and edified. The preaching was begun by myself, but in a few days Bro. E. J. Lampton came to our rescue and gave us a series of grand discourses. He has few equals as a teacher of the Word. He preaches the pure gospel. For six years he has been at Louisiana and is greatly beloved by all. Jno. B. Corwine is now in a meeting there with him.—RAYTON S. BROOKS.

ILLINOIS.

Emden, Nov. 7. — Elder Evans, of Chrisman, has just closed a successful meeting at this place, resulting in 14 additions to the church, eight confessions and six reclaimed. The church was thoroughly aroused. Elder T T. Holton, pastor, assisted in the meeting. Elder Evans is a fearless expounder of the truth, and his great zeal in the cause of the Master, his great, loving heart filled with a longing desire to win souls to Christ, has won the confidence of the church at this place, and they unitedly wish him Godspeed in the great work of the ministry, and cheerfully commend him to the brethren in Christ who are in need of an evangelist. E. L. C.

Windsor, Nov. 8.—Closed a 10 days' meeting at the Smyser Church in Moultrie County last night; eight baptized and one by commendation. The church is doing excellent work under the regular ministry of W. S. Hermon, of Bethany. W. H. Waggoner, of Eureka, will follow the meeting with a Bible institute. A. H. HARRELL.

Milford, Nov. 8.—Our work is progressing nicely at this place. The church and pastor have just closed a meeting with 16 accessions to the church. Others expected to follow soon. We hope to keep up the evangelistic spirit in our work. J. B. WRIGHT.

L. H. McCoy reports "two added lately by baptism, one at Pleasant Grove and one at Golden Gate." L. H. McCoy changes from Albion, Ill., to Flora, Ill.

Peoria, Nov. 8.—Marion Stevenson, pastor of the Edwards Street Christian Church, Decatur, Ill., is assisting J. P. McKnight, pastor of the Central Christian Church of Peoria, Ill , in a meeting. The meeting is just begun, but the present interest gives promise of a good meeting. J. P. MCKNIGHT.

Blandinsville, Nov. 7.—Two more additions to the Old Bedford Church. A. R. ADAMS.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Gipsy, Nov. 7.—Fourteen additions to date in a meeting of 12 days. 12 by obed ence. Two restored. Eight at one meeting. We continue for a few days. Bro. Saum aad myself are doing the preaching.—C. E. SMITH.

INDIANA.

Franklin, Nov. 7.—Three were added yesterday. Two were buried with Christ in baptism; and one by letter.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

Crawfordsville, Nov. 7.—Fifteen confessions at Scott's Prairie. Eight confessions and seven by relation at Waynetown. Meetiug still in progress.—A. L. CRUM.

Ladoga, Nov. 5.—Our meeting here closed last night with 23 additions; 19 by confession and baptism. This makes 45 additions to our membership in 10 months' work. One recent convert was a man 84 years old.—W. T. BROOKS.

KANSAS.

Agra.—Twelve days; 34 additions to date.—WILKISON & SLACK.

We are in a fine meeting at Fontana. If you want a good meeting write us here.—INGELS & ROUTH.

Atchison, Nov. 7.—Yesterday was a great day at the First Church in this city. Overflowing audiences. The Holy One present with power. Four added by letter and two by confession of faith.—W. S. P.

The Religious World.

The Y. M. C. A. of the University of Missouri is a valuable aid to its students who have to work their way through school. A committee canvasses the town of Columbia for work in their behalf. This association, President Jesse says, has a prayer-meeting every morning just before the regular University chapel service and one every Sunday afternoon. At the beginning of the session, when students are pouring in, every train is met by members of the association to help the new students to enter without inconvenience, to secure boarding-places, and where they need it to secure work. In many institutions the new students are met by hazing parties. In the State University there is no hazing, but the new student is met by a committee of Christian gentlemen that volunteer aid in making him happy in his new home.
